"The money will not interest you for yourself. That I know. But I am counting on you to carry out my last request. I cannot think of your going on through life slaving in an office—or marrying a poor man and living in poverty. And you must remember all the things you can do for your family.

"Marry my son—and do the best you can to make a man of him. He may refuse to marry under the provisions I have laid down in my will but I do not believe he will. Doug would not know how to turn his hands to earning his own living. Besides I cannot believe he would disobey my dying request.

"Be as kind as you can to him. Show him the way to happiness. Give him a family of healthy boys and girls to fill your lives with joy. Then, when my boy is old he will bless his old Dad for being 'crazy' and willing a wife like you to him. God bless you, dear Charity, and give you the happiness you deserve."

Charity did not know how long she had sat with her head on the desk when Simmons opened the door. He spoke to her softly:

"Miss Jones."

She raised her head and he saw her face was mottled with tears. He closed the door and leaned against it. He was almost as shaken as Charity. In his thirty years of law practice he had never come in contact with such an unbelievable drama in real life.

"You know, then?" he nodded to the letter.

Charity got to her feet and leaned against the desk for support.

"Yes—" she said, her voice sounding faint and hollow. "Does—Mr. Temple know?"

Simmons nodded, and passed his hand over his forehead that dripped with perspiration.

"Yes—he knows. Will you see him now?"

Charity started. Panic seized her and she looked wildly around for a way of escape. Simmons put his hand on her arm.

"There's no use putting it off, dear girl. You two have got to meet and fight it out sometime."

Charity sank into a chair and put her hands over her eyes.

"Give me a minute or two—alone—to pull myself together."

Simmons nodded silently and went out—glad of escape. Any other girl in the world would have taken out a powder puff and rouge and repaired the damage the tears had done to her face. Charity didn't even carry cosmetics. Instead, she put her head down on the desk and prayed frantically for strength.

A moment later a soft knock came at the door. Charity stood up, leaning again on the desk for support, and spoke through dry lips:

"Come in."

In a second Charity Jones, daughter of a poor Iowa farmer, and Douglas Brockhart Temple, 3d, born a millionaire, stood face to face for the first time.

Charity saw a tall, tanned young giant with chestnut hair, which stood up, unruly and defiant as the fire that burned in his brown eyes, staring angrily at her from across the little room. She was not too stunned with the fast moving train of events to realize that she had never seen a more perfect specimen of handsome, well-groomed manhood.

"MOST BEAUTIFUL GIRLS IN THE WORLD"

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

HOW TO USE THE NEW DISHES

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. I won a twenty-eight piece set of dishes and I would like to know just what I should serve when using them? The set is of beautiful black onyx. It consists of six cups, six saucers, six small ash trays, six coasters, salt and pepper shakers, and the cream and sugar bowl.

2. What sort of glasses would you suggest getting for the coasters?

3. Would it be all right to serve sandwiches?

4. Is there a certain time of the day or evening when this set should be used?

S.

1. This set, with the addition of some plates of tea-plate size or of slightly larger size, would, I should think, be convenient to use when you are serving tea, or when you are having one table of bridge, or when you are having six people in for supper.

2. Against the black coasters white glasses would be the most effective, I think. And tumblers would probably fit best in the coasters.

3. Yes.

4. I am sure you will find many occasions in the day or evening to use this set when you are having a few guests.

BY ANY OTHER NAME

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please tell me the proper way of announcing or telling my friends that I changed my name?

N.

The best form would, I think, be to write notes to your friends, rather than making this announcement in a formal way. Your note might be worded rather like this:

Dear Bob,

I want you to know that I have changed my name, legally, and that I am now to be Robert Armstrong, instead of Robert Knowland. I hope that you approve of this new name and that you won't find the use of the new name difficult.

All good wishes to you, and I hope to see you soon.

Faithfully, and by the new name,
Robert Armstrong.

TOO, TOO SWEET!

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am having some friends in on Saturday evening, and want suggestions about the things to serve. How about tomato cocktail, ambrosia, candy, cake, nuts and coffee. Please tell me if these things go well together, and if the coffee should be served with cream in large cups, or small cups?

When could eggnog be served?

S.

Your menu, it seems to me, is very much over-balanced on the sweet side. Ambrosia... you mean the orange, grated coconut, confectioner's sugar combination, don't you?....candy, cake.... these are a terrible sweet combination. The addition of nuts makes it very rich, and eggnog would be the final touch of cloying sweetness and richness I think that it would be better, if, instead of the ambrosia, you plan to serve a salad, say a fruit salad with a simple sauce. And with this some hot rolls or biscuits, or simple sandwiches. Serve your eggnog some time before you serve your foods.

FAMILY TIES

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please tell me if this is not a mark of disrespect for my sister-in-law and to me? Our mother-in-law was buried last week. In placing us in the coaches, our husbands were seated in the coach with their father and sisters. The wives and children were put in different coaches. Later on my sister-in-law, my husband's sister, remarked that we did not belong in the family.

F.

I am sure that this arrangement was not made with any intention of disrespect or unfriendliness, and I beg you not to take it in that spirit for we must try to understand the actions and thoughts of people in this sorrowful time. And undoubtedly they thought that this was the proper arrangement, thinking only in terms of the members of their immediate family. You can, I am sure, see how this might be. But it would have been the better arrangement for the husband, the wife, and the children to have been together in the same coach.

LIBRARY CORNER

Hailed by the critics as one of the foremost books of the year, Vera Brittain's "Testament of Youth" is an intimate record of the effect of the war on an English girl's life from 1900 to 1925 and on the lives of those young people who grew up just as the war broke out. The book is one of intense feeling since it deals with such tragic experience, when those she loved most, her fiance, her brother, her friends were killed in battle. The sorrows of these years she reveals and gives a full account of her career as a V. A. D. nurse in France and Malta. Although the theme is a tragic one, the spirit of the book is one of great courage—courage in unearthing past sorrows and courage to rebuild a future out of the ruins. The author writes her story, not for its personal interest but rather that it is typical of the frustration of youth during the war years. "In no other fashion could I carry out my endeavours to put the life of an ordinary individual into its niche in contemporary history, and thus illustrate the influence of world-wide events and movements upon the personal destinies of men and women.. to challenge that too easy, too comfortable relapse into forgetfulness which is responsible for history's most grievous repetitions". "Testament of Youth" will be further powerful weapon in the war against war.

The Poet Laureante has turned to his first love, the sea, in his latest volume, "The Conway". John Masefield in writing about this training ship for officers in the Mercantile Marine, which was established in the Mersey River in 1858, has enlisted the help of "Old Conways" with whom it was possible to get in touch. The history of their ship and its children is told year by year in extracts from recollections of their own times supplemented, in its very early years, of which there are few survivors, by research through newspaper files, the ship's record as well as those of the Admiralty and the Mercantile Marine Services. This floating school for mariners, was and still is the scene of many boyish pranks on the part of cadets who are destined to be valued members of the Royal Navy. It is easy to understand Mr. John Masefield's particular fondness for this old training ship since he, himself was one of her cadets from 1891 to 1894.

Mr. Edward Arlington Robinson's flair for combining the appeal of a novel with the charm of poetry is revealed in his new narrative poem "Talifer". Concerned with the reaction of four people to an emotional crisis which affects them all, the poem is one of deep insight, of Talifer and his two loves Althea and Karen, and of that wise counsellor and friend Dr. Quick who swung the action from disaster. The poem has humour, tragedy and joy, the three ingredients which make for a successful book. K. G.

Fashion Flashes

Just grand is a new costume for informal dining. A high-necked gown of black satin has a train and is worn with a full three-quarter length cape of the satin with a silver fox collar which falls like a cowl in back. A tiny tiara hat of black satin is worn with this outfit.

Gather up trains if you don't want to trip over them. A grand evening frock of steel gray satin has a long train which can be hooked up in back, or swirled around and attached to the waist in front when not in use. The train is ruffled and lined with green satin to match the very narrow shoulder straps.

Noble ideas are again fashionable as the grand, formal mode succeeds the recent street-like evening frocks. One noble evening gown is a simple mermaid sheath with a trained skirt, all of sea-blue sequins mounted on matching net.

On ship or shore you will find use for a frock of pastel suede finished silk crepe. The bodice has surplice bands of inverted stitched tucks, and the brief sleeves are entirely knife-pleated. A band of the stitched tucked material makes the belt.

Diadems in daylight are simulated by some of the new hats. The upturned brim of a small, silk-straw sailor hat is anchored to a head-encircling band made of braided velvet chosen to exactly match the color of your hair.

Go ashore wearing a smart costume consisting of a long coat and wrap-around skirt in beige and cream cotton tweed. The blouse is of brown linen with a monogram done in light brown wool.

RUMOR FAIRBANKS TO WED LADY ASHLEY

LORD ASHLEY LADY ASHLEY DOUG FAIRBANKS

Douglas Fairbanks, estranged husband of Mary Pickford, and noted American screen star, is named as co-respondent in a suit filed in London by Lord Ashley, heir of the Earl of Shaftesbury, against his wife, Lady Ashley. Sealed copies of the petition have been served on both Fairbanks and Lady Ashley who is the former Sylvia Hawkes, famous British stage star. It is rumored that Fairbanks and Lady Ashley will not protest the action, but intend to marry as soon as each has secured divorce.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

Thinks He Isn't Handsome

Dear Miss Fairfax:

The other night I read in your column a letter from two girls, signed "Too Popular for Comfort." They wrote of being hounded almost to death by two boys who were crazy about them. In your answer you told them that boys are sensitive and pick up quickly the feeling that they aren't wanted.

That's absolutely true in my case, Miss Fairfax. I'm 22 and not good-looking, and am too sensitive to make friends with girls because I imagine they don't like me on account of my being homely.

I think when a girl turns down a man she should do it kindly, and not in the brutal manner these two girls describe.

Jack

I'm afraid you lead too ingrowing a life, my dear Jack, and dwell too much upon the fact that you aren't handsome. I could fill this column with the names of positively ugly-looking men who have had the greatest imaginable success with women. Forget all about not being good-looking; make all the new friends you can among girls and boys, and try to be less distrustful of yourself and your powers of pleasing.

Has Never Asked Her for a Date

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am considered good-looking, and I don't drink, smoke or even chew gum. I don't use much makeup, because I do not need it. I have liked a certain boy for the past six months, yet he has never asked me for a date. Whether this is owing to bashfulness, or that he just doesn't know I'm aching for a date, is beyond me.

If I go out with another boy, he doesn't like it. He wants to know where I went and if I like the boy. I don't like any of these boys I go out with as well as the one who never dates me. Should I drop him, or wait and see if he ever intends to offer me a date"

Mary W.

A young correspondent of mine, confronted with the same problem as yourself, said to the boy who never took her anywhere, when he became angry because she went out with a friend: "Well, you never offer to take me anywhere," and he took the hint.

But, I'd go a little slow in hinting about dates, because so often young, unemployed boys have really no money to spend. To suggest dates, when dates are out of the question, only hurts them.

Loves Her, But Won't Learn to Read or Write

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am an American girl of 20 employed in business, and about a year ago becanme acquainted with a foreigner who is ten years older than I am. While he has been in this country a long time, he cannot read or write any language.

A few months ago I urged him to attend night school, but he said he didn't think education was as necessary for men as for girls. Although I'm not deeply in love with him, he is very kind and says he loves me very much.

Do you think it would be well for me to continue this friendship or not?

Puzzled.

When that poor fellow told you education wasn't as necessary for men as for girls, he was just whistling to keep up his courage. If you have any idea of marrying him, better insist that he learn how to read and write, as it would be highly embarrassing for a girl in your position to marry a man who could do neither.

And, as it's part of the New Deal, to see that every citizen has an education, free classes being held all over the country for that purpose, why not insist upon his joining one of them and acquiring at least a little general education?

Her Girl Friend Made Trouble

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have known a certain boy all my life. He is 21 and I am 19 I really like him very much, but he seems to care for me only as a friend. Last spring something happened between us. He thought I was two-timing him, which I can truthfully say I was not. It so happened that my girl friend was with us that evening, and she caused this trouble.

Since then he hasn't spoken a word to me. I see him every Sunday, because we both go to the same church. Several weeks ago I sent him a note telling him I was sorry about things, but he has not answered it yet or spoken to me at all.

Wondering.

If you've written a letter which he hasn't answered, and he still refuses to speak, I don't know that there is very much you can do, unless you wait until he gets over his "mad fit." If your girl friend really made the trouble between you, as a good sport I think she should patch up the difficulty.

Shall He Wait Till She Drops Rival Again?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a junior in high school, and I have gone with a certain girl since we were "kids." We got along swell until she moved from the home where she lived when I first knew her. About two weeks after she moved away she began to treat me kind of cool, and we broke up. This lasted for four months, and then she told me she couldn't be happy without me.

We went together again, until she dropped me again for the boy who had caused our separation in the first place.

Miss Fairfax, I'd like to know whether you think I should forget about this girl, or shall I wait until she gets tired of this other boy again?

Student.

A girl who is "on and off", the way you describe this one as being, is all the better for a good dose of indifference, and you should look about and enjoy yourself with any girl who happens to interest you. With some ladies it doesn't pay to be too devoted. They appreciate you more when they see you're popular with other girls.

A Question of Ages

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 20 years old, and in a couple of weeks I will be 21. The boy friend, with whom I go quite steadily, told me he was 20 years old, but on his last birthday, I discovered he was only 19. Should I tell him I know he is younger, or should I let it go at that? I believe he told me he is older, because 20 and 21 don't sound as badly as 21 and 19 do.

I love him very much; the question of this difference in ages is the only thing which worries me. He seems to have more sense, and has been better raised, than many men of 25 or 26. What do you think of this difference in ages?

Susan.

If there were 10 or 12 years difference in your ages, my dear Susan, you might have something to worry over, but a year is no difference at all. And as you tell me this young man is as steady as many men of 25 or 26, why give it a moment's thought. My best wishes to you both.

Beauty . . . . By Helen Jameson

Movie stars show which way the hair styles blow. Jean Harlow had some of her silvery-golden mane snipped off. Mary Pickford hung to her pigtail material until the cows came home, then had to join up with the gals who sport abbreviated locks. It may continue to be a matter of grow-again-cut-again, but at the present time the sassy ones haven't so much as a stray fuzzer dangling below the nape line.

Sweeties of the screen have to look young and pretty. They set the coiffure styles. Yes, yes, we hear rumors from Paris that this is that and all the rest of it, but we all know that feminine movie fans have eyes glued on the hair arrangements of their favorites, then run home and play the game of copy cat. Paris is far, far away these days. What you read about isn't as impressive as what you see. And more and more celluloid ladies are chopping off their frizz-locks.

There's a reason. You can't make rosebud curls out of long strands and even if you can, they're bound to go plop. It's a long tiresome job for the hairdresser. So Charles or Emily, thinking of the calloused spots on their fingers due to rolling up rag tags and bobtails, suggests that an inch or two off will be better, more chic. Makes the cash customer think of cutting off the little dog's tail an inch at a time. So she says "Aw' right" and the old mop is on the up and up.

Millinery exerts a subtle influence over the fashionable coiffure. The peanut hat is altogether too piquant perched atop a mass of flowing, fluttering tresses. With no crowns worth mentioning there's no storage place for excess hirsute baggage. The top of the head stays smooth, so smooth that the hair might be painted on. If waved at all, too quaint these days, rousing in the minds of the middle-aged sisters a memory of pompadours, switches, figure eights and all the funny old-time head padding.

The bob as it flourishes at the present moment is a distinctly feminine arrangement. It comes in many varieties—side parts, middle parts, partings that curve and zigzag. It may or may not flaunt a bang. That's your own business.

Tricky stuff is at the back. There you have a problem, the solving of which costs money right along. Lovely ringlets are sweet when they come fresh from the finger wave. Keeping them silky, in order, neat and trim is no job if you don't mind dislocating your shoulder. Marvelous how a girl can do her back hair with no eyes other than her clever finger tips.

Hair ornaments are exciting. If you would be truly Edwardian you will wear a rose in your hair. Doesn't seem possible that the sophisticated young lady of these days could become so naive, but fact is fact. She's acting that way too, haven't you noticed? Oh, yes, girls live up to their clothes, and clothes are coy and romantic. A fishtail on her evening robe and a rose in her hair! Land's sake forevermore, it do beat all!

"It's funny, Molly — Peggy's always loved the ride before. But she's been acting just this way for a whole week!"

"She's not hungry either. I've found, Nan, that these symptoms mean it's time for a laxative. Give Peggy Castoria tonight."

"We want to report that Peggy's fine today — a perfect lamb! We both can't thank you enough for suggesting Castoria."

"A good laxative was all the child needed, Nan. And Castoria is made especially for children. It's the best first-aid treatment for a cold that I know, too. And children never mind taking it because it tastes so good. Then, it hasn't any of the strong drugs in it that make some grown-up laxatives so unpleasant, and sometimes so harmful for children to take."

Bing Crosby, as leading man, contributes greatly to the enjoyment of the program with his fine songs and personality. The spectacular musical ensembles in this play have never been equalled.

"It's a Boy"

Coming to the Capitol Monday is a feast of hearty fun and gay laughter in "It's a Boy", said to be the laughing sensation of the season. Leslie Henson proves his claim to leading comedian position and is ably supported by Edward Everett Horton, whose portraiture of a bridegroom haunted by a spectre of the past, is admirably painted. Albert Burdon, Alfred Drayton and Wendy Barrie are also notable in a picture giving really good entertainment. This comedy is a genuine blues chaser.

Monday and Tuesday are Gift Nights for the ladies.

Starting Wednesday, Merchants' Thrift Nights will be inaugurated, something new which will be fully explained in display advertisements.

AT THE BELLE
4 Marx Brothers

Raquel Torres and Louis Calhern, featured with the Four Marx Brothers in the new Paramount picture, "Duck Soup" now showing at the Belle Theatre, like to work with comedians.

Miss Torres, who plays the siren-spy working against Groucho in this picture was with Wheeler and Woolsey in "So This is Africa," while Calhern was a villain for the same team in "Diplomaniacs." In "Duck Soup," he plays the "menace" role.

"Duck Soup" presents the Marx Brothers in an entirely new setting. Having exhausted the humorous possibilities in Florida real estate, Long Island society, gangland and college they have turned to mythical republic for their side-splitting gags. Freedonia, peace-loving country, is being incited to war by Calhern, ambassador to the neighboring country. He wants to buy the place and starts Freedonians fighting so that he can take it easily. But he doesn't count on the dictator, Rufus T. Firefly, played by Groucho.

Chico and Harpo, spies for Calhern, take sides with Groucho — sometimes. Torres tries to vamp the dictator, but with no results. Finally Groucho sees that the only way out is to declare war. Sad at the thought that his army has 7500 men and the enemy has only 2500, he sends 2500 of his men over to the other side, so things will be more even.

Gag After Gag

Particular highlights that caught the fancy of the writer were a scene in which Harpo smashes a mirror, and then acts as Groucho's image; the scene in which Chico is on trial as a spy; the Freedonian army marching to war to the strains of "She'll be Comin' 'Round the Mountain"; a hilarious sequence between Chico and Harpo, disguised as peanut vendors, and Edward Kennedy; and Harpo's wild "Paul Revere" ride through the countryside.

The Marxmen work at top speed in their newest comedy, and are assisted by a cast of famed funmakers, and a host a pretty girls who assist in the tuneful song hits introduced in "Duck Soup."

Excellent Shorts

A special extra attraction on the same program is "Itchy Scratchy" revealing the amusing antics of a dog and a bear, this novel and refreshing screen treat of the great Northwest abounds in laughs, human interest and scenic splendor. Belle News and a Radio Revue will also be shown.

BUTTER, EGGS HIGHER PRICE

Market Sparsely Attended Due to Continued Cold Weather

It was a late gathering of vendors that catered to the city housewives at the Belleville market Saturday morning, at 9.30 o'clock there were only some thirty purveyors at the tables of the inside market, and as late as 10.45 o'clock country folk were still arriving. The outside market was given over almost entirely to the rural butchers, but a few market gardeners who have a steady custom were present with their commodities in heated vans. Hay sold at $14 and $15 a ton, and a fair supply of wood was disposed of at prices which prevailed Saturday last.

Butter, Eggs, Higher

Demand for eggs in Montreal and other city markets, and the severity of the weather have advanced the price of eggs steadily since the first of the present week, and the advance was noticeably reflected on Belleville's market this forenoon. Eggs were uniformly 8 cents a dozen more today than a week ago; 35 cents was the price asked and paid today. Buyers in quantity were paying 32 and 33 cents. A fairly good supply was on sale.

Butter also advanced this morning, the price asked was 30 cents a pound. A few vendors still sold at two pounds for 55 cents. Today's price was uniformly two and half cent a pound over that of Saturday last. More butter was for sale Saturday than has been on the local market for some time.

Chickens demanded from 45 cents to 90 cents each with a 5 cents difference in prices in that range. Fowl from 55 cents to $1.25 each. No ducks were offered and several geese at $1.25 each.

The week of such severe weather as experienced in this district had its reflection in this city's week-end market in both attendance and prices.

FINANCIAL MARKETS
NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Feb. 10.—After an early light sag over the board prices firmed and closed strong in the mining section of the Toronto Stock Exchange today. The main recession appeared in International Nickel and some of the big gold shares, these receding under the influence of a drop on the New York Board.

Dome worked back to 35 cents to $35 but Hollinger, and McIntyre fully recovered closing at $13.75 and $40.50 respectively. Teck closed unchanged at $5.95, Wright Hargreaves lost 10 cents to $7.15 and Bralorne a few cents. Secondary gold shares continued firm or slightly down.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 10.—(CP)— The Industrial section of the Toronto Stock Exchange worked through a little urgent selling in the first hour today and prices sagged pretty well over the board but this condition was largely righted when new buying came into the market. Inter-listed shares which had weakened with the New York Board, turned up and erased most of the losses.

In the Distillery Group Walkers common hit 45 1-2 before recovering to close at 46 3-4 for a net loss of 3-4. Industrial Alcohol closed unchanged at 16 and Distillers Seagram 1-4 up at 21 1-2. Ford A. was a feature of the session, swinging down early to 22, it soon gained momentum on the up side and closed at 24 1-4, up more than a point net. Nickel halved its loss, recovering to $22.40. Brazilian had a narrow net gain and C.P.R. finished unchanged.

NEW YORK CLOSE

NEW YORK, Feb. 10.—(AP) — Washington clouds overshadowed the stock market today and most categories, led by Aircraft issues, shrunk perceptibly before support appeared for leading equities. Metals and some specialties turned early losses of 1 to 3 or more points into gains in the final hour and several other groups cancelled or pared their declines.

The close was irregular. Transfers approximated 2,300,000 shares.

HEAR SPLENDID TRAVEL LECTURE

Under the [illegible] Aid of St. Andrew's Church, an interesting [illegible] representatives of the C.P.R. was enjoyed by a large crowd in the church hall, last evening. Mr. Payne and Mr. Keyes were in charge and the lecture took hearers on a delightful trip to the Old Land. A musical setting was provided, Mr. Keyes presiding at the piano and the audience joining in the singing of English, Scottish and Irish songs. Those who attended the lecture expressed great pleasure in the evening's entertainment.

KROCH WINNER OF 500 METRE RACE

Dohertys Blank Trenton in First Playoff Game of Group Semi-Final Series

Score 7-0 And Lead Should be Sufficient to Win Round

COVERT STARS

Buskard in Goal Also Displays Plenty of Ability

Completely outclassing their rivals in all departments the Belleville D. A.C. intermediates staged a sensational third period rally that left the fans astounded when they swept over the Trenton intermediates to swamp them 7-0 in the first game of the intermediate O.H.A. Group 2 semi-finals at the Belleville Arena before some 800 fans last night. The locals take that 7 goal lead to Trenton Monday night for the return game, with the team winning the round meeting the Campbellford Maroons for the group honors.

Continuing to improve as the game progressed the locals outscored, out-generalled and outplayed their rivals in a free scoring game that left the Trenton club and their followers completely bewildered. The honors of the evening were split between Roy Covert and Rube Buskard with both standing out. Buskard, after years of O.H.A. playing, realized his life's ambition last evening when he kept the Trenton club off the score sheet, while Covert was the craftiest player on the ice. The manner in which the diminutive centre ghosted about was a treat, while the miraculous saves of Buskard, when pressed, left the fans breathless. The defence set up by Rigby, Ethier and Weir also proved a tower of strength towards the whitewashing, and the back checking of the forwards held the Trenton line men at bay.

Connors Newcomer

Coach L'Heureux trotted out his same old proven pucksters with one new addition, Jack Connors who replaced St. Denis on the second line and made a decided hit with the fans. The line of Covert, Carl Morgan and Pete Morgan carried too much experience for their rivals. The second line surprised in the manner in which they assumed the offensive. Connors, fitted in perfectly with McGuire and H. Morgan to add a new threat to the local's scoring punch. At that Connors was a sick man and should not have been in uniform.

For the losers Gould, in the nets, again stood out with his many saves and but for his good work the score would have been much larger. York by far overshadowed the remainder of the Trenton club with Johnson and Powers looking the best of the forwards. Burley, their new forward from Wellington, seemed lost on the large ice surface. Miller was the best of the alternates. In fairness to the Trenton club it must be remembered that they had just previously played two hard games with the Cobourg Waverleys and were a tired lot.

The Play

On the keenest sheet of ice seen in many seasons play raged fast and furious in the first frame with no score, although Belleville carried a slight edge. Both goalies were at their best. Belleville opened the second period on the offensive and after many attempts opened the scoring when Covert whipped home a goal on C. Morgan's pass. York all but scored when Buskard saved and the former crashed into the Belleville goal post for a minor injury. Following a power play and a scramble around the Trenton net Covert shot the puck after Alex. Weir had given him the passout. The kid line looked good and Trenton were on the offensive when the period ended.

The final period was the most exciting ever staged in Belleville Arena. Belleville started on the offensive and never quit; they carried the visitors off their feet. Play was for the most part in the Trenton end with five Belleville players frequently inside the blue line. Five goals were scored. Pete Morgan on a nice pass from Carl, to be followed by the nicest goal of the night shortly after. A three man combination play by Connors, McGuire and H. Morgan with Jimmie McGuire bulging the twine. The next goal was a nice one also. Covert tested Gould the puck going to the corner. Covert took it away from Smith and fired again, and again missed, and going behind the net he took the disc away from two Trenton players, but this time he was not fooled and drilled it home to make the score 5-0. Not satisfied with this Covert went to work to score another on a very pretty play with Carl Morgan, carrying the play to the Trenton defence, drawing them to one side, passing to Covert who made it 6-0. The final counter was made by Jimmie Ethier on a lone rush with a shot that caught the upper twine.

The game was comparatively clean with only 8 penalties being handed out for minor infractions of the rules. The game was well handled by Tommy Thompson of Toronto, and don't believe stories from Trenton to the contrary.

The line up:

OLD TIMERS YEARN FOR GOOD OLD RACING DAYS

Horse Racing on Bay of Quinte Always Attracted Crowd

It is just twenty-five years ago, according to the statement of a well known older resident of the city, since horse races have been held on the ice in the Bay of Quinte in this district. For years this sport had held the attention of horse owners and all other classes of citizens, who crowded the course each week to see the heats run off. Some weeks, two or three races had been arranged, and according to statements, considerable money changed hands after each race. Old time racing men although they yearn for the sport once more, declare it will never come back. The reason they give is that owners of horses nowadays are concentrating on fall fair races throughout the country, and a younger generation also would find little recreation in such "tame" sport.

BASKETBALL

George Laughlin's B. C. I. & V. S. senior basketball team cinched first place in the Senior Bay of Quinte Basketball League by defeating the Albert College cagers by the score of 34 to 20 in a free scoring game at the collegiate last evening. A goodly crowd of spectators were on hand to witness the tussle and saw occasional splurges of lightning fast basketball.

The collegiate sextette opened purely on the defensive and forged to the front the first minute of play, never to relinquish their lead. Practically every member of the Laughlin-coached clan entered into the scoring column as their quick passing and combination plays reaped profitable results in the counting of baskets. Ostrom and Hilton set up a rugged defence and scored ten points between them. Temple, Cole and Forster also played smart basketball.

"Red" MacFarlane led the losers on the offensive, while Driscoll proved the Albert's big scorer. Paige and Waring also went well. The half-time score saw the collegiate leading by a 14 to 9 score.

The line-ups — B. C. I. & V. S. — Temple 6, Ostrom 4, Hilton 6, Forster 4, Faulkner 2, Cole 8, Henry 2, Mylchrist, L'Heureux 4. Albert College — MacFarlane 6, Driscoll 10, Dunnington, Waring Paige 2, Summers, Bishop.

$100,000 FIRE AT NORTH BAY

North Bay, Feb. 10 (CP)—Gaunt charred ruins, heavily coated with ice, last night marked the section of North Bay's business area where two blocks had been razed in a $100,000 blaze.

Three families were forced to find a night's lodging, their apartment homes situated in an upper storey of one of the blocks having been swept by the flames and their belongings destroyed.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

Up in Oshawa they are so "tickled" with the sudden change, to their advantage in the senior baseball situation, following the "break" in the Ulster Stadium loop, that it's almost like a seventh heaven with the Oshawa sports scribe. Of course one cannot blame the Motor City organization for rejoicing, especially after financing the entire four clubs in the West Toronto loop for the past three seasons. Naturally it would seem like freeing oneself from bondage, 'er sumpin'. They go even so far as to suggest that all baseball inclined fans in Eastern Ontario are agog over the so-called, or much anticipated, "grand slam" that was made by the Dukes in their recent announcements of being admitted to the newly organised Ulster loop. (Maybe).

The Oshawa scribe goes on to say that the newly organized loop, which includes the Dukes (?), will play outlaw baseball if the motor city crew are not permitted to play in the Ulster Stadium. "Apparently the Dukes have assumed a rather haughty air after being mentioned as potential members of the new organization." If some of the boys "in the know" really are on the up and up, the new organization broke away from the old executive for solely the express purpose of pulling away from outlaw ball and affiliating with the O.B.A.A., where they would be assured of a post season series with an assurity of being recognised as provincial champions, if they won the senior O.B.A.A. title. Then again the Toronto clubs are more than anxious to return to the old city play-down system with the winner being recognized as senior champions of the city of Toronto with only one senior team, out of Toronto, competing in the senior O.B.A.A. play-downs. "Does that look as though the Oshawa end of the situation entered into the decision made by the present clubs in the Ulster Stadium loop?

Of course the Dukes would be a decided asset to the Ulster Stadium if such is finally arranged. So would Peterboro and Belleville, so why all the ballyhoo from the Oshawa camp? It has been admitted by Toronto baseball associates that senior ball needs some stimulation in order to revive the summer pastime in the Queen City. Undoubtedly the same holds good in other centres where amateur baseball once flourished in a most prolific manner, but, those days seem to be but wonderful memories, so why not endeavour to bring about an amalgamation that would be for the mutual benefit of all concerned. The C.O.B.L. could continue to operate as a separate organization if the league executive so desires but an interlocking schedule with the Ulster Stadium League clubs, with local teams playing in Toronto and the clubs in the Ulster Stadium appearing in Belleville and Peterboro would do more for the cause of senior baseball than is anticipated. Of course it should not be the duty of the league officers to approach the Toronto moguls but the officers at the helm of the Belleville and Peterboro clubs. It is to their advantage so naturally the missionary work would have to be started by them.

A recent sport note from Kingston informs us of the fact that Art Casterson, genial president of the Kingston City Hockey League, has announced his intentions of resigning his office in that organization. "Perhaps the unbiased decisions so impartially handed out by Prexy Casterson in the recent Kingston play-offs brought the wrath of others upon his head and forced the issue." For the welfare of the Kingston pre-season loop those in hockey authority in the Limestone City would be well advised to retain Art Casterson as their leader. The marked success enjoyed by that organization can be attributed to his sportsman-like endeavors. The loss of Mr. Casterson would reflect on the excellent work he has put into the organization during its first years of long and tedious up-hill fighting.

Not in recent years has a Belleville hockey team staged such a powerful attack as was launched by the local intermediates in the final period last evening when the Dohertys scored five goals in quick succession to defeat the Trenton club 7 to 0. The locals now enjoy that seven goal margin to take into Trenton for the return game on Monday night. During that final stanza the green and white literally played the Bowen-coached outfit off their feet and had it not been for the miraculous saves registered by Joe Gould the score would have easily mounted into the double column of figures.

Some mention must be made of the stellar work of Rube Buskard, local goal custodian. Rube established a record and realized his life's ambition—"to turn in a shut-out game". Gould was good but Buskard at the other end of the arena repeatedly rose to dizzy heights to keep the visitors from the scoring sheet. His miraculous saves at times were roundly applauded by the fans. "Barney" York looked the best for the visitors on the offence.

From the goal to the last alternate the locals out-classed the Trentonians last evening. In all fairness to the Bowen-coached lads we must remind the fans that they had participated in three hard-fought games this week, having previously defeated Cobourg on Monday and again on Wednesday. The veteran-like manner in which the local's second line of Connors, a new recruit at centre, flanked by McGuire and Harry Morgan carried the play was most pleasing. These kids repeatedly staged combination plays that stamped them equal to the combination of Pete and Carl Morgan flanking Roy Covert. When it came to stars, Roy Covert was undoubtedly the class of all players on the ice. The nick-name "ghost" surely fitted the occasion as he was all over the ice like a myth to over-shadow all others. Coach L'Heureux asked the boys for their all in that final period and they went on to show their appreciation of his efforts. Covert's four goals speak for themselves.

Following last night's game Manager Thomas convened with Convener Bill House relating to the local junior group play-offs. It has been suggested that the first game be played in Belleville on Tuesday night with the return game being played in Hastings on Thursday night. These dates are expected to be confirmed by Convener House today. On the other hand the O.H.A. may step in and order a sudden death game to be played in the local group as the Queen's juniors are now waiting the winner of the local group to be declared.

BIRTH OF HOCKEY CLAIMED BY MANY CANADIAN CITIES

Montreal, However, Seems to Have Inside Track, Though Kingston Declares Hockey Played There Few Years Before Montreal— Ottawa Gave It Real Push

By W. M. CLADISH

Central Press, Canadian Sports Writer

Toronto, Feb. 10—With McGill University headed for senior intercollegiate and Quebec provincial honors—and possibly towards the Sir Montagu Allan Cup, emblematic of the Canadian amateur championship—the question again arises as to the origin of ice hockey.

Down around O' McGill, they stoutly claim that their hockey club is the oldest continuous organization of the kind in the world. They have records to prove that the McGill Hockey Club has been engaging in the sport on a scheduled basis for 54 years and that regular games were being played with the Montreal Hockey Club and a team from Quebec City as far back as 1875, which makes recognized hockey nearly 60 years old.

Incidentally, one of the hockey originals at McGill is none other than F. D. Ross of Ottawa. He interested Lord Stanley of Preston, who became Governor-General of Canada in 1888, in the Canadian winter sport, with the result that Lord Stanley presented the Stanley Cup in 1892 as the trophy to be emblematic of the Canadian championship.

His excellency appointed Mr. Ross and Sheriff Sweetland of Ottawa as trustees for the cup. On the death of the sheriff, William Foran of Ottawa, secretary of the Civil Service Commission succeeded him and Messrs. Ross and Foran are still responsible for the trophy, even though it became the "possession" of professional champions in 1907.

Kingston Claims Honor

Kingston insists that it was the birthplace of ice hockey in more or less its present form around 1865, when officers of His Majesty's Royal Canadian Rifles invented it and played the game on the Cataraqui river in order to pass the time away while helping to maintain the neutrality of Canada during the American Civil War. These officers had previously played a similar game on the fields of England, it is claimed, although it is declared in England that "field hockey" was not really recognized there until 1883 Incidentally, the Hockey Association in the Mother Country was not established until 1886, according to official records.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, has also laid claim to being the first place where real hockey was played. Here, too, there is the English trace because it was former residents of the Motherland who are said to have worked out a system of play on the ice.

THE STANLEY CUP
Gift of Hockey by Governor-General

Montreal claims that the first code of rules was drawn up in 1879 by two graduates of McGill, W. F. Robertson and R. F. Smith, who had previously played hockey of sorts with the McGill Club—matches being staged with as many as a dozen players on a side, based on the number of available participants.

Rules Made in Halifax

Then in the '70's, there were what was known as the Halifax Hockey Club Rules, so apparently the Atlantic seaboard also has a say in this debate on the origin of ice hockey. The Halifax rules are mentioned in certain records of 1877.

Going further afield for a possible source of hockey, it is recorded that early Britons played a game with a stick and there was a pastime in France which might have had something to do with it.

F. D. ROSS
He did much to start game on way

In fact the French have a word for it—"hoquet," meaning a crook, which indicates the type of stick used.

The Irish played "hurley" with an instrument which was called the hurlet, while in Scotland there has been a game called "shinty" which probably indicates that the shins felt the brunt of the fray. It probably also was the forerunner of the free-for-all game in Canada called "shinny" in which the largest team with the heaviest clubs generally proved the winner.

McGill Claims Oldest Cup

Getting back to Canada, the possession is claimed by McGill of the oldest hockey cup in existence this being a trophy which was hung up for the championship of a Montreal winter carnival in 1884. This of course, does not represent the actual birth of Canadian hockey.

When Lord Stanley moved into Rideau Hall in 1888, there were at least six well-known hockey teams: M.A.A.A., Montreal Victorias, the Crystals, Montreal Shamrocks, McGill and Ottawa. The first team in the Canadian capital was known as the Rebel Hockey Club—and the players wore red shirts. Some of the original participants were Lord Cavan one of Lord Stanley's aides-de-camp; Hon. Arthur Stanley, son of the Governor-General and P. D. Ross, who was a prominent athlete in all sports of the day.

The Rebels did much to popularize hockey in Ontario, as it is recorded that they made trips to Kingston, Peterboro, Toronto and other places "where hockey was previously unknown." This might indicate that Kingston did not know much about hockey until the Revels invaded the Limestone City. The work of the Rebels apparently bore fruit because the present Ontario Hockey Association was formed in 1890.

The Stanley Cup may also be regarded as another product of the Rebels, and it was originally presented to the Montreal A.A.A. team, because they had vanquished various other clubs in the Montreal and Ottawa area in what was known as the Amateur Hockey Association of Canada. They had been formed in 1887, according to the best records.

Famed "Silver Seven"

The first championship series of the Ontario Hockey Association was won by Ottawa, and the Capital City repeated in both 1892 and 1893. Ten years later, the Ottawa "Silver Seven" captured the honors in the Canadian Hockey Association, thereby winning the Stanley Cup for the first time for that city. Ottawa successfully defended all challenges until 1906 when the "Silver Seven" were vanquished by the equally famous Montreal Wanderers. Open professionalism broke out in hockey in 1907 and the cup remained in the hands of those who had forsaken amateurism.

This led Sir Montagu Allan, C. V.O., of Montreal, to present the Allan Cup in 1906 for the amateur championship of the Dominion and it was first held by the Cliffsides of Ottawa as winners of the old Interprovincial Hockey Association.

Hockey was introduced on the Pacific coast in 1911 as a professional sport, the promoters being Frank and Lester Patrick "of Vancouver," both of whom are high in the administration of hockey activities today.

Such are the beginnings of the hockey in different sections of the Dominion according to the recorded word that can be taken as reliable. After 60 or more years, Canadian hockey is played throughout Europe and the United States, and is attracting attention in countries beyond, so that it may become world-wide in prominence ere long.

King Levinsky Wins Split Decision over Charlie Massera

Levinsky Loses Chance to Fight Carnera in June

(By Edward J. Neil, Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, Feb. 10 (AP)—The heavyweights have a new spoiler today, a serious faced, black haired Italian youngster from the coal mining regionns near East Monongahela—Charley Massera, 22 years old.

He came within a split decision last night of belting King Levinsky right out of Madison Square Garden's plans for a heavyweight title fight between the Chicago Kingfish and Primo Carnera in June. Unofficially he convinced the experts, and a slim crowd of 3,500 that Levinsky had been beaten, that the Kingfish won't go as title challenging material.

Massera couldn't win the decision of two judges and Referee Gunboat Smith, who once more followed out the custom officials have fallen into at the Garden, never agreeing on anything. A week ago another trio got so mixed up voting on the outcome of the Tony Canzoneri-Cleto Locatelli lightweight match that they had to stage a recount to give Tony the decision after first calling it a draw.

Referee Awards Decision

With most of the experts agreed that Massera had won at least six rounds clearly, entitling him to the decision, one judge voted for Levinsky, the other for Massera, and Referee Smith hauled off and presented a unique analysis of the situation. He didn't give anyone the 10th. round, gave Massera four, Levinsky three, called two even, and awarded Levinsky the decision.

Since coming to New York for practical instruction to add to his theoretical knowledge, Massera, who turned to fighting when he lost his mining job, has risen rapidly. He beat Maxey Rosenbloom in a non-title light heavyweight contest a few weeks ago. Though he gained in ring prestige last night, he lost financially.

Massera guaranteed Levinsky $5,000 and the total receipts were only $8,880, of which the youngster got less than half to pay both himself and the Kingfish.

Henri Cochet, long France's and the world's "No. 1" man of tennis, no longer a simon pure, is shown practicing in a New York gymnasium for his forthcoming American debut as a professional. Henri has a contract that gives him good share of the receipts of all professional meets in which he participates, and he has been reading the figures of the Tilden-Vines tour, and he is quite naturally surprised that there is that much money in professional tennis. He will make his bow here on February 19, in New York, Madison Square Garden.

Two Dice in a Box

By William Owen Friesland

"Remember, Bernice," her mother had often said, "nothing ages a woman like an indifferent husband. You've stood a lot from Fred. You've never had your own mind in anything."

A bungalow hidden behind shrubs and climbing flowers, a grassy back yard with a high vine-covered fence, a fruit tree or two, and one large pepper shading an old-fashioned rope swing—this had been her dream for her unborn child. The baby had lived a few hours. The dream had gone on for years.

That first year of apartment house life had been a new experience. She hadn't minded it at all. But reaction came swiftly after the baby's death. As a substitute for her discontent she began taking long bus rides that led her always into the Laurel Canyon district of Hollywood. Later, she would describe the beauties and advantages of that exclusive neighborhood to Fred while he listened tolerantly over the lowered edge of his after dinner paper. But as time went on and her trips and descriptions became more frequent, he no longer attempted to conceal his annoyance behind a gesture of pretense. Yesterday he had expressed that annoyance in the plainest of simple language.

"A bungalow in Laurel Canyon would be a wonderful thing— for you," he said, touching the final phrase lingeringly; "but it so happens that my business is here. I wish you would stop nagging me about Hollywood."

His words had settled whatever doubt remained, she was restless all that night. By morning her decision made, having reached it slowly, it came fully dressed in the calm, cool garments of finality. However, habit being strong upon her, she did not approach the edge of his temper until she had poured his second cup of coffee.

"Fred," she said then without the slightest trace of emotion, "we've tried marriage for ten years. It's been a noble experiment; but a failure. I'm not putting the blame anywhere. During that time the rents have mounted higher and higher. If they prove anything, it is simply that we've had nothing in common from the first."

Without comment the man reached for another piece of toast.

"So," she added steadily, "I've decided to leave you. Today."

He looked at his watch. "I'd better be getting along," he said. "I wish you would wait, Bernice, and talk this over with me this evening. I'll try to get away from the office earlier. I haven't time to discuss it now."

"There's nothing to talk over, Fred. My mind's made up."

"There'll be some provisions I'll want to make for you."

"None, Fred. I'm not yet too old to provide for myself."

"I'll want a little more time to say good-by," he persisted. "Until this evening, then." Leaning over he touched his lips to hers briefly. Then cupping her cheeks in his hands, he as briefly pressed his lips to her forehead. "In memory of our little girl," he said.

To Bernice this last bit of morning formality had long ago become a meaningless ritual.

Fred returned that afternoon at five-thirty, an hour in advance of his usual time. Bernice met him at the door. She was dressed for departure.

"All packed?" His eyes took in the heap of luggage near the door. "Have I kept you waiting long?"

"No," she lied. Why she had waited at all she could not tell. "I just this minute got myself cleaned up."

Fred picked up the paper and settled in his favorite chair. "Nothing but divorce scandals and crime," he said dryly. "I'll swear I can't understand what the world's coming to!"

"Have you nothing else to say, Fred?"

"You may as well get dinner before you go."

"Thank you," she replied tartly, "but I've planned to have dinner at mother's—tonight."

She glanced at the clock. It lacked a few minutes of six. She started to say good-by when suddenly and without warning the clock toppled from the mantel and the room began wallowing like a craft in heavy seas. From the kitchen came the clatter of falling dishes. Heaving walls and cracking plaster filled the room with dusty Bedlam. She could neither move, stand still, nor cry out.

Suddenly she felt herself being dragged across the heaving floor to the narrow hallway leading to the rear of the apartment. Where she had stood a second before now lay a huge piece of ornamental plaster. The sight sickened her with fear.

"Fred," she cried chokingly above the din, "It's an earthquake'! 'Are we going to be killed?"

"This hallway's arched," he assured her. "It'll be the last to go." His arm tightened around her as the floor buckled under them. "We're like two dice in a box," he remarked with all of what the French call "sang froid."

As a piece of heavy furniture fell in the bedroom immediately behind them, she closed her eyes and buried her face against his shoulder. Muffled, her words reach him. "Fred, we've got to get out of here, pick!" She started to wrench herself free. His arm tightened. "Are you sure we're not going to be killed, Fred?"

"No," he spoke grimly. "This arch'll be the last to go," he repeated. "Our safety is here. It'd be suicide to try to get out." As he spoke he saw a great curving bulge appear in the outer wall of their living room, which was promptly followed by a loud crunching and grinding of brick and mortar.

Then he saw the out of doors through a wide rent that ran zigzagging from the ceiling to the floor.

"Fred, we're going to be killed?"

"Don't worry. Just stick tight. This old arch will hold." With a deafening crash, a portion of the wall gave way and fell. He lifted her head and touched his lips to hers briefly; then he cupped her cheeks in his hands and pressed his lips against her forehead. "For the soul of our baby girl," he whispered.

"Then you know we're going to be killed, Fred?" suddenly Bernice seemed unafraid. "Fred you've never kissed me that way before."

"Maybe I have," he said. "Look at the chandelier. It's letting up." Almost as suddenly as it came, the quaking stopped.

His arm continued to imprison her. "There'll probably be some minor shocks," he suggested. "We'd better stick to the archway."

The dined at the Biltmore that night—together. Fred explained, indifferently, that such an experience "needs a little class to top it off." While they ate he glanced over the feverish headlines of an extra.

"Golly!" he remarked, "Hollywood missed the biggest thrill of its life. Says here they hardly shimmied over there. You know, maybe you're right about that bungalow after all. You see, if it happened to cave in on our heads there would'nt be so much of it."

"I don't mind an apartment, Fred," she said slowly. Really I don't. Especially if it has an arched hallway."

"Fine. That's settled then," was his reply. "It'll be a bungalow in Laurel Canyon."

TARZAN AT THE EARTH'S CORE

(Metropolitan Newspaper Service) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

As favorable winds carried Tarzan's craft up the sun-lit sea, the O-220, following the same route cruised in wide circles upon what its captain now considered his hopeless quest for the missing members of the dirigible's party. Also, he was beginning to wonder if they could find the polar opening and return again to the outer world. Serious problems concerning fuel and oil confronted them if they did not soon start back for civilization.

If they did not find Tarzan and Jason quickly, it looked as though the men of the great dirigible must resign themselves to remaining. Below them but never within sight, the ape-man and his party were sailing now—they knew not where—lost upon the bosom of Pellucidar's uncharted sea. Lajo, head Korsar, stood in the boat's bow, sniffing the air like a hunting dog. A land breeze had sprung up. "We are in for a stiff blow," he said to Tarzan.

Soon the wind and sea mounted to terrifying proportions and the craft fairly flew before the storm There was no rain or lightning, just stupendous seas and hurricane wind that threatened to engulf Tarzan and his companions each moment. The Waziri were frankly frightened, for the sea was not their element. The mountain girl and Thoar seemed awed but if they felt fear, they did not show it. Even Tarzan and Jason were convinced the boat could not weather the elements.

By some miracle of fate the boat lived through the storm. But when the wind diminished and the seas went down, there were only tumbling waters to be seen. Nowhere was there a sight of land. "How now Lajo, shall we set our course for Korsar?" asked Tarzan. "It will be difficult," he answered," but I know from which direction the wind usually blows upon the Korsar Az. We cannot be far from my city." It was at that moment that a cry came from The Red Flower of Zoram, and all eyes turned in the direction she indicated.

OPEN VERDICT IS DELIVERED

Find Woman Died in Home of Dr Pratt From Burns

Smith's Falls, Ont., Feb. 10—Mystery still shrouds the death of Eva McLean, 60 year old housekeeper for Dr. Wilton Pratt. But citizens of Smith's Falls have an abundance of startling testimony to speculate over as a result of the inquest into the woman's death which ended last night.

The coroner's jury returned an open verdict, finding the woman died from burns suffered on a bed in Dr. Pratt's home and shock. The mystery lies in how she suffered the terrible burns without attempting to escape from the burning bed and in how she came to be found at the door of the bedroom with the clothes burned off her body.

Dr. Pratt is in the Lanary County jail at Perth awaiting trial on several charges of performing illegal operations.

Two Theories Advanced

Two suggestions were advanced in evidence to account for Miss McLean's burning without a struggle. Dr. E. R. Frankish, medico-legal expert from Toronto, said a slight injection of hyosene bromide, a drug commonly known as "twilight sleep" would have made this possible. Dr. Frankish also stated a blood tumor was found under the woman's scalp which might have been caused by a stunning blow.

The woman was found lying on the floor by a neighbor who was summoned by Dr. Pratt and died in hospital some hours later on December 31. Dr. Pratt testified he was awakened by smoke while sleeping in a room below.

One of the salient points of the hearing was the production of Dr. Pratt's diery with entries telling of trouble with Miss McLean, who had been his housekeeper for 25 years. John O'Neil a friend of the dead woman, said she had told him of quarrels with the doctor. He said she shared a house with him and visited it from time to time.

Mr. G. M. James Describes Scenes During Vacation Tour of the United States

(From Our Special Travelling Representative, MR. G. M. JAMES)

ARTICLE IV

We arrived at Jacksonville, Florida, on January 20 and expect to continue our journey farther south on January 29. There has been much so far of unusual interest to us.

We visited the various residential districts and found all kinds of homes as in any other large city. Garbage cans were along the curbs and trucks were making their rounds as with us. We saw sweet peas, nasturtiums, geraniums and numerous shrubs and vines in flower. Some of the lawns were quite green. Trees of various kinds including pines and palms were in full leaf. We discovered that Monday is wash day here too. There were many hedges that looked like ours but the leaves were much thicker and more polished. On the whole the homes and business blocks bespeak a happy and prosperous people.

One big surprise has been the rare occasions on which we see smoking. We saw very little of this notorious folly in Detroit or from there south. We do not know whether it is from design, depression or just mere neglect.

The slogan here is "Buy now, prices will never be so low again".

Railway fares throughout Florida are 1½ cents a mile. All articles for the laundry are sixty per cent. higher than ours but if handed in by 9 a.m. they are delivered beautifully done the same day.

We have already stated that NRA certificates consisting of the Blue Eagle with NRA above and "We do our part" below, are posted up conspicuously in every store, hotel or other place of business. This certificate is really a pledge between the Federal Administration on the one hand and the holder on the other. The holder promises to abide by a code which sets forth definite rates of wages, hours of labour, prices of commodities and other conditions necessary for the successful carrying out of the "National Recovery Act". The holder of such a certificate becomes a "member" of this nation-wide recovery plan and as such receives the support of the people interested in his line of business. If on the other hand he fails in any way to comply with the "Code", or regulation clauses, his certificate is withdrawn and he is forced to shift for himself. A dozen such certificates have been forfeited throughout this district recently. But the vast majority of the people have faith in the NRA and are doing their part fully and cheerfully. The great liberty-loving, American people do not object to governmental dictation providing it gets them somewhere. The same is true of Italy and Germany and perhaps of some other countries.

The bread and tea biscuits here are as white as snow but tasteless. Our bread and pastry flour contains a percentage of northern number one hard wheat which we strongly suspect is absent here and the difference is very noticeable particularly in the toast.

The gladiolus flower is in bloom here now as we see them often in store windows and restaurants but the flower is much smaller and not so beautifully colored as with us.

One fine day we visited a large alligator and ostrich farm here in Jacksonville. We crossed the St. Johns river on a fine new toll bridge similar to the Peace Bridge near Buffalo. The alligators are confined by fences in various areas each containing a shallow pond with sufficient land for sunning purposes. They are grouped together according to size and age from a few inches long to over fourteen feet. In all these were over a thousand. The small alligators are fed on crabs and fish cut up into small pieces. The large ones are fed on whole fish. In cool weather they can live from three to five months without food. In ordinary weather they are fed from once to twice a week. The largest alligator we saw is estimated by scientists to be eight hundred years old and it eats one hundred pounds of fish a week. The alligators are all well fed to keep them quiet and inactive. Even at that their mean dispositions cause them to fight to such an extent that a leg, an eye, or tail are often missing after a battle which requires much human force and skill to subdue. The keepers call them by various names such as Sunny Jim, Bertha, Bess and Beauty. When disturbed by a long pole, they hiss in no friendly manner, crawl up on the land and show their teeth and powerful jaws, so strong that they can easily crush the bones of a pig or a dog. They are never (though born in captivity) either lovely or amiable. A female alligator makes one nest a year in the sand and lays from forty to sixty eggs in one night. Each egg is about the size of a hen's egg. These eggs hatch in the sand under natural conditions of heat and moisture in sixty days.

There are various sources of revenue from alligators. The very young are sold at one dollar each. The larger reptiles are sold for zoo and circus purposes. The smaller ones are stuffed and varnished and sold as curios. The hides of the larger alligators are tanned and made into various useful articles such as handbags. It requires about thirty years for an alligator to grow five feet long and it keeps right on growing until it dies with a possibility of over a thousand years. They are never sick and never have any disease. Surely here are ideal insurance risks?

The various pairs of ostrich were much tamer and less fierce. Since feathers are not in fashion, these birds are no longer profitable.

This interesting farm had many other special features such as various tropical birds, monkeys, squirrels and snakes. For the first time we saw a real, live rattle snake. It was coiled up asleep in a box with a glass front. The keeper stirred it up with a stick with the result that it awoke, hissed and shook its rattles which reminded us of wig-wag bells at a railway crossing.

The next day we had another wonderful experience when we visited some orange groves. Mr. J. T. Mollard, proprietor of the Aragon Hotel, where we are so comfortably and conveniently located in the centre of Jacksonville, along with Mrs. Mollard, took us in their fine automobile to various points of interest. We first went along an excellent highway, a distance of twenty miles, to Atlantic Beach and enjoyed a fine drive on the sand close to the Atlantic Ocean as far as the mouth of the St. Johns river where we saw porpoises rising to the surface and disappearing as we had once in mid-Atlantic. Sea gulls and snipes were numerous all along the shore. From there we drove on another excellent highway a distance of thirty miles parallel with the ocean to St. Augustine, originally a Spanish settlement and now the oldest place in America. We passed through a region of waste land almost all the way, sand hills between us and the ocean and on the other side land covered with stunted palms or jungles so thick that you must cut your way through them only to find alligators and snakes. On the way to St. Augustine we passed one bald-headed eagle sitting on a sand hill near by, several wild pigs called razor backs and gangs of negro convicts at work on the road. Each gang of convicts was guarded by two white men with shotguns. We were told that the negro does not consider it a disgrace to go to jail and that as a matter of fact he prefers to be there as he has a much better time.

As we entered St. Augustine we drove over a river where flocks of wild ducks were near by without showing the least alarm. Since it was low tide we could see much of the muddy bottom of the river covered with oyster shells as it was an oyster bed.

The buildings and streets of St. Augustine are quaint and beautiful. Everything suggests a bygone Spanish influence. This old town has been under the jurisdiction of five flags, namely that of Spain, France, Great Britain, the Confederates and the United States as at present. We visited a few historic places such as the old church and the market place where slaves were sold. From famous old St. Augustine we drove to Mandarin, a settlement of orange and citrus groves, which was on our way back to Jacksonville. Our hosts, Mr. and Mrs. Mollard, own a fine fruit grove and home at this place and near by is the former home of Harriet Beecher Stowe, the authoress of Uncle Tom's Cabin. Just as the writings of Voltaire did much to bring about the French Revolution so did the writings of Harriet Beecher Stowe help to bring about the Civil War and ultimate freedom of slaves. Mrs. Stowe made many bitter enemies among the southern planters because they considered her picture of the harsh treatment of the negroes to be unjust and untrue.

At Mandarin we wandered among trees about like our apple trees heavily loaded with ripe oranges, grape-fruit and other similar fruits. Such a sight is like a fairy dream to a northerner. We ate some of the fruit and found it to be superior to what we get at home because it is ripened on the tree, all the difference in the world. Many wild bees about half the size of our wild bees were humming busily among the sweet scented flowers. Mrs. Mollard prepared a delicious lunch which we ate under the trees. We visited a small Anglican church near by which Mrs. Stowe attended and saw a beautiful stain glass window in her memory. We also visited the cemetery of the district and saw the graves of many Confederates as well as the very old grave of a man named George Mott, who in 1836 was shot by the Seminole Indians who inhabited that district.

Mr. Mollard informed us that oranges and similar fruits were at present in little demand and that much good fruit would never be picked this season. A reasonable price here, he says, would be two dollars for a box of 96 pounds containing 96 oranges or more according to size. Perhaps here is an opportunity for Ontario to trade apples for oranges?

Throughout the Mandarin district there are very large oak trees (not in any way like our oaks) covered with the mosslike seaweed mentioned in a former letter. This moss hangs down two feet in clusters from the branches and gives an enchanted, fairy-like appearance. Particles of the moss are blown by the wind from tree to tree and grow longer and longer living an independent existence by obtaining nourishment entirely from the air. These moss filaments are found on old trees, even in the orange groves and if left alone may ultimately kill its host. Our visit to the orange groves and other places above described will forever remain a happy memory and be associated with the splendid Aragon Hotel, Jacksonville, Florida.

An orange tree will bear fruit within five years of planting. An orange grove of about one hundred trees with comfortable home is worth from thirty thousand to fifty thousand dollars.

On our journey through Georgia, all over Florida and Jacksonville we find that houses stand on brick pillars about three feet from the ground and thus entirely open underneath. Cellars are not required and if the wooden foundations were on or near the ground there would be a dampness giving ideal conditions for the antlike termite to tunnel the damp wooden lower timbers until they would crumble like rotten wood. A few common house flies are quite active in homes and outdoors here.

The Flame Flower, which grows on a vine in clusters like our honeysuckle but is the color of the oranges, is in bloom here now. Mr. Mollard has a magnificent vine of this kind in his orange grove at Mandarin near Jacksonville.

As I am writing these lines the rain is falling gently outside with the thermometer at 75 degrees. The maximum temperature for this part is about 96 degrees during July and August.

Two crops of potatoes, cabbage and other vegetables are grown here a year, one during the first part of the year and the other during the latter part. Flowers and vegetables are being planted now so they can mature fully before the hot weather of July and August. Near here we saw a hundred acres planted in narcissus row on row, the bulbs of which are exported to other countries including Canada. A few miles from Jacksonville we saw some banana trees in flower, but it is too far north for the fruit to develop.

At the docks in Jacksonville we saw the British freighter, "Belize", which with its crew we are told has been seized for smuggling.

There is a nice little park about a block from the Aragon Hotel where we are staying. There are about one hundred benches (usually occupied) surrounded by palms and oleanders with the bold little English sparrows searching for crumbs at your feet. In the middle of the park stands a tall, grey, granite monument, "In Memory of Confederates", and also bearing the inscription "God Bless Our Country". One fine afternoon I sat down in this park to think and to watch the panorama of life as it incessantly passed by. More than half of those who passed by were darkies; one old man limped slowly, one woman carried two big bundles of washing, a few care-free girls were returning with their books from school and were supremely happy, a few young men were dressed in the height of fashion but there was no mingling with the whites. This is the invariable rule at work or play in the south. Perhaps that's what the darky was born for also?

The white young men and women are splendidly dressed and very good looking. The best costume I saw was a royal blue velvet, with short cape and tam hat to match. It was worn by a tall, slender young woman of graceful movement who was quite unconscious of her charm and beauty. The next best was a navy blue, form revealing dress of some thin good material unknown to the writer. There was no outer garment and the hat was shaped like a soldier's tiny metal hat well down over one ear. This too was a picture suitable for a fashion book. There were several others in tweed suits of various colours with coat three-quarters length, clearly indicating that they came from the north where zero weather prevailed. Space will not permit a further description but beyond a doubt dress has much to do with feminine beauty.

Everywhere we go we find people, young and old, cheerful, chatty and smiling and but for those who ask for a dime on the street there is no evidence of hard times. As we expect to go farther south soon we cannot say now where the next letter may be mailed.

People said they had not seen the lake frozen over for 20 years sufficient to allow ice hockey and skating as were indulged in this weekend.

Million Workers Strike Against Fascist Methods Proposed by Doumergue

Communication With Paris Broken by Tie-up of Telegraph Service

POLICE CALLED

Workers Will Not Tolerate Any Dictartorial Regime

PARIS, Feb. 12.—(CP and AP)—An army of 1,000,000 workers struck today against Fascist methods in France.

Amid reports, that Premier Doumergue would ask dictatorial powers the French Federation of Labor called last midnight a 24-hour general strike of protest against any resort to Fascist control.

A shutdown of virtually every industry was sought by the Federation, supported by Socialists and Communists.

The Government rushed in soldiers and sailors from the Technical Corps to take over Paris Public Service plants to assure gas, water and electricity and to help maintain at least a skeleton telephone and telegraph service.

(A dispatch from London this morning stated, that wire communication with Paris had been interrupted, indicating that the strike was effective in that part of its plan. Communication between New York and Paris was broken at about the same time, preventing a full account immediately of the situation there.)

Suppress Disorders

Other military forces were held in readiness throughout the nation to suppress disorders.

Thirty-five thousand police and soldiers were on duty in Paris, where 100,000 laborers were affected. Outbreaks were feared in meetings of Socialists and Communists.

The walkout is a protest against attacks on Parliament by what the strikers term "Fascist forces and partisans of fallen regimes", who it is asserted are ready to pursue their aim to "substitute a dictatorship for a Democracy."

The movement is intended as a solemn warning to the new government, that the workers will not tolerate any dictatorial regime.

Paris was outwardly calm as the strike went into effect.

Peace was reported, too, at Marseilles, Lyons and Lille—the principal provincial cities in which the movement was followed extensively. There were demonstrations in these cities Sunday.

The walkout in Paris followed a day of anti-Fascist manifestations by Socialists and Communists—neither represented in the new government.

Food Shops Open

Arrangements were made for food shops to remain open, but the strike was called to affect the mails, newspapers and theatres.

Subway, bus and street car employees also were in the movement.

It was a holiday for school children, with teachers joining in the walkout.

Two notes to London had indicated today the new ministry's international temper and probably police.

One was said to have advised Sir Arthur Henderson, British chairman of the World Disarmament Conference, that there was little hope of an early settlement of the Franco-German British trade conflict over export and import commercial quotas if the British should impose certain surtaxes on French goods announced to take effect Tuesday.

Doumergue is expected to seek power from Parliament to deal with these matters. The final decision will be reached after a vote on the budget at the end of the month.

CHURCHBURNS LOSS $150,000

Oldest Catholic Church in Detroit Prey to Flames

Detroit, Feb. 12 (CP)—St. Joachim's Catholic Church—the church without a parish and one of the oldest churches in Detroit—today was destroyed by fire with a loss estimated by the pastor, Fr. Andrew J. Sheridan, at $150,000.

The cause of the fire, which swept rapidly from the basement up through the steeple, was undetermined.

The church was peculiar in Detroit in that it had no parish but was attended by many descendants of old French families in the city.

Bossy Has Trusting Nature, Follows Sleigh After Being Jostled Therefrom

Mr. Harold Knight's cow is of a trusting nature and a sleigh ride which was really meant to be a trip from the district of Brighton, where he lives, to a Belleville slaughter house, was in the cow's opinion, just a sleigh ride.

Mr. Knight bundled bossy in a blanket on Saturday morning, coaxed her into a box on the low sleigh and set off early for Belleville where he had the promise of a sale. Just this side of Trenton on the highway one of the rear slats of the box joggled loose, and the motion of the sleigh did the rest. Bossy found herself free of the box and lying in a small heap on the side of the highway. Mr. Knight, smoking his pipe and swinging his arms in the frosty air, drove on unheeding.

But did she run away after she picked herself up from the side of the road? Did she retrace her tracks back to the warm stable. Bossy did not. With blanket askew and dragging, she set off at a slow trot after the sleigh, bawling heavily in dulcet tones which rose high above even the merry jingle of the sleigh bells on the harness.

"I hardly had the nerve to sell her after that," confided Mr Knight to the butcher when he came to Belleville. "She was always of such a trusting nature".

LEGISLATION TO LAST MANY YEARS TO BE

Business Manager of New York Times Speaks to Club

RECOVERY HERE

Canadian Progress Without Experiment is Noticed

Montreal, Feb. 12 — "We have been watching the news from Canada with great interest," said Mr. Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times, addressing the Canadian Club luncheon today at the Windsor Hotel. Mr. Wiley went on:

"Canada's recovery, we are aware, has proceeded almost wholly without the experiments in government financing and government expenditure with which our own administration plans are associated. It is far too early to place final judgment upon our policies or to assay their economic value. It will be years before the last word is written or spoken on these measures. The United States has, however, an enviable asset in the new spirit of courage throughout the nation. We have a very definite and great asset in the hold which President Roosevelt has upon the people. Even those who question the wisdom of some of the government spendings and who are opposed to the President's policies with reference to gold pay tribute to the courage and vigor with which he approached the reduction of the ordinary expense of government.

Man of Courage

"Among the President's many dramatic moves since assuming office, his prompt and effective handling of the air-mail contract situation is typical of how he thinks and acts. Watchful of the public pulse, he was quick to sense a growing resentment to what seemed misuse of high office, and he moved accordingly. By canceling the air mail contracts and calling on army and navy air forces to meet this emergency, Mr. Roosevelt once more demonstrated that he is not only a man of courage, independence and understanding of the public mind, but a man of action who meets every problem decisively and determinedly. That surely must be his accolade from historians of the future.

'Our business is measurably better. It shows marked signs of improvement not only in those lines which have been stimulated by government purchases to carry out public works and other undertakings for which public money has been supplied but in those lines in which private expenditure is the determining factor. One of the most encouraging signs has been the improvement in the automobile industry. The stronger demand for automobiles means an improvement in many associated lines of manufacturing. The editor of The Annalist comments this week that aside from the beneficial facts of this improvement in the automobile industry 'in bringing about increased employment in one of the most important and at the same time one of the most distressed industrial areas of the United States, its importance in a general business situation can hardly be overemphasized.'

"The editor continues with 'If it were not for the well-substantiated fact that the distribution of relief funds, especially in agricultural regions, had contributed heavily to the current revival in the demand for motor cars, we should have in the automobile industry an excellent example of the normal effect of replacement demand following a period of severe depression. Another encouraging sign is that the loudest advocates of currency inflation have, temporarily at least, been quieted by the President's action on gold. This is no guarantee that we shall not have these troublesome brethren with us again in case some of their constituents demand the increased use of silver as a medium of exchange or the use of the printing press for currency. Our business men, however, have a renewed feeling of confidence and there is every reason to believe that we are definitely headed in the right direction.

End of Experiments

"As for the demobilization of our government experiments, no one can foresee the exact time or manner in which this is to be brought about. The transition stage will not be simple. It will be much more difficult than the similar processes which we were obliged to undertake after the World War. As for the social values of the NRA and the other manifestations in the new deal, I am convinced that a considerable measure of these will

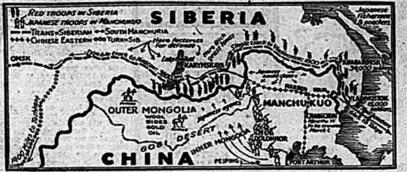
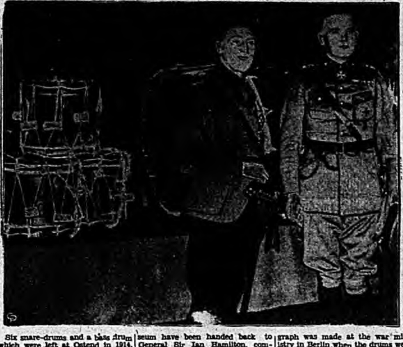
War Clouds Thicken as Japan and Russia Rush Preparations



War in the Far East is felt to be so imminent that great news-gathering organizations are sending their reporters and special writers to the expected scenes of strife between Japan and Russia with China as the unknown quantity. Despite her protestations of a desire for peace, Japan is known to be heavily arming and has conscripted labor to aid in the frenzied manufacture of munitions. Meanwhile Russia pushes forward rapidly the building up of her railway system from Vladivostok to Moscow and Leningrad. The map ABOVE shows the ramifications of the situation in the Far East with Japan's probable plan in the event of war. Russia is depending upon her giant air-force to crush Japan, being but six hours from Tokio. It is almost impossible to judge how big such a war would develop, or how many, if any, European countries it involves. Likely, if Russia were attacked from the Siberian side by Japan, it presents an opportunity for other nations to attack from the European and Asiatic side where Russia's defence would be weakened. (The map shown is reproduced by special permission of Time", weekly news magazine.)

DRUMS OF WAR RETURNED BY GERMANY TO GREAT BRITAIN



Six snare-drums and a bass drum which were left at Ostend in 1914, when the Gordon Highlandes were ordered to Antwerp and which have been exhibited in Berlin war museum have been handed back to General Sir Ian Hamilton, commander of the famous Scotch regiment, by Gen. Von Blomberg, the German war minister. The photograph was made at the war ministry in Berlin when the drums were formally turned over to General Sir Ian Hamilton (Left) by War Minister Gen. von Blomberg.

BLANK SHELL CAUSES HURT

Young Actor Shot in Abdomen During Drama

Vegreville, Alta. Feb. 12.—(CP)—Andrew Teresio, 18, Two Hills, fought for his life in the hospital here, today as the sequel to a too-realistic stage shooting. His condition was critical.

Teresio was accidentally shot through the abdomen with paper wadding from a blank cartridge during an amateur dramatic performance at Plain Lake. In the course of the play, Steve Delawuki, 21, Two Hills, was called upon to fire at Teresio.

Instead of a blank cartridge, a cartridge from which the bullet had been removed was used. The wadded paper packing penetrated the body of the "victim" and the audience was horrified to see him collapse unconscious on the stage.

C.N.R. BUSINESS IS BEATING RECORD

Two Train Crews Called Back to Work at London

LONDON, Ont., Feb. 12.—(CP)—With the business beating all records for 1933 and 1932, two C.N.R. train crews were called back to regular work today, it was announced at London Division Offices.

C.N.R. traffic eastbound through the Sarnia tunnel last week was the heaviest since 1931 and every station on the main line of the C.N.R. London Division has shown an increase in business for several weeks past.

Paris, Feb. 12—(AP)—A red flag waved from the Statue of the Republic in the Place De La Nation late today as police fought Communists across a barricade in the Boulogne suburb of Paris.

The pitched battle— which the Ministry of the Interior described as one of several unimportant disorders—followed a short time after 50,000 persons had paraded in a capital where practically all business was suspended because of a federation of labor strike.

The parade was led by Socialist Deputy Leon Blum, some of his colleagues of like political belief, and a column of singing Communists who carried red flags.

They marched down Cours De Vincennes, moved into the Place De La Nation listened to speeches and finally disbanded.

The strike was "against fascism" and was for one day only

The great demonstration was signalized by many loud arguments, a few fist fights, and no clashes with the police along the route.

All disorders reported, including the death of a laborer, were on the outskirts of the city.

About 500 Communists built a barricade across the main street of Boulogne and defied police, who called on them to disperse.

Jumps from Window When Cops Stage Raid for Stolen Keg

London, Ont, Feb. 12—(CP)—When police raided a house here Sunday afternoon searching for a stolen keg of wine, Alex J. Atkinson, 24, leaped from a second story window but made a bad landing sprained his ankle and was captured. This morning he was carried into police court where he pleaded guilty to participating in the theft of a car belonging to William Gunn of this city.

MACHINE GUNS CHATTER, 42 DIE IN LINZ

Socialists Defy Police and Declare Strike in Austria

60 MAY DIE

Two Pitched Battles Rage in Austrian Town

Vienna, Feb. 12 (AP)—From 32 to 42 persons were reported killed in pitched battles between Socialists and authorities today as Socialists proclaimed a nation-wide general strike and the government retaliated with martial law.

Martial law was enforced in Vienna, Graz, Linz. The fighting in the last city accounted for 31 to 41 of the dead, while one was killed in Vienna.

A large number were reported wounded and it was reported that 60 of these might die from their injuries.

The deaths in Linz came in two pitched battles. In the first, machine guns and bombs were used, killing 16; in the second, the government forces used artillery, and 15 to 25 more were reported killed.

The government mobilised every available military force to suppress the uprising.

Machine Guns Used

That battle began when government forces attempted to raid the headquarters and the socialists tried to beat them off with hand grenades.

The police and soldiers replied with machine guns. They occupied the headquarters.

It was there that the government artillery was unlimbered in a savage effort to shell the rebels into Linz was only one spot in a sud- submission. denly strife-torn nation.

The Socialist party called a nation-wide general strike. One police inspector was killed in a riot in Vienna.

The government of Chancellor Englebert Dollfuss replied to the Socialist move with the declaration of martial law in Vienna and Linz. It was ruled that any civilian caught with a weapon should be shot immediately.

No Street Fighting

Aside from the slaying of the police inspector, no general street fighting was reported in Vienna up to 1.35 p.m.

Excited crowds, however, filled the Ringstrasse and other thoroughfares as army trucks mounted with machine guns, police busses, and army ambulances dashed about through an icy rain.

Even private automobiles were commandeered to carry the Fascist Heimwehr troops.

It was expected that the ministry would dissolve the Socialist party.

COMMON SENSE IN BUSINESS LAW

In ordinary every day language, Porf. C. S. Walker of Queen's University, Kingston, will deliver the second lecture of the series arranged as a business course by the local Chamber of Commerce for local residents, on Tuesday evening, February 13, in the Y.M.C.A. rooms at 8 p.m. His subject will be "Common Sense in Business Law". Prof. Walker is well qualified to deal with this troublesome subject, having made it a particular study. He is also a joint author on a text book on business law in collaboration with Prof. R. G. Smails, of Queen's University.

MILK BOTTLE CASE TO TRIAL

Mrs. E. Devault, grocery keeper, West Bridge Street, was committed for trial at the next court of competent jurisdiction after the submission of the crown's evidence on a charge of filling milk bottles, with milk, the bottles bearing the trade name of another milk vendor.

She elected trial by judge and jury, when the charge was read. Fred Reid, local milk vendor and complainant in the case testified, that he had seen the accused fill a milk bottle, bearing the trade name, L. P. Reid, on the 7th instant. He purchased the bottle of milk. The witness denied, when cross-examined by C. A. Cameron, local barrister, the fact, that he had sent a woman into the store with the bottle in question.

Sergeant Arthur Booth, was the next witness and told of executing a warrant to search the premises following the laying of information by Mr. Reid. Mr. Cameron objected to submission of any evidence by the police officer as it was not material to the case. B. C. Donnan, K.C., local Crown Attorney, argued that the result of the search was relative evidence. Three further charges of theft in connection with milk bottles had been lain but were not presented after His Worship had committed the accused for trial. Mr. Cameron argued that the charges would either have to be dealt with primarily or dismissed. The question was argued legally at length with His Worship enlarging the matter until late this afternoon.

His Worship found, that there was sufficient evidence to commit her for trial on the initial count.

BAKERY HORSE WALKS OFF TWICE

A new delivery horse of a local bakery which got tired of the dismal humdrum business of calling at customers' homes and waiting in the cold until the orders were delivered took a stroll with the loaded wagon on Saturday afternoon and disappeared so completely from the city streets that the city police force, several customers pressed into service, and a head-scratching driver could not locate the outfit until hours afterward. When finally found, however, the horse and sleigh were ensconced in the city public works department yard on Pinnacle street, sheltered from the zero blasts that blew.

The horse is a new one and inclined to take matters into his own head, stated the driver. "That's the second time, he's walked off with the day's business. It isn't so bad, but it keeps me until all hours, at night, getting through."

There's some talk of belling the horse in order to trace him more easily.

DEPUTATION MAY GO TO OTTAWA

No word has been received by Mr. Geo. F. Ostrom, Chairman of the local Harbor Commission, from the Dominion Government regarding further harbor development in the local harbor, it was stated by him today.

"It is just possible that the Commission will have to take a trip to Ottawa to iron this matter out," said Mr. Ostrom.

"Well, we may go next week,' he added, when questioned further.

FIREMEN HAVE QUIET WEEK END

It was a quiet and uneventful week end for members of the local fire department. In spite of the stand-to orders at each station since the commencement of the cold weather, fire calls for the period have been at an absolute minimum. Not a single call was responded to over the week end.

U. S. Dollar Sells AT $5.04 1-2 to Pound

LONDON, Feb. 12—(CP)—Dropping slowly throughout the day, the United States dollar closed tonight at $5.04 1-2 to the pound, which was one and one-half cents below Saturday's final quotation of $5.03.

The market was affected by the holiday on the New York Exchange and the lack of communication with Paris where a general strike disrupted telephone calls and telegraphic messages.

Faith Must be So Definite As to Take Form in Action

Bishop Lyons at Christ Church Confirms 45 Candidates

ZEAL EXTOLLED

Forty-five candidates, thirty women and fifteen boys, were confirmed at Christ Church on Sunday evening by the Right Rev. John Lyons, D.D., bishop of Ontario, in the presence of a large congregation. The candidates, among whom were seven from the Ontario School for the Deaf, were presented by the Rev. G. G. Wright, rector of Christ Church parish. Rev. A. L. Geen read a portion of the service.

At Shannonville, Bishop Lyons confirmed on Sunday morning a large class presented at Trinity Church by the Rev. A. E. Pepper, M.A., from the churches at Shannonville and Point Anne, a very large congregation witnessing the rite of the laying on of hands.

Next Sunday morning Bishop Lyons will officiate at St. Thomas Church at Belleville where the Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne will present many candidates for the confirmation into the full rites of the church. In the evening the Bishop will hold confirmation services at Stirling.

Spirit of Christ Needed

Preaching at Christ Church on Sunday evening, Bishop Lyons said: "If men would catch the spirit of the Christ those great problems which bewilder us would not be worrying us about what is going on in the world today."

"Russia is experimenting with a new religion, which may be called Communism. We may disagree and we do disagree," said the Bishop, "but we must admit the Russians believe in their creed and their faith is sufficient to send out missionaries for their cause, to live and if need be, die for it. No legislation is effective against that. But we must meet it with something better. If we believe so in our creed we will go out and teach and proclaim not only at home but abroad, even to the ends of the world, and if need be give our lives in its cause."

"What think ye of Christ?" was the text on which the Bishop founded his sermon stressing the impressive position of modern science in discovery and invention, but adding that unfortunately this age did not compare favorably with ages which have gone before in point of spiritual inspiration. "We have not kept pace in spiritual realms with what we have accomplished in other lines," the Bishop added.

Eternal Question

Answer to the question propounded in the text is the real test, it is the eternal question said the Bishop. "Can we say we have given sufficient thought to answer this question?" he asked. "We do know that it is our failure to give an answer to this question which is at the basis of all our problems, social, economic, or religious, whether in the personal or the public capacity in which we may be and must be associated."

No one denies that conditions today constitute a challenge to the church. But how is the church going to meet this challenge? was asked. The average man believes that Christ is the hope of the shattered world, but what does he do toward carrying that belief into action? Man says he believes that Jesus' ideal of comradeship and of the brotherhood of man is the solution of the problems—but "the question staring us in the face is 'Are we putting ourselves into the solution of this?' We are all disciples of Christ but have we taken pains to carry out His teaching? It means setting out on the greatest adventure of faith and sacrifice to win the world to God."

Bishop Lyons said that the spirit of standing shoulder to shoulder as in the awful days of the war was the spirit which should dominate the church and its membership.

A questionnaire was sent out to a number of persons asking what the greatest need was. The answers came back almost the same: "We want the Gospel of Jesus Christ." But the sender of the questionnaire was not satisfied. He sent out another asking what the Gospel is and he did not receive one answer. That was proof that the question had not been thought out or else only vague answers would be given. And yet no man can think seriously of any problem without its affecting his life.

Definite Faith

"We must be more definite in our faith," the Bishop affirmed —"that is power, for mere resolutions, pious platitudes, good wishes are not going to get us anywhere."

The Bishop told of a meeting in Christ Church on Saturday evening when parish affairs were discussed and he was pleased to see the evidence of a desire to accomplish something to bring the people in and interest them in the things for which the church stands. "We sometimes think we are overorganized, we marshal our material resources but not always our spiritual resources. I believe we ought to marshal the spiritual first," the Bishop averred.

In the church in the past the great things have not been treated as they should be, in the opinion of the Bishop. Worship had not been treated honestly, man has not given prayer its place. "We know its value when we are in trouble. But we have made worship and prayer sidelines. The secret of the churches' power is in the Spirit of God," was the Bishop's statement.

Spiritual Basis

Organization to acme of perfection will not be permanent unless it is spiritual, so that the world will feel its impact. "We believe in Jesus as the Saviour of the world. We believe in Jesus as the incarnate Son of God. Do we go out and act as if we believed this faith as a living faith that will move us to become missionaries for God?"

The mission of the church is to preach the Gospel in the world. It does not mean merely the preaching of the Gospel but world evangelisation of the social, economic and religious order and contact with all the relationships of life, personal and international.

The Bishop addressed the class some length, and congratulated e parish and rector on having so rge a number of candidates. He rged the confirmed to have the pward look, and not to look for the ay spots in the world.

During the service the organist r. Cyril Waite and choir rendered "Come Holy Ghost Our Souls Inpire" to plainsong melody, the setng being full of Gregorian music the ninth century.

PIPES FREEZE ON MILD DAYS

City Electric Thawing Machine is Kept Busy

Working steadily all day Sunday with their electric thawing machine, emergency crews of the city waterworks department had made some progress in the work of thawing hundreds of frozen water services to private residences in all sections of the city. On Monday since early in the morning they were again on the job attempting to make some headway in the numberless other services that had become frozen in spite of the comparative softness of the weather. The break in the weather, it was reported at the office of Mr. E. T. Austin, manager, had only aggravated the condition and had resulted in just as many freezeups as on the coldest day, Friday. Work on thawing the pipes will be speeded up this week with the return of the large thawing machine which had been sent to Toronto some weeks ago for repairs. Since then employees had depended on the smaller and slower machine for thawing purposes.

CHURCH SOCIETIES JOINT MEETING

The joint meeting of the W.A. and W.M.S. took place in the Tabernacle Church parlors on Thursday, February 8th, with a very fair attendance.

The meeting opened with a short song service, Mrs. Lent, president of the W.A. conducted the first half and Mrs. Proats, president of the W.M.S. conducted the remainder.

Hymns "True Hearted, Whole Hearted" and "My Father is Rich in Houses and Lands," also O Worship the King" were sung followed with prayer by Mrs. Lent and the regular business of the W.A. was carried out.

This was followed by the business of the W.M. Society. Mrs. Shorey was appointed delegate with Mrs. Paul as alternate to the W.M.S. Presbyterial to be held in Napanee on March 14th and 15th. Mrs. Kelly conducted the Watch Tower on China, assisted by Mrs. C. Lent and Mrs. M. Phillips.

Mrs. Naylor gave a paper on "Temperance." Hymn, "Sound the Battlecry" was sung and Miss Verna Walmsley of the C.G.I.T. favored with two readings.

The Worship Service was conducted next with Mrs. C. Hogle and Mrs. Bailey taking the responsive readings and prayer. A very appropriate trio was sung by Mrs. Duff, Mrs. Post and Mrs. Wallace. Mrs. Wardner read the Scripture lesson, Matthew 26, verses 1 to 12 and verse 40. Hymn, "Never in a Costly Palace" was used; all joining in this hymn.

Mrs. Proats gave a very fine paper on "Time and Opportunity." Mrs. Lent closed the meeting with the Mizpah Benediction after which a social hour was spent.

Queen's Actors in First Place

(J.R.L.)

The second Regional Drama Festival, concluded on the evening of February 10, when the Queen's University Dramatic Guild offering of "Submerged" was announced as the play receiving the highest standing. "Marco Millions," by Eugene O'Neill, presented by the "Ottawa Drama League" took second place with "The Quiet Game" by Ellis O. Jones, played by the "Cobourg Drama and Music Club" third.

The adjudicator, Mr Rupert Harvey was not prepared to place the other competing groups in regard to their relative standing, so this will not be known for some days. The adjudicator was quite free with his criticism which was wholly constructive and greatly appreciated. He took infinite care to point out mistakes and told how they might be remedied.

Reviewing the "Young Thespian" entry, "They Refuse to be Resurrected" the adjudicator was quite encouraging. The chief fault to be found however was the placing of the author on the stage. Mr. Harvey contended that if the author, instead of being placed in the centre of the stage, had been removed to the side, the effect could have been greatly increased, and this important character would have been visible throughout the entire play, instead of being momentarily blocked by the other members of the case, as was the case.

Commenting on the make-up, the adjudicator found it to be quite adequate as also were the costumes and properties. Enunciation was quite clear as also were the characterizations and movements.

The cast, Sylvia Tett, Harold Carruthers, Douglas Newby, Jack Carmichael and the director, Miss N. P. Merry have every reason to feel satisfied with their performance, as those of the audience who were interviewed later, were quite loud in their praise of the Belleville players' performance.

Before commencing his criticisms of the various plays Mr. Harvey drew to the attention of the distinguished and appreciative assembly the fact that the Belleville players had to make their debut as the first play in the festival, and so were at somewhat of a disadvantage, opening as it were on a cold house. This made it extremely difficult for the players to capture the atmosphere of fantasy that was so necessary to the success of the play, and earned from the adjudicator sincere congratulations on their success in ceating this atmosphere in spite of the adverse conditions mentioned.

Some exceedingly loyal Thespians were present to encourage the players and although quite in the minority did much in causing the players to give their fine performance.

However, even with these supporters the Thespians were far from being well represented and it is indeed to be regretted that this support came almost entirely from the staff and Green Room Club of the Collegiate.

The "Queen's Guild" winners of first place were well supported. "Ottawa," almost twice as far from Kingston as Belleville; was exceedingly well represented. The Cobourg group also were well represented. This seems to point to something, and there can now be no doubt that the success or failure of the play depends greatly upon the support given to it and the players.

KEEP WATER PIPES OFF STONES ADVICE

"Watch your plumber when the water system of the house is being installed for the first time. Be particularly careful about insulation from the cold, where the pipe enters the house through the stone foundation" warn employees of the waterworks system.

Half the trouble of frozen water services in the city this winter can be traced to the fact that the water pipe has been left resting on a stone or rock, generally a part of the foundation of the house, thru' which the frost is transmitted to the easily frozen pipe. Several other freeze-ups are caused by the fact that basement or cellar windows are not closed or sufficiently protected. Defects in the water system proper are the least source of trouble, it was stated.

Calls have been received at the waterworks office from residents who wish frozen soil pipes thawed out by the electrical thawing machine.

"To thaw these out with the machine might mean a fire in the upper part of the house caused by a short circuit in the wiring," explained Mr. Austin.

"We'd like to help the people, but we can't take a chance. Our work is only the thawing of the water pipes which have become frozen outside the lot line of the property. For the rest the plumber will have to be called."

JOHN ST. W. M. S.

The regular meeting of the John Street United Church Missionary Society was held in the church hall on Wednesday, February 7th, with the president, Mrs. Moore presiding.

After the Invocation, the Doxology was sung, followed by a welcome by the president to the Young Women's Guild, who were to take charge of the meeting. The subject chosen was the very timely one of "Peace."

Miss Doris Kerr led the devotional period, choosing Hymn 123, "Immortal Love, Forever Full," to open the service. This was followed by a prayer, after which the beautiful "Ceremonial of the Roads" was read. The Scripture reading was very suitable and the devotional period was closed by Hymn 252, "In Christ There is no East Nor West." Mrs. Moore thanked Miss Kerr for the lovely service in which all present had shown a keen interest.

The regular business of the Society was carried on and delegates were appointed for the convention in Napanee on March 14th. Special mention was made of the Day of Prayer on February 16th in which the interest of all will be greatly appreciated.

Miss Gussie Hill was asked to take the chair as leader of the group of the Young Women's Guild who had been asked to present the program. Miss Hill expressed the pleasure of the Guild in being of service to the Missionary Society, and in a few words introduced the subject chosen. A book review on 'Cry Havoc' by Beverley Nichols was read by Mrs. Sam Graham, and the hope was expressed that all should endeavour to read this very startling expose of the business of war. A very informative paper was read by Mrs. H. M. Pyne on the "Causes of War" which dealt only with the immediate events which might draw our country into another terrible war—which Beverley Nichols more clearly terms a "mass murder of civilization."

Paper on Armaments

Mrs. R. L. Sexsmith read an excellent paper on 'Armaments' which spoke very decidedly on the side of "Peace." Mrs. Sexsmith pointed out the various cases which have been so recently revealed—of Shearer in the United States, the Le Creusot plant in France and that of Sir Basil Zuraboff. It was shown what a great net is woven by the arms factories, having branches in so many countries in the world and the great task confronting the people with so great a force in power.

Miss Hill led a short discussion pointing out the part the women of the world can play in preventing future wars. The Women's Missionary Society in particular being a society formed to promote love for other countries, can do much in clearing their hearts of any enmity towards other nationalities. It was proven that Christ had to suffer so much in choosing the right way and so often forsake the sword which would have been the easy way. How then could the Missionary Society, as true followers of Christ, ever sanction war, recruiting sermons or the blessing of a battleship—knowing that these things are strictly unChristlike? Are we true pacifists?

Mrs. Moore closed the meeting with Hymn 350, "Forth in Thy Name, O Lord, I go", which was followed by the Lord's Prayer.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery increases the appetite, eliminates poisons from the intestines, stimulates the digestion, enriches the blood. Read what Mrs. Geo. I could not sleep, felt all tired out and was discouraged. Before I had finished one bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery I felt stronger. When I had taken two bottles I was able to do all my housework—I felt like a new person." All druggists.

500 FISHERMEN ARE SAVED FROM DEATH

Walk Around Break Before Piece of Ice Detached

Buffalo, N.Y., Feb. 12 (AP)—Between 400 and 500 fishermen, believed trapped for a time yesterday on the Lake Erie ice south of here by a sudden break inshore, were safe today.

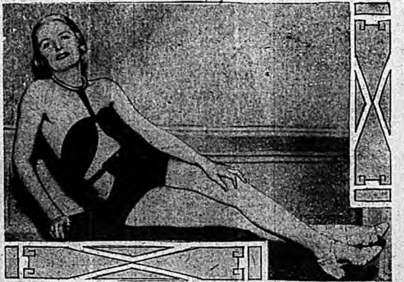
The men were a mile and a half to two miles out when a crack five miles long and from 100 to 300 feet wide appeared between them and shore. They were off Sturgeon Point, Athol Springs and Pinehurst.

The break was discovered while they were still on a peninsula of ice. They started back in time to walk around the break before their Peninsula of ice became a floating island.

TALKIES INCREASE TOLL OF HOLLYWOOD BANKRUPTS

This layout shows some of the leading players in a Hollywood drama which never reached the screen, but which vitally affected those concerned. The drama might appropriately be called "Bankruptcies of 1933", a creation involving $5,000,000 in liabilities of the principals, whose listed assets were less than half that much. Scores of actors, actresses, promoters, directors and writers, a few of whom are above, filed bankruptcy action during the past year, most of which were said to have been due to talking pictures to which they were unable to adapt themselves.

THIS WOULD CAUSE A RIOT IN PLACES OTHER THAN PARIS



We are assured that, at the recent fashion show in Paris at which the pictured mademoiselle burdened her lovely form with the few habiliments that the picture exhibits, the mannequins, no less, blushed when they were asked to march before the assembled folk who paid to see the show. Our fashion commentator on the scene tells us that the costume the lady is wearing, so-to-speak, is green and is for beach wear. It's a fascinating creation when properly shown. It would cause a "Paris riot" in anybody's city, we think.

MRS. WM. ALFORD ENTERTAINS W. A. OF ROSLIN CHURCH

ROSLIN—The burial service for the late Mrs. John Gray of Oshawa was held in the Anglican cemetery on Tuesday at noon.

The Women's Auxiliary held their February meeting at the home of Mrs. Wm. Alford on Tuesday evening. Despite the very cold weather a goodly number were present.

The roll call showed ten members present, also several visitors. The secretary read a number of letters, including a report of the January board meeting and letters of thanks for the clothing sent in for Western relief. The president spoke of a quilt top which had been kindly donated by Mrs. A. Burleigh and it was decided to have a quilting and dinner some time soon. At the close of the meeting a tasty lunch was served by the hostess.

The Women's Association held a dinner and quilting at the home of Mrs. W. Harrison on Wednesday. About fifteen were present. The regularly monthly meeting was also held during the afternoon.

Rev. F. C. and Mrs. Beazer spent the tea hour on Wednesday with Mr. and Mrs. Silas Prindle of Thomasburg.

Mrs. J. Chisholm and Miss E Ramsay spent Tuesday evening with Mr. and Mrs. W. Weir.

Mrs. W. Thompson of Stirling returned to her home on Saturday after spending the past week with her father, Mr. J. Ketcheson.

The Women's Missionary Society held their February meeting at the Manse on Thursday afternoon.

Rev. D. C. Hill and Rev. F. C. Beazer made a number of calls on parishioners near Halloway on Saturday afternoon

Mrs. Norman Alexander has returned home after staying for a time with her mother who has been ill.

Sponsored by the ladies of the Roslin Women's Auxiliary of the Anglican Church a very successful euchre party was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Gray, Latta, on Wednesday, Jan. 31st. The prizes which were donated by Mrs. Gray were won by Mrs. Howard and Mrs. Parks and Mr. W. Gray and Mr. W Gillespie. The receipts of the evening were gratifying as over one hundred people were in attendance. At midnight refreshments were served after which music was furnished by Mr. Clayton Hall and Mrs. Fitchett and at 2 o'clock the happy function was brought to a close.

CONTROLLING EXCHANGES

Interest has centred upon the announced program of President Roosevelt's NRA to regulate the exchanges with the purpose of the protection of the public. Action is expected to follow very shortly. What immediate effect the new rules which demand sixty pen cent. equity on margins, and deal with wash sales, manipulation of prices through pools and information sent out by tip, by wire, by pamphlet, or by other insinuating methods, remains to be seen. But in the long run the booming of prices will probably not be so high, nor the declines so great as under the present system when so much is bought on the margin by buyers who cannot pay off the balance in case of a severe reaction.

It is planned that directors of corporations must reveal their operations in their own securities. Attempt is going to be made to prevent the insider from profiting at the expense of the unwitting person on the outside.

Too long the manipulation of stocks has been permitted and there is not the slightest doubt that booms on the stock market are not good unless they are indicative of general prosperity, not a false prosperity such as grew mushroom-like overnight in the years prior to the break of 1929.

Ten year terms in prison are promised men who conduct disreputable business in stocks, by "matched" and "washed sales" and pool operations.

While no one can prevent a public opinion on anything developing, either a boom feeling or a bear feeling, which will undoubtedly affect prices, yet the worst parts of the present system surely have been waiting for Mr. Roosevelt or some one else to come along and protect the public.

The importance to Canada of this legislation is that this country's exchanges will no doubt have to follow the action of exchanges in the United States.

COLD WEATHER AND CARS

"Warm Weather Batteries" is the subject of an editorial in the Woodstock Sentinel Review, a natural commentary after the difficulties automobile owners experienced last week with unusually low temperatures. Battery trouble the Sentinel Review says was the cause of most of the trouble because the severe cold affects the efficiency of the type of battery used in motorcars and the self-starter takes a great deal of current. The newspaper goes on to say:

"It does seem that there is room for improvement in this important feature of the motorcar. Every season brings new trends in body design, changes of greater or less importance in the power plant, refinements in accessories, and now a radical departure in front axles. If batteries are any better than they were years ago. the fact has not been demonstrated this winter.

"When a well known motor car company submitted not long ago a questionnaire to motorists throughout the Dominion, car owners were invited to 'vote for the general characteristics that they considered most important. First in the list when the ballots were counted was 'Dependability.' Now dependable starting is governed by the battery, and a cold climate makes special demands. But among thousands of suggestions received by the company only one, so far as we can find, relates to the battery, and it recommends heavy duty batteries to guard against flying rocks.

"A good battery costs $12 or $15, and that money should be all for utility; the unit is out of sight and appearance is unimportant. Two motorists recently volunteered the opinion that car batteries do not live as long as formerly. A breakdown in the operation of the present-day motor is unusual: tires give more mileage, bodies stand up better, but battery trouble seems to be accepted as one of those things to be expected. If a greater part of the United States had severe winters, it is highly probable that batteries more efficient in cold weather would have been evolved long ago. Automotive science can achieve wonders when there is sufficient incentive. When it turns its attention to storage batteries, it is to be hoped the result will be something less expensive, light enough to be placed in a more accessible location and not so susceptible to the influence of Jack Frost."

READING

More non-fiction is being read by adult borrowers at the Corby Public Library, according to the annual report of the local institution. This goes hand in hand with the reading of less fiction.

Is this one of the results of the depression period with the enforced idleness of men for at least a portion of their time? Does it mean that a more serious mood is developing? Is it possible that real life is so real that some fiction does not appear real enough as the earnest life which exists around about? It has been said that fiction is one of the means of escape from reality but today while this relief is needed, there is just the possibility that the idea of tears wasted over a heroine who never existed does not quite suit the stern reality of today, and the grim determination of those who find themselves battling against a condition of a poor labor market.

The reading record is doubtless a barometer of something. But what that something is, may be difficult to say in very definite detail.

PSYCHIC

When something in me shrinks away
From certain voice or eyes,
I do not stop, I do not stay
To question mysteries.
Although it is in wretched taste,
Uncouth and very rude,
I run away in utmost haste
As though my friends pursued.

And, when it happens otherwise,
Somebody comes along
Who with his laughter or his eyes
Turns sighing into song,
Again I make no questionairre
Of things too deep to see;
I set him out a plate, a chair
And bid him sup with me!

NO MORE KNITTING in the public gallery of the House of Commons at Ottawa. Thus has the order gone forth that will take the click out of Commons debate. The ladies, God Bless 'Em, are welcome to sit in the gallery and listen to the debates or take a nap or do a bit of whispered gossiping, but no more knitting. The knitting vogue started with the war and has not entirely subsided as yet—women felt then that they had to be doing something for the boys over there and both in public and private plied the needles which found expression later in socks and sweaters and mufflers—and many's a sock saw active service as a touque, and they sure did keep the ears warm. So, the knitting needles, although they are few, must stop in the House of Commons so that the clicking of the needles will not conflict with the clicking of the speeches—or somefin.

REAL OLD FASHIONED WINTER is what this season is called, and to hear some folks talk one would think that there never was a winter like this one before. As a matter of fact the past few mild winters have made us soft and weakened our memory. It isn't so long ago that most men wore fur hats all winter, and few were without at least some kind of headgear with earlaps and perhaps a fur lining which could be dropped down to keep the neck warm. 'Member when we wore mocassins and several pair of woollen socks? Winter weather? Why this isn't a patch on the winters we used to have when the roads were drifted high with snow and the wood sleighs cut new trails through the fields on account of the pitch-holes worn in the roads. 'Member the long line of wood sleighs wending their leisurely way townward with loads and hurrying back to the country empty, and how we used to hook a ride on the empty ones and ride back on the loaded ones? Coal was more of a novelty then and wood was the standard fuel. 'Member the mitts and mufflers and heavy underclothes, and sometimes two pair of trousers? What the heck! What's all the shouting about for a little cold weather occasionally? No wood to cut, now—no thawing out of the pump—coal and coal oil heating besides electric auxiliary heaters, electric lights, and all the comforts of home undreamed of when grandad was a lad. And yet spring came.

DELUSIONS NOT SYMPTOM OF INSANITY

Normal Individuals May Have Delusions And Hallucinations

By Louis E. Bisch, M. D., Ph. D.
Famous Authority on Health and Psychology.

It is not generally known that delusions and hallucinations may appear in perfectly normal individuals.

A delusion is really a mistake of judgment, while an hallucination is a mistake made by one of the senses.

If, for example, an individual believes that the day is Sunday when in reality it is Tuesday or some other day, then that individual is suffering from a delusion. Such a person, however, will correct his error when his attention is drawn to the calendar or to the daily newspaper, or some other evidence is brought forward to prove that he is in error.

But an insane person would act quite differently when confronted by evidence to show that he is in the wrong in this particular. No matter what proof might be brought forward to show him that the day is not Sunday, he would still insist that it is.

This emphasizes the cardinal difference between sane and insane delusions. In insane delusions there is no appeal to the patient's reasoning.

Another characteristic to be noted in the insane delusion is the fact that it is quite out of harmony with the patient's station in life and past experiences. As an example of this one might mention the case of a man in the poorhouse who insisted that he had more money than Henry Ford and Rockefeller put together. Each day he would sign checks amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars, which he distributed freely to the attendants and other inmates.

As regards hallucinations, any of the senses or several at one and the same time may be affected. Should I insist that there is a clock on the wall when in reality none is there, I am suffering from an hallucination of sight. Should I hear the ringing of bells or a buzzing sound, or voices, or music, when no such sounds are actually being produced, I would be suffering from an hallucination of hearing.

Should I drink a glass of pure and tasteless water but insist that it is salted or poisoned, then I would be suffering from an hallucination of taste. Should an individual smell foul odors, which so many of the insane claim they do, then an hallucination of smell be the diagnosis.

Persons who are suffering from an insanity often harbor several kinds of hallucinations as well as delusions. These ideas and feelings are just as real to them as they would be to a normal individual if they actually existed. Often, through special psychological procedures, one can determine why and how these mistakes of the mind develop. In fact, that is one of the ways in which insanity is treated.

Insane patients sometimes give up one set of ideas but supplant them with another set. Sometimes it is very difficult to determine whether hallucinations or delusions exist because the patients are very suspicious and are unwilling to divulge what they really think and feel.

There are also types of cases where these cardinal symptoms of insanity are not noted at all. Always, however, the insane individual shows a distinct and complete separation from reality and always does he insist that he is right and the world all wrong.

A one hundred-calorie portion of lemon ice, which is a scant half cup, contains neither protein nor fat, the calories of energy being obtained solely from its carbohydrate make-up. A one hundred-calorie portion of peach ice cream, on the other hand—and this is only a one-quarter cupful — yields but forty-five calories from its carbohydrate content, four from its protein ingredients and as much as fifty-one calories from its fat.

REV. MR. SMITH REITERATES CHARGE MADE

Speaking at Windsor Says Organized Attempt Made To Kill Buck

OUT ON BAIL

Appealing For Funds For Defence on Sedition Indictment

Windsor, Ont., Feb. 12.—Tim Buck, central figure in the Communist trials of 1932, escaped death "not through lack of intention but because of lack of stature," declared Rev. A. E. Smith, general secretary of the Canadian Labor Defence League, in reiterating his charge an organised attempt had been made to assassinate Buck during the Kingston penitentiary riots.

Rev. Mr. Smith reiterated his charge at a meeting here last night. He is at present free on $10,000 bail, pending trial February 19 in Toronto on a sedition charge. He was indicted for a statement allegedly made at a meeting in Toronto when it is charged he declared: "I charge Bennett and hold him practically responsible for the shooting at Tim Buck in his cell when five shots were fired at him. I say deliberately that Bennett gave the order to shoot Tim Buck in his cell in cold blood with intent to murder him. It was an order given from Bennett to Guthrie and from Guthrie to the warden."

Only Window Broken.

In his address last night Mr. Smith claimed there were seventy-six windows along the cell block and that Tim Buck's window was the only one broken. "If Tim Buck had been two inches taller he would have been shot to death," Mr. Smith declared. His address was an appeal for funds for his defence on the sedition indictment.

Mr. Smith declared "a man came into my office yesterday" who said he had counted eleven different places where burkshot spattered the walls of Tim Buck's cell.

Mr. Smith maintained the trial of the leaders did not interfere with the Communist movement. "The best way to suppress us would be to examine into Kingston and prove we are telling lies but he (Premier Bennett) dare not do it." He claimed the government had stopped the Beauharnois probe "just as it began to invade the area of the government."

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATED

112th Birthday of Bridge St. Sunday School is Observed

Sunday, the Sunday School of Bridge Street United Church observed with special services throughout the day, the 112th anniversary of its founding. The Rev. Harry Pawson of Trinity United Church Napanee, preached in the morning, especially to the young and very young of the congregation. In the afternoon at 2.45 o'clock an open session was held in the Sunday School rooms, with Mr. Taylor Franklin, of Albert College, as speaker. And the evening service was conducted by the Rev. R. T. Richards, pastor of Grace United Church of Napanee. The evening hour following worship in the church, had as guest speaker the Rev. W. Harold Reid of this city.

Morning Service for Young

Scholars of Bridge Street Sunday School in a body occupied the front seats of the church yesterday morning at their school's 112th anniversary service, and the junior choir of 20 mixed voices, surpliced in white, had a position on the platform in front of the choir, they contributed a chorus following the reading of the Lesson. The orchestra of the school led by Duncan Lewis played for the congregational singing, while the morning offering was being collected, and as the congregation left the church at the close of the service. Hymns of the morning were "Faith of Our Fathers, Living Still," "What a Fellowship, What a Joy Divine," and "O Master Let Me Walk With Thee."

Mr. Joseph E. Shortt, Sunday School superintendent, was with the Rev. Mr. Pawson at the pulpit and led in the first prayer of the service. It fell to Mr. Shortt's pleasurable lot to introduce Mr. Pawson to the congregation and this he most eloquently accomplished.

The Rev. Mr. Pawson in his opening remarks said he had had specific directions from Dr. Semple to make his address to the children and younger people this morning, as children had generally to listen to sermons to grown-ups this morning the older folks would have to hear a sermon to the young.

Mr. Pawson's address or talk was punctuated throughout with stories appealing to boys and girls, as he explained "what made a house" or as he would rather call it a home. The walls of the home were honesty, honour and mutual trust built upon truth. The wealth of home is in its children and the affection and trust mutual throughout the members of the family. The beauty of the home is in harmony, good humour and self control, which produce cheerfulness and joy and peace. The food of a home is thoughtfulness and unselfishness, and the joy of a home is found in love. Very carefully the Rev. Mr. Pawson told of these attributes of a home and so simply he laid his points before his young and youthful hearers that all was made plain and understandable to them.

SPRAYED WITH BURNING OIL

Mrs. James Flynn, London, Dies And Son Critically Burned

London, Ont., Feb. 12—(CP)—Walter Flynn, 40, lay in hospital today, critically burned by fire in his home Saturday that killed his mother, Mrs. James Flynn, 79, and burned his wife, not seriously.

Fire in the Flynn home followed explosion of a can of motor oil which was being heated on a stove. The rush of flame trapped Mrs. James Flynn in her bedroom, from which she was dragged by a Boy Scout, 17-year-old Allan Beirnes.

The woman was rushed to hospital and died of shock eight hours later. Her son was standing near the stove when the oil exploded. He was sprayed from head to foot with the flaming fluid, which turned him into a living torch.

Doctors said his burns covered such an extensive area of his body there was little hope for his recovery.

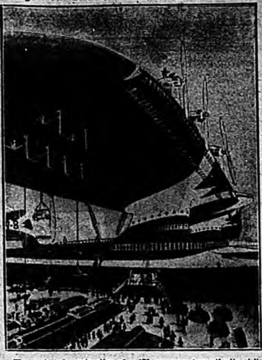
Huge New German 'Plane Under Construction



The projected construction of a 170-passenger transatlantic airliner by the Rumpler Aircraft Company of Germany, once again revives the dream of giant aircraft, the size of present-day ocean liners, to span the oceans between sunrise and sunset. The ABOVE shows one artist's conception of the "Aeroplane of the Future" as it would appear at a loading dock, taking on passengers and freight for its hop to foreign shores. A craft of this type would carry 1,500 passengers in addition to the huge amount of baggage, freight, mail and autos. The aeroplane designed by the Rumpler company is a bit more conservative, carrying but 170 passengers and 13,000 pounds of mail and freight. It has a wing span of 288 feet and will be powered by 10 motors of 1,000 horsepower each. The ship, a flying boat, will weigh 72 tons and will carry a pay load of 20 tons at a speed of 187 miles-per-hour, or fast enough to span the route from Berlin to New York in about seventeen hours.

REV. COUGHLIN PREDICTS WAR NEXT SPRING

Says Japan And Russia Will Fight and Precipitate Whole World

STRONG ADDRESS

Claims Every Man Has Right to Living And Honorable Wage

Detroit, Feb. 12 (AP)—Rev. Father Charles E. Coughlin said in a speech yesterday it was "an open secret" that Russia and Japan are preparing for war and that another "world conflagration" is likely next spring.

"It is a secret known to many," he said, "that Britain may finance Japan against Russia, and that perhaps the United States will be asked to finance Russia against Japan.

"If there is another world conflict," he declared, "there will be another world-wide system of finance, different from capitalism.

Father Coughlin devoted much of his regular Sunday talk to defending the right of Catholics to "condemn the modern system of industrialism and capitalism, that has taken profit to itself and left bread lines and suffering in the midst of plenty." He quoted at length from a Papal Encyclical of 1931 which, he said, showed that "Catholicism stands behind the principles of the National Recovery Administration." He said pronouncements of the church declare it the duty of the government "to protect the laborer by establishing what is a just and honest wage, and not leaving that to the greed of the individual."

He interpreted a reference in the encyclical to a "two fold aspect of private property, individual and social," the giving to Catholics the right to urge public ownership of public necessities. A major objection to public ownership, he said, has been that it is "Socialistic and Non-Christian."

"Shall we permit a degraded capitalism and a degraded industrialism to enslave the world? This is not a contest between capitalism and radicalism, but between Christianity and Paganism," he added.

OFFICERS OF ARGYLLS ARE RE-ELECTED

At a recent meeting of the Argyll Chapter I.O.D.E., officers who served during the past year were all unanimously re-elected to again fill their respective offices for 1934. The regent of the Chapter, Mrs. E. A. Geen occupied the chair and in reviewing the work of the past twelve months mentioned, especially, the splendid, unsolicited donation which had been received from Miss Hattie Hudson of Toronto. Miss Hudson's thoughtful and substantial benificience had privileged the Chapter to more extensively carry through its charitable work amongst the needy worthy families of the community.

Entertainments sponsored by the Chapter had enabled it to award the annual scholarships to Belleville Collegiate Institute and Vocational School and make contributions to the local Children's Shelter, the Victorian Order of Nurses, the Grenfell Mission, and the Stewart Endowmen Fund, as well as carry on the yearly work among the city's deserving needy. Members had also done a considerable amount of sewing of children's garments during the past twelve months and these were sincerely appreciated by families receiving them. During the year a Past Regent of the Chapter had passed away in the person of Mrs. Charles Vanderwater and her death was most regrettable to all members.

Throughout, Mrs. Geen said in conclusion, it had been a most agreeable year amongst the members of the Chapter and worthwhile good had been accomplished.

Mrs. J. G. Caldwell presented the secretary's report which met with unanimous endorsation, and the treasurer's report was made by Mrs. J. Edgar Bateman. This showed the Argyll Chapter to be in a most satisfactory monetary condition with a substantial bank balance to start the orgnistion's activities for the coming twelve months.

Officers re-elected were:
Regent—Mrs. E. A. Geen.
Vice-Regent—Mrs. A. B. Gribble.
Secretary—Mrs. J. G. Caldwell.
Treasurer—Mrs J. Edgar Bateman.
Standard Bearer—Mrs. Gordon Miller.

SESSION TO BE SCRAPPY

Members of Parliament Just Warming up to Work

Ottawa, Feb. 12—Lowering clouds of barbed oratory which interrupted Commons proceedings half a dozen times on Friday herald a stormy session of Parliament, in the belief of political observers at the Capital.

Two and one-half weeks of what is expected to be a five-month session have flown, and every indication has been given that issues are to be contested with vigor and tenacity. The probable three weeks' duration of the debate on the Address —it already has lasted two weeks— is perhaps a fair sessional barometer.

As the session moves on into its real business and legislative era, the one man in Parliament who has brought attention upon himself by his moderation of conduct and utterance is Prime Minister Richard B. Bennett himself. In other sessions a quick and free dispenser of the cutting word, the Prime Minister this session, apparently with studied deliberativeness, has changed his ways.

Friday found him in the role of the peacemaker, who, by a quick interjection of courtesy, stemmed an incipient rebellion against the ruling of Speaker Black. The Premier followed up his initial diplomatic success with a quick repetition when he suggested to Alan W Neill, Independent Liberal from British Columbia, that, "upon reflection," he thought Mr. Neill would desire to withdraw a charge of lack of courtesy levelled at the Speaker.

The debate on the Address will finish Thursday or Friday—so the party Whips prophesy—after which the Commons will move immediately into supply, and also receive some of the tremendously important legislation which awaits consideration. This week also will see Hon. Harry Stevens's business probe in action, and it is expected its investigations at times may create an interest exceeding that which centres on the doings of Parliament itself.

Two front-benches from the Liberal Party will participate in the debate on the Address early this week. They are Hon. James Ralston, financial critic, and Hon. Ian Mackenzie, who is regarded as a certain member of any Liberal Government which might be formed Federally after the next election.

A Little Pump Controls Your Life Stream

The world's most wonderful pump is the human heart. It pumps blood faster than a strong man can pump water from a well—and this despite the fact that blood is seven times as sticky as water and, in consequence, is ever so much harder to pump.

This marvellous piece of human machinery keeps your blood stream in constant motion. It pumps the red blood corpuscles—loaded with vital Oxygen from the lungs—to your millions of body cells. After unloading the Oxygen, the red corpuscles load up with the gas poison forever being generated in the human system. The heart pumps this poison to the lungs, to be breathed out of the system. If your heart were to stop pumping, you would die in a few seconds for lack of oxygen.

Now in order to do their work effectively, your red blood corpuscles must be rich in what is known as haemoglobin—a substance having the power to absorb the oxygen and the poisonous gas. When your haemoglobin is below normal, your blood stream is weak, and you feel "tired-out", run-down and nervously-exhausted. Restore the haemoglobin to normal, and you are once more strong, energetic and vigorous.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will do that very thing. This is not just a claim; it is an established fact, recently proven at a hospital where 40 people, treated with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, each recorded splendid blood improvement and, with it, renewed health and vigor.*

You will be benefitted in the same way. Try a month's treatment. 50 cents a package at your Druggist's.

LESSON 5

MEAT, POULTRY, FISH

In this lesson, I want to give to my students an understanding of meat cookery; and because they are so closely related, I am going to talk also about the cooking of poultry and of fish.

There are two main methods of cooking meats—and a third method which to some extent combines the other two:

General Methods of Cooking.

1. By applying intense heat for at least long enough to seal in the juices, as we do when we roast or broil. Suitable for tender cuts.
2. By long, slow cooking in water—as when we simmer meats (stewing). Suitable for cuts not naturally tender.
3. Combining these two methods—as when we first sear meat, then cook it in a covered vessel with water (braising and pot-roasting). Suitable for medium tender cuts.

I am not going to discuss how to choose meats in this lesson, because you will find all of that information in my little book, "Marketing and Meal-Planning," which I hope every student of these lessons will have. You will learn in it exactly what cuts you can buy to make each kind of meat dish to advantage.

Roasting Meats.

Prepare the roast, according to its needs. Wipe over with a damp cloth. Season all surfaces with salt and pepper, and if you like a very brown and slightly crusty surface, dredge with a little flour. Put meat on a trivet (a low rack) in roasting pan, with plenty of suitable fat.

Have oven ready at right time—very hot, 500° F. Put meat in at this high temperature until its surfaces are seared—that means, closed up, so that all the juice is held inside the meat. Turn roast over until all sides are browned.

Reduce heat of oven as soon as roast is well browned; finish cooking at 350° F.—moderate heat.

If using open roaster, baste the meat by lifting the hot fat with a long-handled spoon and pouring it over the top of the meat—about every 15 minutes.

If using a self-basting covered coaster, put on cover when roast has been browned.

Sometimes it is more convenient to start roast when oven is first lighted—and many modern authorities advocate this method—the inevitable one if an automatically started oven is to be used to full advantage. In that case, add the extra time required to that given in instructions.

BEEF—Brush cut surface with soft fat, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and with flour, if liked. Sear and finish by roasting rules. A meat thermometer offers the only real certainty (except long experience) of time required—because roasts differ so much in size, cut and kind. Less time is needed by meat with large bone than by thick solid piece; a small cut requires a different time per pound from that needed by a large roast. You will have to learn to adjust all differences—or as suggested, use a meat thermometer. Allow 15 to 20 minutes to the pound, for rare to medium-done beef.

LAMB—(a) Leg, loin, rack or rolled shoulder—same as beef.

Allow lamb 20 minutes to the pound.

VEAL—Because it is very lean, a solid cut of veal such as the fillet or cushion (the top of the leg) or the shoulder, should be "larded". This means that thin strips of salt pork or fat side bacon are put into a larding-needle, and drawn through the solid meat, an inch or so apart. Or slashes may be cut in the meat and thin slices of the very fat pork or bacon slipped into the cuts. This gives delicious flavor to the mild veal while adds the fat it needs. Use bacon fat if possible for basting veal while cooking. Allow 25 minutes to the pound.

PORK—A loin of pork, the richest roast, is naturally fat and needs only seasoning A boned shoulder may be filled with stuffing flavoured with sage (or other herbs) and onion. A solid piece like the butt (a convenient and economical roast, particularly good for slicing cold) may have chopped onion and a tiny bit of sage pressed into deep cuts made in the meat, if you like the flavour this gives. Allow 30 minutes to the pound.

HAM—Any but the finest ham should be boiled before baking. Put 1 cup molasses, 2 carrots cut lengthwise, 2 stalks celery, in the water. Cool ham in its liquor. Peel off skin (it comes off very easily) before baking. Rub with equal parts dry mustard, cinnamon and cloves, twice as much flour as you have mixture, and maple syrup or corn syrup to make paste, or use seasonings only. To bake, score fat in diamonds, cover with a coating of equal parts fine sifted dry crumbs and brown sugar, (paprika adds rich color and flavour too), stick a whole clove in each diamond and bake until brown—allowing time to heat thoroughly also, if ham was cold.

Braising and Pot Roasting.

For the medium tender cuts of meat, the combination type of cooking, braising or pot roasting is very suitable. It gives the rich nutty roasted flavor, but with added long slow cooking, its fibres are softened and it becomes tender as the higher-priced cuts. In our little book on "Marketing and Meal Planning," I tell you what to buy for pot roasts.

There is little difference between braising and pot roasting. Sprinkle the meat with salt, pepper and flour and either brown it in a very hot oven the same as for a tender roast, or brown all the surfaces in a very hot, greased frying pan.

Then put the meat either into a covered roaster or baking dish, or a covered pot for top-stove use. Add a small amount (about 2/3 cup) of boiling water and allow the meat to cook slowly in the steam, keeping closely covered. Allow 3 or 4 hours slow cooking—enough to make meat thoroughly tender. The less tender the cut is naturally, the longer it needs to be gently cooked. Add a little more water if necessary.

Part way through cooking, dice vegetables may be placed in a thick layer under the meat—carrot, turnip, onion, celery. The flavors all blend—a delicious mixture.

Sometimes we slash beef in 6 to 10 places and slip a strip of fat salt pork or bacon into each cut before cooking as a pot roast.

Broiling and Pan-Broiling; Frying.

Suitable for Tender Cuts—Steaks, Chops, Tenderloins, Meat Cakes, Ham Slices, etc.

REAL BROILING—Wipe meat with damp cloth, remove extra fat, rub heated broiler wires with some of it. Brush meat over with melted butter, bacon fat, oil or French dressing. Place it in broiler and cook by exposing to strong direct heat from clear fire, electric element or gas flame. Sear one side, then turn, and brown other side; turn every half minute till cooked. Allow chops 8 to 15 minutes, a 1-inch steak 5 to 8 minutes, 1½ inch steak rare, 7 to 12 minutes; longer if preferred well done; season, serve on hot platter, garnish. The rich juices caught in the broiling pan, act as gravy. Butter is added to steak, fish, etc.

PAN BROILING—Wipe and trim meat; rub very hot frying pan with pieces of fat; sear meat quickly on both sides, then reduce heat and turn meat every half minute. (Never thrust fork into the lean meat.) Keep pan free from fat. Allow same time as for broiling.

FRYING—Bacon should be put in a cold pan; cook over slow heat, pouring off extra fat so bacon will crisp. Sliced ham or lean back bacon usually needs its fat. To fry meats, (most are better broiled or pan-broiled) heat pan and fat; cook meat, turning until suitably cooked on both sides. For breaded chops, coat with seasoned sifted crumbs, dip in diluted slightly-beaten egg, coat well with crumbs, and fry in hot deep fat. Sometimes it is well to drain off fat, add milk or water to half depth of chops, cover and cook slowly for ½ hour longer. This may be done in a moderate oven.

Stew or Pot Pie.

STEWING MEAT—Cut meat in small pieces, dredge with salt, pepper and flour, brown in very hot fat in frying pan, then turn into a kettle with any bones and trimmings and add boiling water—1 quart to each 1½ pounds meat; cover closely and simmer gently, KEEPING ALWAYS BELOW BOILING POINT, until completely tender—an average of about 3 hours.

An hour before finishing, add such vegetables as cut-up carrots, celery, turnips, parsnips, potatoes, onions (the onions may be browned in pan before the meat); season stew with salt, pepper, sweet herbs, a little bit of bay leaf or a few cloves, with celery salt or dried leaves—just whatever seasonings you like best.

Dumplings are good with stew—make them by either the standard flour method or prepared flour method, as you learned in Lesson 3. A border of plain boiled rice or macaroni increases the food value, or either one may be added, uncooked, to stew, as may pearl barley, tapioca, sago, coarse hominy or oat flakes. Allow time to become tender.

EXPRESS THANKS FOR HAPPY WEDDED LIFE

Special Service Arranged by Wycombe Rector

WYCOMBE, England, Feb. 12.—(CP Cable)—Married couples by the score marched out of the church at High Wycombe yesterday to the strains of the wedding march, repeating an experience of 50 years ago in some cases.

The service was arranged by Rector, Rev. W. F. Ploat, who incidentally is a bachelor, to enable couples married at the church to express their thanks for a happy wedded life. The longest wedded couple were Alderman and Mrs. W. E. Ellis, married nearly 60 years ago and recently re-married. At the other end of this unusual scale were young couples, who had scarcely subdued the blushes of a week or two ago.

Letters to The Editor

NAME OF PARK

Belleville, Feb. 9, 1934
Editor, Ontario Intelligencer,
Dear Sir,—

There is only one logical name for our new park, "Sagonaska Park." If we give it this name it will be a name not only beautiful and historic but in unison with and commemoration of our noble Red Men of pre-historic days. If we do this we will atone for that slur we cast on them when to please an English aristocrat we renamed our beautiful river Moira River in place of Sagonaska River, also we will have luck with our park and it will be a joy forever If we do not then it will ever be a disappointment to us in punishment for not rectifying and atoning to our Indian Race for our injustice and insult bestowed on them when we now have the chance.

Yours truly,
Anon.

WATERMAN'S PEN COMPANY CELEBRATE FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Genius of Pen Inventor Changed the Writing Habits of the World

When the late Mr. Lewis E. Waterman set himself to fashion a fountain pen that would be something more than a novelty, he was planning the foundation of an enterprise that has changed the world's writing habits. And while, in the little one room shop back of a cigar store where he laboured, he doubtless did appreciate the importance of his work, his vision could scarcely encompass the growth of the business he established or the way in which the fountain pen was to turn the labour of writing into actual writing pleasure.

From that modest beginning half a century ago, when 200 "Waterman's" were produced by hand in the little back-room, the Company that bears the name of its founder, Lewis Edson Waterman, has grown to world-wide proportions, its annual output of pens now numbered in the millions supplying the present-day demand for Waterman's.

The development of the L. E. Waterman Company, Limited, dates back to the year 1896, first established in a small warehouse at 107 St. James Street, West, Montreal. The steady progress of this great Canadian enterprise necessitated the opening of a complete, modern factory, in St. Lambert, and eventually, in 1909, a building was purchased at 261 St. James Street, West, in the heart of the financial district, for a permanent general office and warehouse. Mr. Frank D. Waterman, who originally established the business in Canada, was then, and is at the present time, President of the Company.

With the approach of its 50th Anniversary, on February 12th, we felicitate the L. E. Waterman Company, Limited and extend our best wishes for a continuance of their phenomenal expansion and success.

LEGISLATION TO LAST MANY YEARS

remain permanently. Secretary Ickes, a spokesman for the administration in the field of its social program, remarked in New York only last week that 'while applying immediate social remedies, the administration has not been blind to the necessity of long-range planning,' and for those who might doubt whether we could afford the measures undertaken toward such a goal he added: 'Nor will such a social program as we have been discussing, cause a strain on our economic system. The contrary rather. To satisfy legitimate wants, to encourage greater consumption of goods, means for orders for factories, increased travel, a stimulation of commercial life. Fortunately a higher standard of living fits perfectly into the offensive being waged against depression.'

On your side of the border you are marching toward recovery by taking steps with no less determination than we are, but in a more conservative way. It is interesting to think that on two sides of an imaginary line some thousands of miles long, such different approaches to similar problems are being used.

"In an interview in The New York Times some time ago, the Honorable H. H. Stevens, your Minister of Trade and Commerce, commented upon the Canadian point of view with respect to our recovery policies. He spoke most tactfully and courteously in pointing out that many of the steps which the United States found it necessary to take had already been taken in Canada. He said that your country had been confronted with no such banking situation as existed in the United States; the Canadian Government had gone to the aid of the wheat industry, had supported prices for a long period and had stabilized the market; the government as much as three years ago had contributed heavily to the construction of public work throughout the country to provide employment.

As for the NRA codes, he thought Canada would watch our experiments with sympathetic interest. The writer of the interview added, not quoting Mr. Stevens specifically, that 'Canada is less responsive than her neighbor to the organized enthusiasm of campaigns, to the mass propaganda of parades and oratory and brass bands, and this is a factor that has to be taken into account.'

"I submit this comment as an outstanding example of tact. The interest of your distinguished representative was real, because, of course, our prosperity means an incalculable advantage to Canada, and vice versa.

"We are doing more hard thinking about tariffs and foreign trade than for some years. Mr. Ogden Mills' speech of two weeks ago and his remarks throwing over the extreme views of protectionism which had long been accepted as traditional Republican doctrine, were more than a straw in the wind. I earnestly hope that if we do engage in any tariff bargaining and essay the merits of reciprocal arrangements, we may do so with our neighbor to the north. We are on friendliest terms, we have much in common, our manufacturing problems, wage scales and other factors are quite similar, and we have long been good customers of each other. There could be no better direction for trying the experiment than Canada.

FINANCIAL MARKETS
NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 12 (CP)—The industrial section of the Toronto Stock Exchange staged a very draggy market today, traders showing no disposition to launch out with the New York market closed.

Ford A improved 1-8 despite the general quietness, holding at 24 3-8 at noon and C.P.R. also gained 1-8 and International Nickel gained 10 cents to 22.45, Brazilian lost 1-8 to 13 3-8.

With exception of Industrial Alcohol which held a gain of 1-4 at 16 1-4, the distillery stocks were off lightly. Walkers Common dropped 1-2 to 46 and Distillers Seagram 1-4 to 21 1-4. In the brewery group Brewing Corporation gained 1-8 and Canada Malting 1-4.

Industrial shares followed their usual course when the New York market is closed and moved very cautiously on small volume. Some of the construction issues developed a strong tone and the interlisted leaders, including Nickle, C. P. R. and Ford A were slightly up but narrow recessions outnumbered gains at the end of the third hour.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Feb. 10 (CP)—Traders sidestepped the interlisted shares today, apparently because of the holiday on the New York Market, and the medium priced groups of gold issues and the oils were the most active in the mining section of the Toronto Stock Exchange.

Ajax held the interest in the oils by advancing 14 cents to 1.35 on heavy turnover. Acme was unchanged at 21 and Olga stronger at 23½ Home Oil was also up several cents to 1.88.

Sylvanite and Siscoe turned over in fair volume, each up a cent or two while Reno gained a cent to 1.15. International Nickel disappeared from the mining section today and will be traded in future only on the industrial board. Noranda improved 10 cents to 35.10 and Base Metals Corporation 3 to 1.78.

Senior gold and base metal shares were neglected by traders today who devoted main attention to secondary gold and base metal shares, the silvers and the oils. Sudbury Basin developed a strong tone, advancing to 1.48 and Noranda and the other base metals were generally firm. Nickel has been removed from the mining board and will in future be traded on the industrial floor.

Hollinger, Wright Hargreaves and Teck Hughes were in some demand and Hollinger registered a small advance.

Ex-Scholars of School Back

The afternoon session in the Sunday School rooms of Bridge Street United Church Sunday School on Sunday was presided over by Mr. Joseph Shortt, superintendent. A number of former scholars of the school were in attendance, as well as members of the congregation. Invocation was made by the Rev. Mr. Harrison, who also pronounced the Benediction. Opening remarks of welcome were voiced by the superintendent and Mr. W. B. Deacon, for many years a member of the school, contributed a reminiscent talk. Mr. Taylor Franklin of Albert College, was the speaker of the afternoon and gave an admirable and enjoyable address on "The House with the Golden Windows." The Primary department sang a delightful chorus and music was furnished by the Sunday School orchestra under the direction of Duncan Lewis. Miss Jean Dickens gave an appreciated reading in her wonderful manner, and Mr. V. N. Smith and Albert Branscombe contributed an instrumental number.

Evening Service

The superintendent of the Sunday School, as he had done at the morning service, occupied the platform with the preacher at the evening congregational assembly, Mr. Shortt again made the Invocation and once more for the day extended welcome to the visiting clergyman. He also read the evening Lesson from the 15th. chapter of Luke, verses 11 to 24 inclusive.

The Rev. R. T. Richards, minister of Grace United Church, Napanee, was guest preacher and eloquently developed his theme, "the dependence of one's maturer life in the foundation formed in youth." He stressed the heritage that followed from religious, thoughtful and honorable youthful years. Mr. Richards' finely dictioned appeal, found longement in the attentive minds of his hearers

At the close of evening service the Rev. W. Harold Reid addressed those in attendance at the "Fireside Hour" gathering.

Canadiens Defeated Twice Over Weekend May Lose Playoff Position in N. H. L.

Leefs Take Them 4-2 and Hawks Complete Rout On Sunday

DETROIT UP

Now in Tie With Rangers For Lead in American Section

(By A. E. Fulford, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal's Canadiens, considered all along this season as almost as sure a thing for the Stanley Cup playoffs as Toronto Leafs, experienced their first fears today, that they might not cut into the extra money.

Habitants left Montreal Friday in third place in the National Hockey League's Canadian section, only two points behind Montreal Maroons and enjoying a comfortable edge of four points over New York Americans.

They returned after two defeats in more danger of being dropped out of a playoff spot than they have been all season. Maroon's 1-0 win over Boston Saturday put them four points up on Canadiens and Amerks edged closer to Leo Dandurand's men by whipping Rangers 4-3 Saturday night.

Inspired by King Clancy, the injury-riddled Toronto Leafs beat Canadiens 4-2 Saturday and Tommy Gorman's Chicago Black Hawks made the week end a complete washout by whipping them 4-2, 24 hours later.

Three Leafs Out

With Charlie Conacher and Joe Primeau, two-thirds of their "kid line" and Charlie Sands out of the game with injuries, Leafs were given little chance of taking the hustling Habitants but the experts reckoned without the Irish spirit of Clancy.

He was a team in himself, keeping the younger players on their toes and scoring two of Toronto's goals. His markers came in the second period on assists from Happy Day and Bill Thoms and early in the third Harvey Jackson made it 3-0 for the home team on a solo effort.

George Mantha and Jack Riley got goals for the Montreal team before the third period was over and they threatened to tie it up at any minute until Bill Thoms slapped in the Leafs' fourth and put the game away.

Thirteen thousand persons saw the tired Canadiens humbled at Chicago, making a total of more than 26,000 they played before in two nights. Lionel Conacher, the Hawks' ace defenceman, was the big shot of the Chicago offense as well, getting two goals. Doc Romnes and Johnny Gottselig scored the others and Wildor Larochelle marked up Habitants' single.

Eddie Shore was given a great welcome to Montreal when the Bruins played Maroons Saturday. But Tiny Thompson was the star of the Rossmen, stopping 36 shots, many of them tough ones. He was given little chance to save on the only goal of the game. Stew Evans' shot in the second period.

Detroit Best

Detroit dominated the play in their game with Ottawa, originally scheduled for the Capital. Johnny Sorrell scored in the first period and Cooney Weiland, former Ottawan, and Eddie Wiseman added markers in the third.

Bill Beveridge played an outstanding game for the Senators, stopping 29 shots. Wilf Cude, the Wing goalie, got his shutout easily as he had to block only 19 pucks

More than 15,000 saw the greatly improved Americans beat Rangers in Madison Square Garden and 5,000 more were turned away. The Amerks came from behind after Danny Cox and Earl Seibert had given the world champions an early lead.

Red Jackson and Bill Brydge scored in the middle frame to even matters up but Seibert put Lester Patrick's team on top again half way through the third. Rabbit McVeigh made the plays for American's tieing goal and their winning markers, Deed Klein and Normie Himes beating Andy Aitkenhead.

THE BIG SEVEN

(By the Canadian Press)

Only two of hockey's big seven added to their totals in the week-end battles of the National Hockey League. Cecil Dillon of New York Rangers gained one point to move into a fifth place tie with Aurel Joliat of Canadiens, when he obtained an assist as Rangers were beaten 4-3 by Americans. Harvey Jackson, star left wing, of Toronto, got a goal and an assist to increase his point total to 31, when Leafs defeated Canadiens 4-2.

QUEENS WIN TWO GAMES

Deacon A. C. Drops Game to Juniors And "Y" Downed

Showing a complete reversal of form in the last half of the game the local Deacon A.C. Juniors, lost their first basketball game of the season to the Queen's Juniors by the score of 37 to 21, while the local Y.M.C.A. intermediate quintette dropped a closely fought 31 to 26 game to the "student" intermediates at Queen's University on Saturday night. Both games were regular E.O.A.B.A. fixtures. The junior loss drops the Deacon A.C. cagers into second place, one game behind the group leading Queens kids. The return twin bill will be staged at the local collegiate gymnasium on Wednesday evening, when the local juniors must win to stay in the running, while the "Y" intermediates can elevate their standing by virtue of a victory over the "students".

The Deacon kids opened purely on the offensive and out-scored their Queen's rivals 18 to 13 during the first half of the play. The large playing floor soon took its toll on the local kids as they literally wilted in the second half to not only lose the game but be out-scored by 24 to 3 to such an extent did the locals falter, that they missed no less than nine foul shots in that drastic second half. Lack of condition wrought havoc in the ranks of the locals.

Trailing by the score of 18 to 6 the local "Y" intermediates staged a last period rally to all but overtake the Queen's intermediates as the local were nosed out but by a 31 to 25 score in a free scoring game. Godfrey Scott, an ex-Belleville lad playing for the "Students" proved the star of the game and scored 12 of his teammates' points, while Ernie Smith stood out for the local quintette.

The return games to be staged on Wednesday night in Belleville should be the tit-bit of basketball played in the city this season.

The line-ups:—

Belleville Y — Smith, Faulkner, Paige, Wickerson, V. White, Cather, MacLean and S. White.

Queen's Ints.—Baker, Gordon, Vanstone, Scott, Patterson, Leal, Arnott, Sturreff and Ansley.

JUNIORS TO PLAY TUESDAY

First Game For Group Title With Norwood on Sport Bill

Taking their choice as group leaders the Belleville Juniors elected to play the first game of the local junior O.H.A. group play-offs at home versus the Hastings kids on Tuesday night of this week. The Hastings-Norwood amalgamated aggregation finished their group games in a blaze of glory to eliminate the speedy Trenton kids from further competition by defeating them 4 to 2 in Trenton last week, assuring themselves of second place in the local junior loop and the right to meet the locals in the first play-off game here on Tuesday night.

The Hastings kids boast of a fast skating team, who incidentally held the locals to a one-all tie at Norwood in a recent group fixture. The Rogers brothers and the Puffer brothers are the stars of the "Amalgamates" with McCoy and Sargent both being aggressive pucksters. For fans enjoying wide-open hockey these junior teams supply plenty of action and thrills, that add to the excitement of the fans. Tuesday night's game should be no exception to the previous juniors games, that have been played locally this season and always pleased the fans.

The winner of this series will meet the Queen's juniors in the O.H.A. play-downs. A neutral referee will undoubtedly be appointed for this all-important junior game here Tuesday.

SETS NEW RECORD FOR SKI JUMP

John Elvrum, slim Norwegian from Portland, Ore., featured the annual winter sports carnival at Big Pines, Southern California mountain resort, by leaping 240 feet to set a new amateur championship, bettered by eight feet the existing Olympic record. Photo shows John Elvrum skimming the tops of the huge pine trees in his record jump.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

Walter Patterson's Dohertys play their return game in Trenton this evening and enjoy a seven goal margin over the Bowen-coached aggregation. The locals naturally will not be called on to extend themselves as they should be able to coast home to a victory. The green and white will take no chances regarding injuries as they will have to be "in the pink" for the Campbellford series which is scheduled to open in Belleville on Wednesday with the return game being played in Campbellford, if the locals win tonight, on Friday of this week, just reversing the previously announced dates.

Defensively the locals never looked better than they did last Friday evening. The local rear-guardsmen gave Buskard plenty of protection but their efforts in clearing the puck after Rube had made a sensational save, proved their best efforts. Heretofore this season the "oilmen" have been slightly lax in clearing the puck from in front of the local citadel but Friday night saw them give a letter-perfect example of their ability in this art as all three defencemen were "Johnny on the spot" to relieve the pressure. Similar performances versus the Maroons should result in the locals being crowned group champions again this year.

Following Friday night's tussle the cry in the Trenton dressing room went up—"the referee beat us". "Sour grapes, boys, we might point out to the Trentonians that but one goal in that hectic, and rather drastic third period for the Trenton cause was scored while a visiting player graced the penalty box." But eight penalties were handed out all evening by Referee Thompson with Belleville drawing down but three. The official could have penalized numerous Trenton players in the dying moments of the play for accidental tripping but saw fit to overlook the incidents as the locals were in command of the situation. As a matter of fact the Trenton executive suggested Thompson as the referee and the locals agreed to the suggestion despite the fact that he is at present residing in Trenton. In fairness to Tommy we might say that he always tries to "call 'em as he sees 'em". Naturally he does not always see the plays exactly as the patrons or club officials do, but, invariably the official is correct. After all is said and done both clubs could do much worse than engage Thompson for tonight's tussle. He understands the game, is impartial throughout and rules with an iron hand. What more do the clubs want? It must be remembered that no man is infallible.

Official announcements were issued today regarding the local junior group play-offs and find the Hastings kids playing here in Belleville tomorrow (Tuesday) night with the return game being staged in Norwood or Cobourg on Thursday night. The total goals on the round will decide which club will meet the sturdy Queen's juniors in the group finals.

Although it may come as news to some, at least four senior teams have been assured the C.O.B.L. for 1934 competition. The fourth club is, as yet, unnamed but we believe that final arrangements in the matter will be completed this week. Even if the central loop gets a fourth or even a fifth club would not an interlocking schedule with the Ulster Stadium loop be a power of strength to senior baseball in this district next summer? It has to be admitted that certain clubs in the West Toronto loop were inadequate but the project surely saved senior ball in the C.O.B.L. last season. A similar hook-up with the newly formed Ulster loop would add prestige and ultimate strength to the local senior loop. It has been suggested that the C.O.B.L. clubs play games in Toronto and have return matches in the respective central loop towns on holidays. Double headers in Toronto on Saturdays and the same for the Queen City clubs in the Central League towns on holidays would prove an asset to amateur baseball in both organizations. As for that crack recently made by our Oshawa contemporary regarding "getting the call" on the present baseball situation, we might say—"tut, tut, little lad, there's many the slip 'twixt the cup and the lip".

There are two local sporting organizations that carry on in a successful and nonchalant manner solely within themselves. They are the local badminton club and the Belleville Skating Club. Recenty the latter appeared during a carnival at Wellington and again received recognition fitting the stellar performance presented. Recently we suggested that an old time hockey game be presented in Belleville coupled with an appearance of the local skating club and other winter attractions. The idea apparently was shunned but we observe where the self-same program was recently presented by the Eaton Hockey League in Toronto and brought out over 2,000 fans to once again pay homage to the hockey players of yester-year. As for the local badminton club their players are weekly advancing as can be seen every Saturday night during club competition at the armouries.

Some wise-cracking celebrity laid the following clipping on our desk and we naturally take exception to such insinuations: "The cub reporter was parting his hair in front of the mirror in the wash room. The Office Grouch happened in. "Say, Sonny," said the Grouch, "you have a fine alley on that block."

Both local basketball teams, the "Y" intermediates and the Deacon A. C. juniors, ran amiss down at Kingston over the week-end when the former dropped a closely contested game to the Queen's intermediates by the [illegible] of 31 to 26. Ralph Morden's charges after a very faulty first half returned to all but win from the students by virtue of a last half rally. The juniors, however, played just the reverse. They led the Queen's kids by a substantial margin at the half way point but in the second half failed miserably to score but three small points and lost by a 37 to 21 score. The local junior cagers now are in second place and must defeat the Queen's students here on Wednesday night to stay in the running. According to information received the juniors have been suffering from an attack of enlarged craniums of late. The return double-header will be played at the collegiate gym on Wednesday evening.

Quakers Win Europe's World Amateur Hockey Championship

Defeat Switzerland And United States Each by 2-1 Score

Milan, Italy, Feb. 12 (CP Cable) — Saskatoon Quakers, second-best amateur hockey team in Canada last year, crossed over to Switzerland today and were acclaimed as the best in the world. Quakers last night won Europe's world amateur hockey championship by defeating the United States 2-1.

Last year's Allan Cup finalists who were beaten by Moncton Hawks walked through the world tournament with comparative ease until Saturday night when they nearly met their Waterloo in the Swiss team. That game, the semi-final, was the hardest Quakers had played since they came to Milan. For a considerable part of the game they led with the single scored by Ab Welsh. A goal by Muller, however, forced them into overtime before they could break through the Swiss guard. Cliff Lake, centre, who has been with the teams as long as it has existed, scored the winner to make it 2-1.

Quakers got another scare last night from the Americans and trailed one goal down for the first period. Stubb gave the Americans their lead and they hung onto it until Lake banged in the equalizer in the second frame. The final goal that gave Quakers the championship came from the stick of Jim Dewey, former University of Saskatchewan star.

The rest of the Quakers' European schedule calls for games in Switzerland, Germany, and they are expected to finish their continental tour at Paris, Feb. 14, going from there to England.

BULL DOGS BREAK TIE

(By The Canadian Press)

Two hard games in two nights mean nothing to the fighting Bulldogs of Windsor, who had broken a tie with London Techumsehs today to take fourth place in the International Hockey League, one point behind Syracuse and Buffalo, deadlocked in second position.

Bulldogs fought Buffalo Bisons at Fort Erie Saturday night to a 1-1 overtime battle and Sunday night trimmed Syracuse 2-1 in another overtime tussle. The third week-end game was in Cleveland Saturday night where Indians, cellar occupants, held London to a 3-3 draw.

U. S. FOOTBALL

Atlanta, Ga., Feb. 12 (AP) — The United States football rules committee today held out a helping hand to the offense, altering three portions of its code to give more strength to the attacking team

The cry last fall that the defence had all the better of the game was heard by the committee in annual meeting here yesterday, to the extent that it lifted the touchback penalty on the first incomplete forward pass thrown over the goal line and removed the five-yard setback inflicted after a second successive incompleted forward pass.

The third change was the rewording of the definition of a punt to allow a team mate to hold the ball until the kicker has made contact.

The first incomplete forward pass over the goal line—except on fourth down—henceforth will result only in the loss of a down and not in loss of possession of the ball. This should see many teams try a pass over the goal line in cases where previously they would not risk the gamble on an early down.

N. H. L. STARS

(By the Canadian Press)

King Clancy, Toronto, inspired Leafs to win from Canadiens and also contributed two goals.

TRAIN REROUTED

Montreal, Feb. 12—Owing to a derailment of a Canadian National freight train near Aultsville, Ont., Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, passenger trains had to be directed by way of Ottawa, whereby considerable delay in services resulted.

Services this affected included train No. 5, leaving Montreal at 9.45 a.m. for Toronto and Chicago; train No. 14, in reverse direction, due Montreal at 4.15 p.m.; and train No. 15, pool train leaving here for Toronto and Chicago at 3 p.m.

And Now They've Invented the Death Ray!

Won't this be a nice instrument in the hands of an army in the next war? It is the Death Ray, invented by a British scientist, C. R. Chadfield, who is shown here with a working model of his new and terrible invention. Actual experiments have shown that insects, mice and flies which have come in contact with the ray were killed instantly without so much as leaving a mark of violence on their bodies. Chadfield claims the ray shatters the nervous system. A nice thing to wipe out an army if made strong enough, and the inventor has secured permission to increase its present strength to about 500 times its present effectiveness. The apparatus produces a high frequency electrical oscillation of 300 million cycles between two copper plates. Chadfield is a lecturer at Leicester College of Technology.

3 STARS OF SATURDAY'S GAME

SELECTED BY— Charlie L. Querrie

Clancy Inspired Leafs In Stirring Victory

Once there were two Irishmen named Clancy—. At least it must have seemed that way to the Canadiens during Saturday night's sensational struggle and, like a lot of other people who have had to hold still for the story of the two Hibernians, the visitors were not amused.

The Canadiens became the Flying Frenchmen of old in a spectacular effort to skate the limping Leafs right into the freeze pipes, only to have Mr. King Clancy hammer home two goals. The King inspired his team-mates to fight, fight, fight for the old Blue and White and do or die, for some reason or other, to maintain their thirteen-point lead in the group.

The score of this great game was 4-2, mainly because the winners did their best and busiest back-checking of the season with Bill Thoms and his high-pressure poke check being a special feature. Even the swerving Sylvio Mantha was baffled when he had to go past each opponent at least twice on every rush.

Doug saw a tall unattractive girl n a plain blue serge dress, with a ack felt hat awry on long hair, hich hung in strings around her hin white tear-stained face, gazg back at him silently. He was so reatly shocked at the first sight of he woman his father had selected o be his wife that he forgot to be a entleman. When his voice finally ame to him he shook his head like man in a bad dream.

"My father must have been—inane—to ask me to marry— you. I —couldn't possibly go through with ."

Charity recoiled as though Doug emple had struck her.

From the way he looked at her, ith mingled distaste and astonishent, there was no doubt what his ords meant. They ran through her [illegible]adly.

[illegible]y Charity raised her hand o her hair and tried to arrange it. nd she was suddenly aware that er nose must be read and shiny—er eyes wet from weeping. A self-nscious blush of shame swept om her neck to the roots of her air.

Clothes had never meant anyhing to Charity before, except as omething to cover her, or to keep er from getting cold. But in that oment she would have given anyhing in the world to have been ll-groomed —fashionably gowned.

Charity Jones, daughter of a poor Iowa farmer, and Douglas Brookhart Temple 3d, born a millionaire, stood face to face for the first time.

Doug Temple looked her up and down, and shook his head again. Then he threw himself into a chair.

"I say, Miss Jones," he began then "you must see my position in this affair. It's —quite impossible."

Charity nodded miserably, trying to speak. Doug lit a cigarette, still eyeing her with an almost amused impertinence; then suddenly he laughed—a little wildly.

"It's funny, really" Poor old father taking the trouble to pick out a nice old-fashioned home girl for me before he kicked off. Mighty thoughtful—if you ask me."

CHAPTER THREE

Suddenly Charity felt the blessed relief of anger pouring through her almost paralyzed body. In a moment, her face that had been so white, flamed. And Doug Temple [illegible] astonished when she suddenly [illegible] her voice and whirled on him: "[illegible] can you speak so disrespectfully of your father?"

Before the amazed young man had a chance to answer, Charity added hotly:

"And what of me Has it ever occurred to you I might be just as unwilling to be sold into marriage as you?"

Doug looked a little surprised. Then he shrugged.

"Well—after all, it shouldn't be so difficult for a stenographer who has her father and mother to support to make up her mind to marry a millionaire. If you ask me—I think you'd be getting a damn good break."

It was so unbelievably rude that Charity gasped—and lost— speech again.

"Are you sure," Doug asked her then, coolly, "you didn't hatch this plot up with father yourself?"

At that Charity turned cold with anger. She ran to the door and flung it open. Simmons, waiting at his desk, jumped up when he saw her in the doorway.

"What's wrong—Miss Jones?"

Charity crossed the room and went to the outside door. Doug followed in time to see her turn and point a shaking finger at him.

"He—he's the most unspeakably rude person I've ever seen in my life," Charity said, slowly. "I would not marry him if he starved to death."

"Listen here —" Simmons turned to Doug impatiently, "what have you said to Miss Jones?"

Doug shrugged again.

"I only asked her if she were sure she hadn't hatched up a little plot with father to try to get a little easy money for herself. You can't blame me for being suspicious of this crazy business."

Simmons whirled on the young millionaire.

"That's a rotten thing to say to a girl like Charity Jones, Temple! You must apologize —at once—I demand it."

Suddenly Doug threw himself into a chair, his head in his hands.

"Oh, I suppose I did get a little too excited. But —for heaven's sake, Simmons, there is a limit, you know. I'm sorry."

Simmons turned to Charity.

"Sit down, Miss Jones, now that Mr. Temple has apologized. We've got to talk this thing over."

Charity still had her hand on the doorknob. She said icily:

"I'm afraid there's nothing to talk over. Mr. Temple find he cannot possibly bring himself to marry me—and I'm sure I feel the same. It looks as though Mr. Temple will have to go out and find a job. I've had to earn my own living since I was fifteen. So it won't bother me much."

Simmons looked at Doug out of the corner of his eye and saw that thebarb had struck home. Doug winced. The lawyer sat down at his desk and motioned to Charity to sit near him. She crossed over and sat down stiffly.

Simmons shrugged. "Well, boys and girls it's all up to you. Your benefactor left about twenty million dollars to be divided between the two of you. A great deal of it is tier up in some of the highest priced real estate in New York. You can take it or leave it."

Charity said then, coldly, "It doesnt' interest me. I wouldn't know what to do with so much money."

Doug Temple looked as though he were going to give her a sarcastic little grin. Then thought better of it.

"Listen here," he turned to Simmons, "there must be some way a crazy will like this can be broken."

Simmons lit a cigar before he answered. "You should know your father better than to think he'd make a will and, not sew it up so it couldn't be broken. There's not a chance. You'd only be wasting your breath trying."

Charity waited for Doug's reply. She found herself rather enjoying his obvious discomfort and unhappiness. Her pride was hurt so badly she hadn't a charitable thought in her heart for him.

"There's got to be a way!" Doug got up to pace the floor.

"You'll be a thousand before you find it," Simmons said with finality.

Doug walked over and looked out of the window.

"This is a fine mess," he said then hopelessly. "Here I am engaged to be married to one girl— and my father wills me his secretary."

Simmons looked surprised. "Did your father know you were engaged?"

"No it happened in Europe—this summer."

"Some chorus girl, I suppose," the lawyer commented drily.

Simmons started. Charity was surprised too. She had seen Miss Vandergriff's picture on the society pages of the newspapers many times. And knew that she was one of New York's most beautiful and popular debutantes.

"Well," Simmons got up, "it's up to you whom you marry, Doug. But if you marry Yanner Vandergriff I'm sure I don't know what you're going to use for money. And it'll take plenty to keep that young lady, if I know my women."

Doug looked angry but before he could think of the proper retort Charity got up. "If you'll excuse me, I'm going back to the hotel. There's nothing more to say, I guess."

Simmons walked over to the door with her. "Don't make up your mind not to marry Mr. Temple until you hear from me," he said, with a ghost of a smile. "After all, it shouldn't be hard to marry anything for that much money."

"I'm afraid," Charity answered with all the dignity she could muster, "I'd find marriage to a man of Mr. Temple's type quite impossible. Even to please his father."

When the door closed behind her, Doug said in angered imitation of Charity's stinging farewell, "And as for you, Miss Jones, you're about as attractive and appealing as a mummy. I'd find marriage to you equally as —distasteful."

Simmons sat down calmly.

"Don't let a little powder and paint and Parisian duds, blind you Temple. There's one of the finest girls who ever stepped inside of two shoes. Your father knew that when he made his will."

"Why didn't he marry her himself, then?" Doug said brashly, his love for his father buried under the burden of his own problems.

Simmons disregarded Doug's rudeness for a moment. Then he got up again.

"I wash my hands of the whole affair. Do as you please. I've got to be going home."

Doug felt himself dismissed. Glumly he picked up his hat and walked out. All the way down in the elevator he stared at the floor. In a limousine at the curb sat Rafferty the Temple chauffeur, and Doug climbed in dully.

"Take me to Miss Vandergriff's," he said.

Back in her little room at the "Stenog's Club," Charity threw herself on her bed to read and reread the letter old Temple had written to her.

Would Doug Temple ever change his mind and ask her to marry him? If so— what should she do?

Yanner Vandergriff had been on pins and needles all afternoon. Doug Temple would have been more than a little nonplussed if he could have known how feverishly she waited for him to come back and tell her the provisions of his father's will.

He had lunched with her in New York. Then she had raced back to her home in Smithtown, Long Island, as fast as her car would take her, laughing and waving impudently at traffic cops who recognized the daughter of John David Vandergriff and were afraid they'd lose their jobs if they arrested her for speeding. Vandergriff was one of the most powerful politicians in the state, if not the country.

Yanner drove straight to the private airport on the Vandergriff estate and jumped into her plane. The next three hours she spent in the clouds. She was circling about to land, when she saw Doug's car drive up to the field.

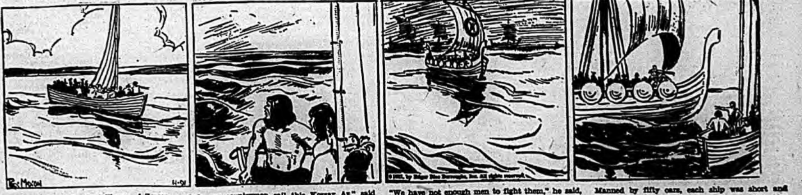
TARZAN AT THE EARTH'S CORE

(Metropolitan Newspaper Service) By Edgar Rice Burrough



"Look!" suddenly cried The Red Flower of Zoram. "A sail!" exclaimed Tarzan. Excitement ran high in the longboat as they watched the distant speck upon the blue. "Will we be saved or captured again for new torments?" was what Jason was thinking. "There is another—there are many of them," said Lajo, the Korsar, presently. "We are saved!" "Not if the ship is manned by unfriendly people," answered Tarzan.

"Only my countrymen sail this Korsar Az," said Lajo. "That is all right for you," remarked the apeman, "but they will be our enemies." Soon the white sails disappeared in the distant haze and with them went both fear and hope. They waited awhile in silence. Suddenly the mist lifted and they found the ships much nearer. "oCme about and run for it," commanded Tarzan, "perhaps they have not yet discovered us."

"We have not enough men to fight them," he said, "but we may escape." The longboat tacked about and was soon scudding in an opposite direction. But with its small sail the craft was far from fast. And as all eyes watched the far off sails, they saw the distance between them was decreasing and discovered they were being pursued by a considerable fleet. Rapidly th distance closed.

Manned by fifty oars, each ship was short and broad of beam, carrying two sails, and over the sides of tre ships were hung the shields of warriors. "Pellucidar is a queer place, I'll tell the outer world," exclaimed Jason Gridley to Tarzan. "It not only boasts of Spanish pirate gents but now come the Vikings' ships!" "Slightly modernized, however," replied the ape-man. "Look at that gun mounted in the bow."

MOUNT PLEASANT HALL SCENE OF SPLENDID PLAY

RAWDON.—On Friday evening February 9th the play "Lighthouse Nan" was staged in Mount Pleasant Church Hall, Rawdon, by local talent to a capacity audience despite the extreme cold weather. The proceeds amounted to over forty dollars and will be turned in on the hall debt.

The play was given in three acts and was pictured in present day time. Each player impersonated his role to perfection and it wouldn't be fair to pick out any as being special stars as all were excellent in pose and enunciation.

The dramatic story was interwoven with many comedy scenes and was largely enjoyed by the audience, especially the account of the population of the Carolina Coast. Those who missed the performance were surely out of luck.

The cast were trained by Miss Muriel Milligan who introduced the characters and credit is also due her for her untiring efforts to make the event a success and the players hope to be able to stage their performance at other centres, during the winter months.

Hon. John Enlow—President of the Seacoast Banking Co.—Mr. Don Campbell.

Sir Arthur Chobe—A British Aristocrat—Mr. Clifford Holmes.

Nan—A little roustabout—Miss Olive McConnell.

Moll Buzzer—a gentle antelope—Mrs. Allan Reid.

Hon. Sarah Chumley Chobe—Arthur's sister—Miss Edna Thrasher

The Mule January—Mr. Allan Reid.

Between acts three choruses were given by younger members of the community accompanied by the orchestra. The first number "The Old Spinning Wheel" was given in couples with the girls in old-fashioned costumes and later they rendered "Girl of My Dreams" and lastly five girls in evening dress sang—"We're in the Money".

Those taking part in the choruses were—Misses Mildred Sharp, Marguerite White, Helen Spencer, Eileen MacMullen and Myrtle McKeown and Herbert Smith, Burton Sharp, Norman McConnell and Harry McAdam.

The orchestra composed of piano, Miss Olive McConnell; banjo, Mr. Ira David; guitars, Misses Frances McKeown, Edna Thrasher and Isobel Turner.

Rev. F. G. Joblin acted as chairman for the occasion and visitors were in attendance from Wellman's, Bethel, Hoards, Marmora, Stirling, Salem, Belleville, Frankford and Carmel.

The orchestra also rendered several musical numbers between acts. At the close those on the program were tendered a hearty vote of appreciation.

WEEKLY NEWS OF MADOC JCT.

Current Attractions at Local Theatres

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL "IT'S A BOY"

We are promised some hearty laughter when the comedy "It's a Boy" is screened at the Capitol today for three days.

Adapted by Austin Melford from the original by Franz Arnold and Ernst Bach, this merry farce ran at the Strand Theatre London, for many months and Gainsborough, realising its possibilities as a screen comedy produced it, and signed Leslie Henson for the role he made so popular on the stage.

Skippett endeavours to rescue Leake from the too loving attentions of Joe Piper, a hefty lad, who visits him on the eve of his wedding to a charming girl, with the awful announcement that Leake is his "dear daddy."

A youthful indiscretion scares the timid Leake is into believing the young man's claim, and the friendly Skippett gets into every kind of scrape in his hard-working efforts at keeping Joe from meeting the bride.

One of the biggest laughs in the film is a scene in which Leslie Henson disguises himself as a famous woman author, fashionably attired and tottering about on ridiculous heels.

Edward Everett Horton and Wendy Barrie in "It's a Boy" playing at the Capitol now!

Unfortunately he meets the genuine novelist at the bride's house and she, determined to get to the bottom of the mystery, forces him into fantastic statements regarding the success of "her" books. Their simpering chat is said to be hilariously funny.

Leslie Henson is ideally fitted to the part of Skippett, scoring many of the laughs with facial expression and intonation. Excellent performances are given by Heather Thatcher (the real novelista), Edward Everett Horton (Leake), Alfred Burdon (the very bouncing boy), Alfred Drayton (the irate father of the bride), Robertson Hare (humorously "butlerish"), and Wendy Barrie (a very attractive bride.)

Smart direction by Tim Whelan assures the maximum of diverting incidents.

"It's a Boy" is a riot from beginning to end. The first five minutes of this picture are worth all the seventy-five minutes of many another film. Monday and Tuesday are gift nights of "Royal Princess Dinnerware". An excellent line of short subjects round out a very fine film program.

AT THE BELLE "THE SOLITAIRE MAN"

Herbert Marshall heads the strong cast assembled for "The Solitaire Man," startling and fascinating "Raffles" story, coming to the Belle tomorrow (Tuesday) and Wednesday, matinee daily.

The casting of Marshall in another role of sophisticated "gentleman crook" brings him to the screen in a vehicle that has all the appeal of "Trouble in Paradise."

Meet in Plane Cabin

In Spewack play every character's life is involved with that of "The Solitaire Man," when they finally meet in the cabin of a passenger plane crossing the English Channel a situation arises that has scarcely been equalled on the screen. The climax is a breathless defiance of death.

Marshall's portrayal is that of a man driven to desperate measures by the loss of a fortune in the World War. Supposedly a rich jewel merchant, he is really disposing of valuables obtained during nightly expeditions among European and Americans of the Continent.

In the feminine romantic lead Elisabeth Allen has the most dramatic role of her career. She established herself as one of the screen's new important personalities in "Looking Forward," and is said to win new laurels in her performance with Marshall.

In addition to Marshall's performance a notable supporting cast contributes much to the picture and includes Elizabeth Allan in the feminine lead, Lionel Atwill, Mary Boland, Robert McWade, May Robson and Lucille Gleason.

"Cross Country Cruise"

The great ocean-to-ocean expanse with its ribbon of roadways as a locale forms the theme of "Cross Country Cruise" starring Lew Ayres with June Knight, Alice White and Alan Dinehart that is the companion feature on the same program.

It is a story of mile-a-minute action aboard a transcontinental bus plying between New York and San Francisco. Produced in a unique manner, the story deals, principally, with the lives of five travellers. Norman, a rich play-boy; Sue, a beautiful passenger; Steve, his suspicious wife Nita, and May, a chorine. How Sue eventually "gets her man," and, how Norman clears Sue in the tragic death of Nita and rescues his love from certain doom at the hands of the despicable Steve is logically revealed. Spiced with comedy and drama which offers a new slant "in screen-fare "Cross Country Cruise" includes a capable cast such as Minna Gombell, Eugene Pallette, Henry Armetta and Robert Allen.

The Four Marx Brothers are appearing at the Belle tonight for the last times in "Duck Soup". An exceptional array of excellent screen reels precede the feature.

STONE CHURCH Y.P.S.

On Feb. 6th the Y.P.S. of Stone Church met at the home of Mrs. Frank Tucker. The Scripture was read by Miss Magdalene Lloyd and an explanation of it was given by Farley Vermilyea. Mr Johnston led in prayer.

It was decided to use the old hymn books in the league and a collection of the same is to be made.

The subject for the meeting was Christian Fellowship and was taken charge of by Mrs. F. Jeffrey. The topic for the evening was "Enrichment of Community Life Through Young People's Work.

Readings dealing with the topic were given by Mrs. F. Tucker, Bill MacMurter, Hugh Gray, Leslie Thompson and Cyril Kagor.

Mr. Johnston then led a very interesting discussion on "Which are helpful agencies in the community and which are injurious?" The following agencies were found to be helpful:

1. Young People's Society
2. Sunday School
3. Junior Farmers
4. Church
5. Women's Institute
6. Y.M.C.A.
7. Corby's Public Library

Injurious agencies found were:

1 Manufacture and distribution of alcoholic beverages.

2. Lotteries.

It was suggested that a sunshine committee be elected to visit the sick in the community Four members were selected carry out this work.

After the meeting the young people went skating and on returning to the house were served with pop corn.

JACK McDONALD SPEAKS AT MADOC

Addresses Father - Son Banquet at Trinity Church

MADOC—On Friday evening the annual Father and Son Banquet, under the auspices of the Trinity Tuxis Boys and Trail Rangers, was held in the basement of the church. Mr. Jack McDonald, Albert College student and Provincial Secretary of the Thirteenth Older Boys' Parliament of Ontario, was the guest speaker of the evening. A bountiful supper was served by the mothers of the members of the Tuxis and Trail Ranger groups. Mr. Robert Bristol was the chairman of the evening. Mr. Dick Wellman, assisted by Mrs. Leslie Ashley conducted a sing-song. The following program provided the entertainment—Toast to the King—The chairman; Response—God Save the King—Toast to the Church—Earl Wellman—Response—Mr. Jas. Irwin; Toast to the Sunday School—Mervyn Rutherford; Response—Mr. W. H. McBain; Solo by Mr. Colin Ross; Toast to Dads—John Bristol; Response—George White; Toast to the Ontario Older Boys' Board—Gray Rivers, Minister of Vocational Counselling, 13th Parliament; Response—Jack McDonald.

Mr. MacDonald said in part:—

"I am firmly convinced that this particular function plays an important part in the moulding of Canadian citizenship. In my mind every individual needs an experience in the higher things of life before he can present to the world a worthy personality and to this parliament and the activities carried on by this parliament, we, as youth, have an opportunity of coming together in a Christian atmosphere and so doing we are enabled to catch a greater appreciation of that dynamic personality which is called God.

World conditions offer such a challenge that we can't resist! We as a growing generation and as growing individuals must deny ourselves of many things and face up to these many public questions which are as vital as life itself. Do you dare to enjoy the privileges which you enjoy without giving consideration to such questions as, our social order, monetary control, unemployment and even life itself. I say that the youth of this country depend altogether too much on the older generation to better conditions when we should be making preparations to shoulder the burdens ourselves.

Let me warn you that any revolution which is tremendous and far-reaching that will take place in human society and go to the roots of human nature is doomed to failure so long as the false idea of freedom and independence remains dominant with greed and selfishness to back it up. The only way a change can be brought about socially is to back an experience by every individual with that personality—"God" That is why religion is of supreme and paramount importance—today it is the only way to freedom.

In conclusion a challenge was thrown out to each youth present to do his part in trying to bring about a realization of this dream. "Let us increase in wisdom and in stature and in favour with God and man," then when we are ready to say, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, I am sure that still small voice will be heard to say—Well done thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of the Lord."

A toast to the ladies was proposed by Bryden Lowery and responded to by Mrs. John Rutherford. Reverend Mr. Rivers brought the banquet to a close by repeating the benediction.

4 RUNS IN AS MANY HOURS

Firemen Believe February 13th is a Jinx Day

Members of the local fire department hastily scanned the calendar at No. 1 Firehall this morning after they had responded to the third fire alarm within as many hours, and confirmed their suspicions. It was February 13. The three runs received this morning almost equalled the number of runs so far this month.

The first call, shortly after seven o'clock was to a home at 216 Coleman street, where overheated stove pipes and a blazing chimney were successfully cooled off.

In response to the second alarm at nine o'clock, firemen found a quantity of combustibles blazing around a furnace in a grocery store on upper Front Street, with flames commencing to eat their way through the ceiling of the basement, between floors. Quick work with the extinguishers quenched this threatening fire.

Again at ten o'clock, another chimney fire in a house on the corner of Strachan and Grier streets caused a run.

Firemen are "standing to" throughout the rest of the day. A jinx is abroad, they point out.

Another run was made to 94 West Moira street, at 1.30 o'clock, this afternoon, where trouble had been experienced with an oil burner. No damage was done.

Boston, Feb. 13.—(AP)—Charles Ponzi, financial wizard, whose "get rich quick" scheme brought sorrow to thousands of investors a decade ago and a long prison term for himself, was packing belongings toda and getting ready to leave the State prison tomorrow.

Ponzi will have only time to take one quick breath of free air before he is again in custody as Federal Officers will be waiting for him to leave the prison and they will arrest him on a deportation warrant. The warrant was issued almost a year ago and calls for his immediate deportation to Italy, his homeland. Miss Mary Ward, Immigration Commissioner here, says the order of the warrant will be carried out but it is a certainty that Ponzi will provide a legal battle before he will submit to deportation

Warm-Hearted Cop on Bitter Night Gets Quilt for Nag, Gives Owner Fright

While Constable Evans walked his beat on Monday along the city street, he spied a horse so lame and old and shivering blanketless in the cold that his heart was touched by such a sight, and he immediately prepared to set things right. So he hunted up the horse's boss, and pointed out that while the loss of such a skinny animal might not be big, such things as that were infractions.

"You get some covering for that nag, no matter if it's but a rag if you intend to leave it there exposed to the winter's zero air. I've half a mind to take your name and have you to the sergeant explain the cruelty that I see," said Bill.

So the man got scared and hurried around, and a heavy cast-off quilt he found and over the shivering nag he spread that crazy quilt of black and red, while the constable stood and watched.

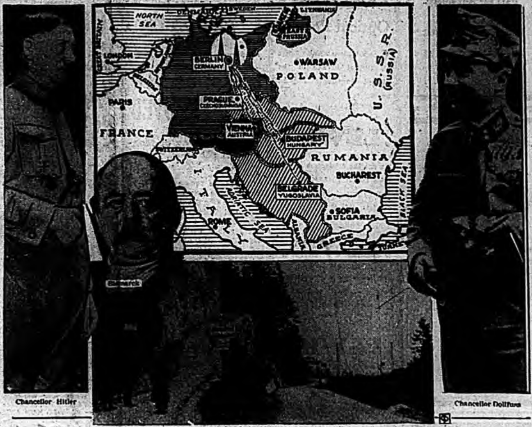
"There now, that's better," said the law. "Let's see you use it until the thaw, and just remember from this time on, we're watching to see that it is kept on."

Constable Evans then stamped his feet, hitched his belt and resumed his beat, but as he passed the horse's head he was flashed a look that plainly said:

"Thanks, old man, for this kindly deed. I'm just a hack, a worn out old steed. I can't ask myself for such things, you see, so things like that mean a lot to me. The law defends the weak, I see—even such poor worn out things as me."

And as the policeman walked away, he was followed by a grateful neigh.

MARTIAL LAW IN AUSTRIA AS CIVIL WAR THREATENS EUROPEAN PEACE



Chancellor Hitler

Chancellor Dollfuss

Roads on the border line between Germany and Austria, where any trouble between the two nations would of necessity begin.

First France, now Austria breaks out into general strikes, riots, civil war threats and bloodshed. Of the two, perhaps Austria is the more serious since any weakening of her internal position gives more chance to the Austria-Germany alliance which all Europe fears as another step towards war. In Vienna, many were killed as a general strike was declared and soldiers used bayonets and machine guns on the mob in scenes of wild disorder. The main clash was between Socialists and the Heimwehr group which now controls the country along Fascist lines. Recalling the efforts of Bismarck and other German leaders to make Prussian Berlin the capital of the German-speaking peoples, the Nazi government has stimulated "brown shirt" nationalism in Austria, forcing the plight of that nation into the front rank of European politics. Austria, opposed to Nazi influence, has warded off previous attempts at Nazi domination and renewal of Hitlerite activities threatens a more serious conflict. The Austrian government, through Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss, has protested the action. Although the agitation is directed by the Nazi government, which he heads, Chancellor Adolf Hitler of Germany has denied responsibility for it, and has ridiculed Austria's protest. Austria, once dominant influence among confederated German states, was subordinated to Prussian leadership through Bismarck's activities from 1862 through the Franco-Prussian war.

General Strike at Linz Continues With Paralyzing Effect

(By Wade Werner, Associated Press Foreign Staff Writer)

Vienna, Feb. 13 (AP)—The government opened a general offensive on Socialist revolutionaries today with artillery roaring destruction and death.

Today's most savage conflicts flamed in Vienna.

Army leaders claimed to have gained control of the situation after violent clashes at Linz, capital of Upper Austria, and at Graz, in Southeastern Styria Province. Fighting continued, however, at both points.

An artillery attack on the suburban Ottakring barricades was launched to smash Socialist resistance in that working-class district at dawn.

Vice-Chancellor Emil Fey, a leader in the Fascist Heimwehr (home guard) and an avowed enemy of Socialists, took personal command.

The Socialist Republican Guards, after a night of desperate and heroic resistance, fought back against the terrific bombardment with machine guns and rifles.

BUFFALO MEAT IS SERVED

Workers at Airport Like Juicy Steaks Broiled

Juicy buffalo steaks, imported from governmental preserves near Wainwright, Alberta, have been one of the chief items on the menu supplied workers at the Royal Air Force Camp, this winter.

The juicy steaks, broiled to perfection on the grills at the camp are said by the men to equal the finest cuts of beef.

"It's all young meat from the surplus animals on the preserve," stated the Camp Adjutant today. "The men seem to like the meat, and after the first few trial carcasses of the animals, we have been ordering more. They've been eating buffalo pretty much all winter."

BROCKVILLE, Ont., Feb. 13.—(CP—Fire, which broke out in a double frame dwelling in Park St., today through efforts to thaw out pipes wiped out that building and spread to an adjoining structure part of which has also been destroyed with the remainder still in danger.

The fire started in the residence of James Charlton, who lost all his possessions, and spread to an unoccupied but furnished house adjoining it, then jumped to a larger stucco dwelling converted into apartments occupied by F. R. Pratt, M. T. De Pencier and Bernard Owen. Both the Pratt and De Pencier residences were destroyed, while that of Owen is still menaced and is likely to be wiped out before the fire is brought under control.

Mr. and Mrs. De Pencier recently married in Renfrew, lost all their wedding presents. The entire property is owned by F. R. Pratt, who carried some insurance on buildings and contents. St. Peter's Anglican church, situated across the street from the burning buildings, escaped, although communion vessels and other valuable articles were moved from it. Clarence Dixon and Buster Markell, volunteer firemen, each received medical treatment for cuts on arms and hands received from broken glass. Other firemen suffered from frostbite.

KEEP FIRES GOING COLD WAVE COMING

Relief came today and on Sunday to a city and district besieged during the past week by unprecedented low temperatures, but the breathing spell will be a brief one, according to the weatherman.

Colder weather and snow flurries will rule on Tuesday, according to the official statement. Exactly how cold it will be has not been stated. It is known, however, that a cold wave from the west is on the way. On Sunday zero weather again made its appearance in the western provinces, and snow flakes have been flying across the plains. The same sweep of freezing weather is expected to hold this district for the next few days. For this first time since the first day of February, except for one Sunday, above temperatures were officially recorded in this district on Sunday and Monday. While snowflakes flew over the district on Monday, city workers were out with shovels clearing the streets.

PROMISED 'PHONE NOW ASSURED

Direct contact with workers on the relief project at Zwick's Island by officials at the city hall, entered its first phase today with the arrival at the island of the initial equipment necessary for the installation of the promised telephone. Work of installing the telephone which will facilitate the hurried removal of sick or injured workers in the event will commence at once, promised Mayor Tice today.

Previously the installation of the 'phone had been deferred by the Mayor while the city awaited the promised relief work grant from the government. With the promise of the grant now assured the instrument is being installed. The line will run from the Bay Bridge road.in.

DRIFTED HIGHWAYS STALL BIG TRUCKS

Although stage and bus drivers on routes north of the city reported no great difficulties from drifting snow which formed rolling billows of white on roads throughout the district, truck and transport drivers entering the city late today, stated that several of the larger vehicles had come to grief on the main highways. Between this city and Trenton two transports were said to be in the ditch, while east of the city one more truck was in trouble. Later in the day passing trucks helped their less fortunate brethren continue.

CROWS IN CONCLAVE IN WEST SIDE TREES

"Slanguage" of Birds Holding Court Spills Air

Splitting the air with their creaky raucous caws, scores of crows gathered in solemn conclave in the tall pines and other trees in the vicinity of the Agricultural Grounds west of the city on Tuesday morning. Their heralded gathering which commenced early in the morning was ostensibly arranged for the purpose of holding trial on a "prisoner" crow who had been caught performing some act not in the crow's lexicon. If found guilty, declare old timers of the district, the "prisoner" who sits on the bare limb before the court of competent jurisdiction, will be punished by death from the beaks of his fellow crows who have gathered for miles around to attend the trial. It is the first time this season the birds have been seen so close to the city.

SNOWPLOUGHS ON RAILWAY

Drifting Snow Causes Tracks to Fill up

Snowplows from the Belleville division were out at dawn today on the work of clearing the tracks of the fine, drifting snow in all divisions. Rural lines in the northern section were also being cleared.

Through Peterborough district the trouble has not been so bad, but as far as New Toronto, through Stouffville, Markham and this sub-division, the drifting snow had reached a considerable depth. Between Westport and Brockville more trouble was experienced. From Belleville to Maynooth another heavy section was encountered.

Even where the drifts had not reached a noticeable depth, the snow rolling under the wheels of the locomotives like sand had given considerable trouble to train crews. Schedules were being maintained however, reported local offices.

MONEY BY-LAW IS APPROVED

Council Meeting of Monday Night Short, Snappy Affair

Considerable time was spent in the committee room before the session of the City Council on Monday night and business was quickly transacted after the members appeared around the council board. Mayor Tice had an engagement and Alderman Woodley occupied the chair for part of the session. The by-law to provide for temporary borrowing from the Bank of Montreal for the unemployment relief fund was given its third reading after the by-law had received the approval of the Municipal Railway Board. Alderman McCreary speaking to the by-law, stated, that he was voting for the by-law to continue the relief but censured the Bank of Montreal for demanding 5 1-2 percent. for the loan, when money for current expenditures is being given at the bank for 5 percent. "I think the bank is taking an arbitriary and unreasonable attitude especially as the money is being used for unemployment in demanding that the city pay 5 1-2 percent. for the money," said Alderman McCreary. I understand the Mayor and Chairman of Finance have made many overtures in having the rate reduced but the bank is adamant. Alderman Woodley concurred in the statements made by Alderman McCreary.

Mayor as Delegate

Mayor George O. Tice will be a deputation of one from the council to attend a meeting in Toronto on Friday re hospitalization of indigent patients. Delegates from the Province will interview the government on this important question. Tenders for five suits for firemen will be received by the City Clerk up till February 22nd according to a recommendation passed. A 30 ton car of coke will be purchased from Harry Smith at a price of $10.85 net delivered. The council concurred in asking the Dominion and Provincial Governments in requesting a minimum wage law for male labor. A letter received from Hon. W. G. Martin, Minister of Public Welfare asking co-operation in providing plots for garden cultivation will be carried out. The council last year provided many lots and this policy will again be followed this year.

Alderman T. Y. Wills under the head of enquiries asked: "at what time does the weigh scale close." "He was informed the by-law calls from sunrise to sunset." "Is it true that the scales close at 5.00 p.m. every day," asked the alderman and receiving an affirmative answer from Alderman Thomas Marshall, stated, that he believed, that during the severe cold weather, the time should be extended so that everyone could be provided with coal." "It works a hardship on the dealers," said Alderman Wills. Alderman Ben Safe was in the chair in the committee of the whole and the following members were present, Mayor Tice, Aldermen Woodley, McCreary, Hill, Foley, Safe, Brickman, Cushing, Harvey, Marshall, Harker. The council adjourned shortly before nine-thirty.

KNOW CANADA JASPER PARK HEAD ADVISES

Canada's Appeal to Tourists Means Millions

WORD PICTURES

"See Canada First," was the theme song of Belleville Rotarians at the regular weekly meeting Monday in the Hotel Quinte, tribute being paid to the scenic grandeur of Canada and its many attractions as the vacation land of all people, even native born Canadians, who in learning about other lands can not be expected to know much about their own. It was Canada Day all the way and Rotarians present were even more proud of this great land after a talk by T. W. McDonough, superintendent of Jasper National Park, Alberta, who took them up in the high places and showed them what a wonderful place Jasper Park is, nestling in the valley of the Athabaska, with its grandeur of scenery in mountain, glacier, and smiling valleys.

What tourist traffic means to Canada the speaker illustrated in the tally of five million tourists from other lands who visit Canada annually, of the two billion, one hundred and thirty-three million dollars spent by tourists in Canada from 1924 to 1932; of $250,000,000 tourist money left in Canada every year from 1928 to 1931. What Canada has done to attract the tourist was also outlined by the speaker, with one billion dollars spent on good roads, and six billion dollars expended on hotels and national parks.

Attention was first called to Canada's attractions for tourists by the great railway systems, but recently the governments, federal and provincial have been giving attention to this important matter with excellent results.

Canadians should welcome the tourist, make them feel at home here, shield them from petty annoyances that we would object to ourselves in visiting another country—treat them so well in fact, that they will return home and speak so enthusiastically of Canada that all their friends and neighbors will make it a point to visit Canada.

Big Game Hunting

Canada is the world's greatest playground, a hunting and fishing paradise, said Mr. McDonough, in outlining what this country has to offer to the tourist in attractiveness. With magnificent National Parks, covering an area of fourteen thousand square miles, Canada has a great asset. Chief among these is Jasper Park, away out west amid the majestic grandeur of the Canadian Rockies. Jasper Park covers an area of 4,400 square miles, of mountain, glacier, valley, lakes and streams, of fine motor roads and a thousand or more miles of well defined trails, besides much territory as yet unmapped and unexplored.

This is the largest national park on this continent and probably in the world and is an ideal vacation land, filled with all kind of game which can be hunted only with a camera. For big game hunters who kill there are hunting grounds close by which provide every thrill possible.

Jasper Park Lodge and the many cabins and bungalows in connection for guests described by Mr. McDonough, provide delightful relaxation and health-giving outdoor life for those who desire quiet and rest, while there are plenty diversions for those who want to be up and doing all the time.

Old Man Mountain

Mount Edith Cavell, named after the brave nurse who gave her life for her countrymen, is among the outstanding attractions in its lofty beauty, while Angel Glacier, a wonderful novelty of nature is another. Pyramid Mountain, Old Man Mountain, and all the many other snow covered peaks, viewed from motor road or horse trail, enthrall the visitor, and over all the great brooding silences and the life giving air filtered through many miles of spruce and pine trees makes Jasper Park one of the world's greatest playgrounds, a natural paradise without a peer.

Mr. McDonough's word pictures of the beauties of Jasper Park held the close attention of his audience and instilled in the minds of all a determination to see Canada First and especially Jasper Park in the Canadian Rockies, and also occasioned a feeling of pride that all this lofty grandeur and beauty of scenery should be in Canada.

Introduced by Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne, Rotary appreciation was expressed by Morley Duff.

BRIDGE STREET S. S. ANNIVERSARY

An audience of 500 gathered Monday evening in the Bridge Street United Church, Sunday School rooms to hear the concert of the scholars of the school, which marked the second day of the 112th anniversary of the establishment of the Sunday School. Toward the close of the program Mr. Shortt, thanked the parents, members of the program committee, the staff of the Sunday School and its scholars for their splendid co-operation and support during the past year, and more especially for that which had made the concert of the 112th anniversary of the school so successfully outstanding.

Picton, Feb. 13 (Special)—Mr. Rolland Haddon spent a few days last week in Toronto.

At noon on Thursday a chimney fire in the residence owned by Mr. George Lowey of Rochester, and occupied by Mr. Alfred Pitt on Union Street was quickly extinguished by the firemen, when the severe weather made their work difficult.

Miss Maizie Parkins, head of the Ladies' Wear Department, Canadian Department Store here, was presented with a beautiful wool blanket, by members of the staff, prior to her departure for Lindsay C. D. S. where she has been transferred. The presentation was made by Mr. W. R. Henry, and Miss Parkins in expressing her thanks for the kind remembrance, spoke of her happy associations at the store here.

Hilda Eckett, an aged woman living alone near Glenora, was found dead in her home with all the fires out, late Thursday. The deceased had suffered a heart attack some hours previously, and had been unable to call help.

On Friday night Mr. and Mrs. L. Gennon, and Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Cole entertained a large party of their friends at Bayside Park. Dancing was enjoyed by those present to music furnished by Messrs. Greenfield, Dafoe, Denike and Shepard.

Miss Madeline Jarvis entered Prince Edward County Hospital for an operation for the removal of tonsils and a further throat operation. Doctors Currie and Publow are in charge of the case.

Hydro workers were called out on Thursday and worked until Saturday night repairing a burst water main on Bridge Street and thawing out frozen hydrants with blow torches. In some cases the men worked with bare arms in the icy water with the thermometer registering 35 degrees below.

At six o'clock Saturday night fire was discovered burning at the peak of the roof and around window frames in the brick residence of Mr. Ed. Miller. The firemen responded to a call with fire extinguishers, which were found to be frozen, when firemen attempted to operate them. The firemen then formed a bucket brigade and soon had the fire, which was caused by a defective chimney, extinguished.

Miss Geraldine Delaney of Black River Bridge is spending three weeks in town supplying in the office of the G. E. Fraser store.

Mr. F. W. Young is back at his place of business again after four week's illness with bronchitis followed by mastoid trouble.

Commodious Liberal Club Rooms Officially Opened Dr. Faulkner Presiding

Overflow Crowd And Many Unable to Gain Admission

EUCHRE, BRIDGE

Lunch Served And Latter Part of Evening Spent in Dancing

DR. J. A. FAULKNER

Liberal candidate, who officially opened Belleville Liberal Club Rooms, Monday night.

G. HAROLD HOLTON

President Liberal Associations of Belleville and South Hastings, active in arranging for opening

Braving the blustering snow, fifteen hundred adults, composed mostly of Liberals of this city, turned out en masse last evening to attend the official opening of the new quarters of the Belleville Liberal Club rooms at 232 Front St. Lack of accommodation forced hundreds to return to their homes even, while holding tickets of admission.

Six hundred or more packed themselves into the corridors and large rooms of the gaily decorated new hall. Scores more found room in the adjoining premises of the studio of Mr. W. S. Clarke, photographer. The tables in the lunch room of Lattimer's drug store below accommodated others, and with the overflow still surging and swirling in the street, the Army and Navy Veterans' hall on lower Front Street was hastily thrown open and the regular dance there deferred. Two hundred more were cared for here. Even in the law offices of Mr. E. J. Butler, K.C., other groups were seated around tables carrying on the euchre and bridge games which characterized the evening. A generous gesture by the local Knights of Columbus for the use of their hall was unwillingly turned down, when it was found that every available chair and table had been pressed into service for another entertainment.

Standing Room Only

They came in tuxedos, business suits, evening dresses and fur wraps. Long before eight o'clock in the evening the first files were slowly winding along Front Street near the new hall, seeking admission. Ticket takers were helpless to stem the tide. By eight-thirty there was standing room only, with long queues still pressing for entrance. Then steps were taken to care for the overflow. Even following the games of euchre and bridge which were held, the crowd stayed on. From midnight until two o'clock in the morning, soft strains of the dance bands at both halls testified to the throngs within.

Received with a room shaking applause, and with his voice carrying clearly above the strident murmur and hubbub of voices and scuffling feet, Dr. J. A. Faulkner, Liberal candidate for this riding, officially opened the bright, new hall.

"As I declare this Club open, I want to impress upon the citizenship of this community, that the Belleville Liberal Club stands for more than simply narrow minded partisanship. It stands for the true principles of Liberalism; the uplifting of the community; the brotherhood of man," he said.

"Other opportunities will be given to discuss political issues," continued Dr. Faulkner, as the applause subsided, "and my address tonight will be brief. I do, however, want to pay sincere tribute to the help that has made this club room possible. I want to thank Mr. Thos. Harris, in particular, and his noble band of men, who have contributed their time and work without charge to make a club, which will stand as a monument for fair play to all our citizens, regardless of their former political affiliations. And again, in declaring this club room open, I want to impress upon all citizens, no matter, what political faith they profess, or what creed they are, that it is their club to use, when and as often as they like.

"We have tried to live up to this since the inception of the club. As a social service club, we have tried by every means to give help and comfort to the poor unfortunates of the city. This task, however, would have been made impossible without the assistance of the ladies of the club, who have worked unremittingly toward that end."

"If," he continued, "addressing the ladies in particular,—if at any time you can assist in this noble work of bringing some comfort and aid to the poor of the city, no matter what political leanings you may possess, it would be a graceful and generous gesture to offer to assist in the work."

Made Two Addresses

At the Army and Navy Veterans' Hall, where two hundred more guests of the Club had found space for dancing until the early hours, Dr. Faulkner repeated his address.

"I am overwhelmed by the response, that has been given myself and associates this evening," he said simply. "I'd like to talk all evening, but you haven't come here to listen to addresses. I can only express in a very small measure the confidence and thanks that I feel tonight following this never to be forgotten reception."

The same open invitation, that the new club room was theirs to use at any time, was given by the speaker.

Gaily decorated by hanging streamers of color, the new club rooms of the Belleville Liberal Club on Front Street, presented a beautiful appearance on Monday evening. Soft lights and the rich but subdued trim of the hall, and the hanging drapes on the windows transformed the interior of the building. The floor of new hardwood, where one could see it in small patches between the dancing feet, gleamed with smooth polish and varnish.

The Club has been in existence for many years, with the former quarters at 34 Bridge Street, but popular demand compelled officers of the Club to secure new and more commodious quarters. The quarters chosen at the present place have been completely redecorated and renovated from top to bottom. Four hundred people can easily be accommodated in the large hall alone. There is a large cloak room, ante room, executive office, a well equipped kitchen and rest rooms.

Bridge, Euchre Played

Bridge, and euchre furnished the entertainment for hundreds during the early part of the evening, and the scores turned in were remarkably high. Prizes for the euchre were awarded as follows:— Ladies, Mrs. S. Louis; Mrs. O'Brien and Mrs. Newman in order named. For the gentlemen: Mr. T. Nunn, Mr. H. Pointer and A. E. Chaplin. The ladies' bridge prize was won by Mrs. Nixon, and the gentlemen's was won by Mr. J. Hibbard.

A beautiful bedspread upon which the ladies of Murney Ward had been working for weeks under the supervision of their Chairwoman, Mrs. Reid, was won by Mr. Daniel Rush with No. 105.

Two door prizes of one half ton of coal each were win by Mrs. Quincey and Leo. Buckley.

Refreshments were served immediately following the cards by the ladies in attendance under the direction of Miss Hurley and the secretary, Mrs. Asselstine. Mrs. Geo. Naylor had charge of the kitchen. The card games were supervised by Mrs. H. Sharp, Mrs. Monk, Mrs. Whelan and Mr. T. Hyland with Miss Hurley and Mrs. Holton, keeping bridge scores.

Following the cards, the rest of the evening, until well on toward two o'clock in the morning, was spent in dancing to the rhythmic melodies of two dance bands. Soft strains of the Merrymakers coaxed even the most tired feet at the new Club Rooms, while at the Army and Navy Veterans' Hall, Clare's orchestra furnished the music for all classes of dancers, with the popular square dance gaining favor earlier in the morning.

President—G. H. Holton; Vice-President—Geo. Griffin; Vice-President—Miss A. Hurley; Secretary—J. D. O'Flynn; Treasurer—T. Harris; Executive—E. J. Butler, W. J. Martin, H. B. Wilson, S. Kroch, E. Vermilyea, R. Rierden, W. Fairbairn, R. Carruthers, B. Flagler, R. Snell, J. Fitzgerald, J. Ross, Geo. Dawkins, G. Peterson, C. Brown, T. Hyland, Ed. McQuaid, W. Turner, O. Butler.

"WAS TAKING EVERY KIND OF DRUG FOR CONSTIPATION"

Then ALL-BRAN Brought Relief

Read this very enthusiastic letter:

"I am 34 years old and as far back in my life I have been constipated. I was so bad that I had one bowel movement every five or six days. I was taking every kind of drug known for constipation.

"Now for the last two months I have been eating a little ALL-BRAN night and morning and I have at least two to three bowel movements each day."—Mr. Frank Piratzky (address furnished upon request)

Laboratory tests show Kellogg's ALL-BRAN provides "bulk" and vitamin B to aid elimination. ALL-BRAN is also a fine source of iron for the blood.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is much like that in leafy vegetables. Inside the body, it forms a soft mass. Gently, this clears out the intestinal wastes.

Isn't this safer than taking harmful patent medicines? Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. Severe cases with each meal. If not relieved this way, see your doctor.

You'll enjoy eating Kellogg's ALL-BRAN as a cereal with milk or cream—sugar or honey or fresh fruits added. Or, to use in cooking.

In the red-and-green package. At all grocers. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

DRAIN CARBURETOR BEFORE STARTING

"Sweating" Causes Water to Get Into Gasoline

If you have trouble in starting your car this weather, open the pet cock of the carburetor and drain it before starting. It's been hard to get gas that is free from water this weather owing to the "sweating" of the underground tanks, it was explained by a local mechanic today.

Not least of those effected by the recent cold weather have been the drivers of large trucks. Water in the gasoline, it was explained by a veteran driver, has almost crippled the regular schedule in the colder weather. Carburtors have frozen and left the large trucks by the roadside, while perspiring drivers have kindled small fires to thaw them out.

PUMP LARGEST AMOUNT ON THE COLDEST DAY

Nearly Three Million Gallons Pass Through Plant in Day

Just in case you have been curious,—the water in the Bay of Quinte at present may be the perfect temperature for a polar bear's bath, but for humans, not so good. The average daily temperature this month was given by city pump house attendants at 34 degrees. The summer temperature of the same water is 70 degrees.

Cold weather and the consequent opened taps has created a heavy demand for water now being pumped. On the mildest day, Friday, the largest amount of water ever pumped in one day since the installation of the filter, was recorded. A total of nearly 3,000,000 gallons were pumped. That was the same day, attendants recall, that two hundred phone calls from residents of the city requesting temperatures were answered.

So far this winter the plant has burned in the neighborhood of 38 tons of coal for heating. The average is about the same as other years.

T. H. JARRETT WELL-KNOWN

Associated With Newspaper Work Practically All Life

Mr. T. Howard Jarrett, well known former editor of the Quinte Sun, Trenton, who recently resigned that position to take over the management of The Advertiser, New Toronto, together with the printing plant of that publication, has entered upon just another phase of a varied career connected with newspaper work that has claimed him since, as he puts it, "I first left the parental door step to make my own way".

Mr. Jarrett is well known in Belleville, Trenton and surrounding districts but little of the early life of the newspaper man has been given.

Mr. Jarrett was born in Toronto in 1893 and spent his early days in the print shop of the Advocate, Trenton. In 1910 he joined the staff of the Union Bank at Haileybury, but later resigned to take a position with the New Daily Review, Portage La Prairie, Manitoba, as reporter. Since then the copy desk and editorial pen has claimed him as their own. In 1914 he was sent from The Review to The Pas to establish the Northern Post, a subsidiary of The Review.

Joined Up

Then war broke out. Howard returned to Portage La Prairie to enlist in the army. He was sent from Winnipeg with the 17th Battery C. E. F., and served in France and England until April 1916 He was wounded then, sent back to Blighty and spent his convalescence in a Nottingham hospital. From there he returned to the gun pits and in 1917 was gassed and sent to hospital at Edinburgh. After another period in hospital, he was given a position at the Army Pay office at Witley.

In 1919 Mr. Jarrett was demobilized and immediately launched again on newspaper work on the Trenton Advocate. From here he went to Port Hope and re-established the Port Hope Times. Later he went to St. Mary's, where he accepted the position as foreman of the printing department under the late J. W. Eddy. Then in 1921 he returned and joined his father, now Magistrate Jarrett, on the Quinte Sun.

Active in Civic Work

Captain Jarrett of the Canadian Militia, has always taken an active interest in civic affairs. He has been secretary of the Trenton Park Commission and a member of the Trenton School Board. He was former president of the Trenton Softball League, secretary of the O. H. A. Club for six years and Hon. Scoutmaster of the Trenton Troop. His move from Trenton to New Toronto has left a gap that has been hard to fill. But good wishes from all who know him accompany Captain Jarrett on his new venture which, after all, has just been one of many, that have been distinguished by success.

THRONE SPEECH VOTE TONIGHT

Debate on Speech, Waging For Two Weeks, Nearing End

OTTAWA, Feb. 13—(CP)—Division bells are due to ring out in the House of Commons tonight as the members vote on the address in reply to the speech from the throne and an amendment expressing want of confidence in the government. The vote will mark the end of the debate, which has been carried on since the parliament opened and the passing of the first of the regular landmarks of the session.

United Farmer members had a large say in the House's deliberations yesterday as three of them pressed resolutions. One was voted down, he second withdrawn and the third stands for further debate.

Nationalization of the life insurance business was urged by William Irvine (U.F.A. Wetaskiwin) but rejected by an overwhelming vote. Nine Liberals voted for the resolution but the rest of that party and all the Conservatives present voted against it.

SERVICES LAID IN SOFT SOIL ESCAPE

Plenty of Trouble in Foster Ward Because of Rock

Fifty per cent of the frozen water services to homes all through the city since the commencement of the cold weather have been registered in Foster Ward, it was stated by officials of the department. Ninety percent of the trouble, it was further explained can be to the fact, that the frost readily penetrates rock of which the ward is largely composed. Elsewhere in the city, where rock occurs, the same trouble is noted, while services laid in the softer soil have escaped the trouble. Although care has been taken by the department to lay the services deep enough below the frost line in the rock, when first installed, it was explained by Mr. E. T. Austin, manager, that this care is not exercised in all cases, when house installation is made.

"We've found some of the pipes running within a foot or so above the top of the ground on the rock. These are the ones which freeze first," stated the manager.

PRAISEWORTHY BUSINESS

As the depression lifts, those men and women who have had steady positions all through the lean years, should be among the most thankful, yet it is doubtful if they can be as thankful as those who have been without work and rejoice to find themselves back in harness again.

Industrial corporations and employers have been doing their best to keep their staffs at the fullest possible in order not only to do their share towards easing some of the burdens of the slump, but because the human equation has entered into the question of the employment of so many during the dull years.

Employees must appreciate what has been done for the staff by a business head or a corporation. Employees can never fully express that appreciation even with the most wholehearted surrender of themselves to the performance of their duty.

Business which has been conducted along these lines needs no control from Ottawa or any other capital. It is Christianity in business.

WINTER TO BE REMEMBERED

Folk nurtured on mild winters may naturally feel a little fear lest the worst of the winter is not over. Those sudden subterranean dips which have been experienced this winter tend to make the man or woman who looks much at the thermometer or barometer frightened. Indeed a radio broadcast the other night tended to instill such fear and hysteria.

But as fears never accomplished anything, the average man and the average woman will take precautions not to be caught without fuel and not to leave pipes and windows exposed if possible and so trust to the continuance of the milder weather which began on Saturday.

Generally speaking it begins to become apparent that the people are really growing weary of the steady winter which set in relentlessly in late October and has continued with half a dozen or more bitter spells which have left their mark on fuel bins or the oil tanks, or the wood-boxes.

Indeed it has perhaps been annoying of recent years to hear from old-timers tales of severe winters without any come-back. But the years to come will find the winter of 1933-34 cited as one of the worst. This winter unless it is succeeded by a more severe one next year will become a tradition as th story grows and grows to fullness of the awful visitation in the winter of '33-'34. However there are records kept which will prove or disprove well-founded or unfounded statements in future years.

ENJOYING OUTDOORS

The present season has given opportunity for development of winter sports in a way not equalled in many years. Snow and cold have made outdoor and indoor skating attractive, snowshoeing more tempting and full advantage is taken of the river for amateur skaters and young hockey fans.

It is interesting to note the zeal which the boys show to keep clear a patch of ice on the river on which to skate and play. Of course it is much more interesting than snow shovelling in the old form of clearing the sidewalk.

Years ago iceboat sports as well as horse racing on the ice used to be winter features. Doubtless these would revive were the winters generally to be colder than for some years back.

Tobogganing and sledding will come along also if the weather should be of the kind to keep the young idea thinking of the fresh outdoors.

The riverbank south of the lower bridge is on any afternoon a scene of interest as boys play in the huge banks of snow dumped from trucks into the river after collection from the business streets. Here the boys have constructed tunnels and snow houses.

Rugged health, rosy cheeks, with the doctors' assurance that these cold days are not the foe we thought them will make the youths' and children's reaction to the winter happy.

SIDELIGHTS

TRUCE

You, starling, robber of the food
  I stack on the porch pillar
For chicadees, you and your brood
  Of brothers, shrieking shriller
Than rusty wheels, mock from the summit
  Of my own apple tree.
My paper bombs won't stir you from it,
  Nor keep my suet free,
When my back's turned, from your sharp wits.
  You cram your maws,
Sputter and snatch the choicest bits
  In your strong jaws.

Twenty below today, and storm,
  With sharp snow swirling.
You come without a cry to warn,
  Anxiously curling
Your claws along the window sill,
  Black body huddled,
Feathers puffed out against the chill,
  And acting muddled.
You hide your head beneath your wing,
  Beaten and half-frozen.
You don't mock now; you only cling,
  Begging to join the chosen.

Well, huddle closer! Truce today!
  Here's bread for you cold fellows.
Eat it, I won't drive you away
  Until the weather mellows.
  Tomorrow if it's warm, this ends.
  I'll curse your greedy gizzards.
But valiant enemies turn friends
  In sorrow and in blizzards.

INTERESTING FACTS ABOUT MENINGITIS

Children And Young Adults Are Most Susceptible

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D.
Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright 1933, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Meningitis signifies an inflammation of the meninges, the meninges being the name of the three membranous coverings of the brain. The commonest form of meningitis is so-called cerebro-spinal fever. This is caused by the germ "diplococcus intracellularis." It attacks the coverings of the brain as well as those of the spinal cord.

The organism producing tuberculosis may also cause. It is then referred to as tuberculosis meningitis. The germ that gives rise to pneumonia may be an offender. Then the condition is called pneumonia meningitis. Other diseases like typhoid may also cause symptoms which really are a form of meningitis.

Cerebro-spinal meningitis often occurs in epidemics. Such outbreaks are more frequent in the winter months. Children and young adults are the most susceptible. As a rule, the symptoms of the disease start abruptly. There may, however, first be headache, loss of appetite and pains in the back. In ordinary cases the temperature rises quickly to 101 or 102, and besides headache, vomiting and a severe chill occur. As the headache becomes worse, great sensitiveness to noises develops; likewise to light.

A sign that is very characteristic of meningitis is a painful stiffness of the neck. The stiffness may become so marked that the head is thrown back, due to the rigid contraction of the neck muscles. Sometimes, also, the muscles of the back are involved and the back may be raised from the bed. Convulsions are not so common as one might expect. They do occur, however, in early childhood cases.

The pain in the head may increase during the progress of the disease. The pain is largely in the back of the skull and in the neck. Often the entire spine is sensitive to touch. Delirium is a prominent symptom and it may be very violent. The disease varies a great deal in its course. It gets worse, then better again.

When death occurs it is most frequently during the first days after the onset. In other cases the symptoms usually are severe for five or six days, then improvement results. Such improvement is noted in the lowering of the temperature, in the decrease of the muscles spasms and in a return of the mind to normal.

In children meningitis may leave a chronic thickening of brain coverings and other inflammatory brain damage, which may bring about epileptic convulsions or a state of permanent mental impairment — feeble-mindedness. A condition of hydrocephalus, or "water on the brain," may be another aftermath of the disease.

Nowadays physicians make a "lumbar puncture" and remove fluid from the spinal canal in order to determine the presence of meningitis and its variety. Serum for its cure in certain cases is also administered.

When a child complains of neck and head symptoms it is the part of wisdom always to consult a physician promptly. The cause, to be sure, may not be meningitis, yet it is best to be on the safe side so that a serum may possibly be used and while there is still time.

Dr. Bisch's Daily Diet Hint

Egg Plant In Casserole makes an excellent dish when the caloric content is to be low. First cook two large tablespoonfuls of egg plant, and three oysters; one tablespoonfull cracker crumbs, one tablespoonful butter. Mix these substances well and bake in a casserole. The total caloric energy to be obtained from such a dish, which is satisfying, appetizing and inexpensive, is only seventy-seven.

Little Benny's Note Book

I went to the barber shop to get my hair cut Sattiday morning on account of pop saying it was the last time he would remind me by peaceful means, and the other barber was sitting in his own chair reading a newspaper, saying to my barber, I tell you what, Fred, I dont bleeve this here inflation ideer is all it's blown up to be. Inflating money sounds all rite if you say it quick, but you can inflate any old thing only what's it going to get you? Supposing we went to werk and inflated our lather every time we shaved a man, and supposing we inflated it good and proper so it got in his ears and his eyes and his hair, it wouldn't take off no more whiskers, would it? he said.

Well, maybe not, but notwithstanding that to the contrary they can inflate my money all they feel like, and if some of it gets in my ears and my mouth it'll be Okay with me, Joe, my barber said. I'll choke on it with pleasure, he said, and the other barber said, Yeah? Well(you mite as well amuse yourself choking on it because you wont choke on no more pork chops than you're choking on now, because why? Because they'll inflate the price of pork chops too, that's why, you're asking me and I'm telling you, he said.

O yeah? Well, anyways, it'll put more money in circulation, and the money that's circulating dont gather no moss, the other barber said, and my barber said, My money's going to keep in circulation all rite, it aint even going to waist time waving me goodby. The minnit the old woman read about this inflation bizzness she got the ideer that if she didn't move fast my pay envelope would berst its banks and overflood the house, so she hotfooted it to the installment house and ordered an electric refrigerator, a mechanical piano and a diamond ring, and the ferst payments are due and the last payments aint even in site, he said. And speaking of inflation, if you notice any customers inflating tips, just give me the wink, will you, Joe? he said.

Being the end of my haircut and I didn't wait for any more.

LOOKING BACKWARD

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES
OF BY-GONE YEARS

20 YEARS AGO

FEB. 13, 1914

Rev. R. C. Blagrave, rector of Christ Church, has returned from Picton where he addressed a reunion banquet which was held in connection with the Church of St. Mary Magdalene.

Dr. Alfred Coleman and Mrs. Coleman of Tacoma, Wash., are visiting friends in the city and vicinity.

Mr. P. S. Rockwell, formerly of this city, now holds a responsible position with the Canadian Merchants Agency Limited, Toronto.

Another hockey game that will go down in history as one of the events of the local arena was that of last night when the Lewis Company team crossed sticks with the Cleaners and Pressers. At half time the score was 4 to 3 in favor of the Lewis Company and at full time the score was 6 to 6. The brilliant rushes made by Galloway and Kelly were features of the game. It was a good game and we'll be there at the play-off. Following are the names of the players: Lewis Company—Duesberry, J. Hawley, Miller, Howe, Elliott and Galloway. Cleaners and Pressers—Neville, Lee, Kelly, Sprague, Hay and Shoener.

It would appear that about the biggest mistake Kipling made when he called Canada "Our Lady of the Snows" was in using the term "lady". There has been nothing lady-like about this winter.

Premier Roblin of Manitoba will arrive here in a few days to spend a short time with relatives and friends in the city and vicinity.

Mr. W. E. Vandervoort spent yesterday in Napanee.

Mayor Chown has returned from a business trip to St. Catharines.

40 YEARS AGO

FEB. 13, 1894

Yesterday afternoon and last night the city and vicinity experienced one of the worst storms that has struck here in many a day. A fine dry snow propelled by a gale from the northeast combined to make it most uncomfortable for those who were compelled to be out. The snow piled up in fantastic drifts and billows in every doorway and nook. Front Street on the east side was covered by a continuous drift averaging from three to four feet in depth while on the west side there was comparatively little snow. In fact the east side of almost every street in the city running north and south was almost impassable. The midnight train from the west arrived here at five o'clock this morning and the only stage to arrive up until late this afternoon was the one from Trenton. Owing to the heavy fall of snow and the forming of anchor ice on the water above Coleman's dam, the river has raised higher than it was yesterday and it is still coming up. The water has backed up to within about fourteen inches of Coleman's dam and Walker's foundry was nearly at a standstill at noon. There seems to be no relief for the water at the mouth of the river and unless it gives away soon considerable damage will follow.

FEB. 13, 1884

There are some very interesting events in the family history of John Diamond, who at the age of 88 years passed from this life recently at the home of his son Ald. W. J. Diamond, at the corner of Charles and Queen streets. The late Mr. Diamond's father was born at Balston, about 30 miles from Albany, N.Y., and when twenty four years old, owing to his loyalty to Great Britain, came to Canada. His brother Jacob came with him. They walked by the way of Montreal and as soon as they reached Canada they entered the service of the King. Grandfather Diamond, as he was called, got his discharge in Montreal at the close of the Revolutionary war. He was married in that city to Christine Loyst and with her came to Hay Bay in the township of Fredericksburg and settled on a farm of 200 acres which he drew for service. He was one of the first settlers in the Hay Bay district. Here the late John Diamond was born. His mother during the war was employed by the British in carrying despatches on and along Mohawk River. As an instance of her loyalty and courage it may be stated that on one occasion when a party of rebels came to her father's house in Philadelphia and attempted to take a horse, she seized a gun from the man who was going to take the horse and threatened to shoot him and probably would have done so had not the officer in charge of the party ordered the man to leave the horse. Grandfather and grandmother Diamond died on their farm, the former at the age of 87 and the latter at the age of 86 years. When the war broke out in 1812, John Diamond enlisted and served until peace was restored.

R. L. PIERCEY COMING HERE

British Coal Operator Will Study Trade Outlook in Canada

R. L. Piercey, prominent Welsh Coal operator has arrived in New York on the Bremen and will visit Canada, stopping in Belleville, to confer with the Commerce Crusaders. Afterwards he will go to Toronto and confer with Col. the Hon. Thomas L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture on an elaborate plan for the extension of the Canadian cheese trade with Wales.

"Reciprocal trading between Swansea and Canada promises to develop considerably this year.

"Following the arrangement recently made by T. T. Pascoe, Ltd., colliery agents and shipbrokers, Swansea, for the importation direct from Belleville (Ontario) of Canadian produce in ships loaded with anthracite coal outward from Swansea, it is now announced that they have completed an agreement with the Government of Nova Scotia for the importation of Nova Scotian pit-props.

"In an interview on Wednesday with the Western Mail's Swansea representative, Mr. R. L. Piercey (managing director of Messrs Pascoe) said that as far as possible the pit-props would be shipped in steamers which had carried anthracite coal to Canada, thus ensuring to owners a round voyage charter. The first cargo, one of 3,000 tons, was due to arrive at Swansea next month, and further cargoes would follow at regular intervals. The pit-props would be delivered at Swansea at a price which was competitive with other pit-props and the quality would also be equal.

"Colliery proprietors were very appreciative of the efforts that was being made, as was shown by the fact that the cargo already fixed up had been sold.

"Mr. Piercey pointed out that Canada purchased from us last year more than a million tons of Welsh anthracite and was, therefore our second largest customer. This substantial market had to a very large extent been obtained through the preference given to Welsh anthracite by the Canadian Government by way of an embargo on Russian and a duty on American and German anthracite. It was the only important market which we had for Welsh anthracite that was not subject to discriminating licences, quota restrictions, or duties against our coal.

"Canada, he added, had asked for reciprocity and the Welsh anthracite collieries were glad to co-operate in giving Canada an opportunity to secure a market here for her pitwood.

Comparative Figures

"Mr. Piercey quoted the following figures for 1932 of imports of pitwood from, and exports of anthracite to, Russia, Portugal, and Canada, which he characterised as very illuminating.

"Not only did Russia not purchase a single ton of Welsh anthracite in exchange for the orders placed in Russia for pit-props, he said, but what was more important, Russia had become our most unscrupulous competitor with her own anthracite in our markets at prices which were uneconomical.

"Already arrangements have been completed for a second consignment of produce to come to Swansea, and as soon as the St. Lawrence is open for shipping it is hoped to commence the direct cargo shipments to which reference was made some time ago."

Frankford Continuation School Presents Annual Entertainment

Early Morning Fire Destroys Munn Home

FRANKFORD—The Frankford Continuation School presented their annual concert in the school auditorium on Thursday evening with a small attendance on account of the severe weather. The chairman for the evening was Mr. Earl Bell, the new Board of Education Secretary who was introduced by the President of the Literary Society after an opening chorus by the school—"O Canada."

The following numbers were pleasingly presented:

A short play entitled "Ici, on Parle Francais," was well presented in which Mr. and Mrs. Squiggins (Chas. Anderson and Beatrice Harrison) find themselves in difficulties following their display of a sign intimating that "French Is Spoken Here," when a Frenchman Victor Dupois (Donald Johnson) arrives to board at the same time as Angilina (Doris Bush.) The maid Anna Maria (Freda Rogers) leaves Major Ruttan (Allan Rogers) arrives looking for his wife, supposedly Angilina. The household is thrown into confusion by the wrathful Major, and is only cleared by the timely arrival of the actual Mrs. Ruttan (Clule Nugent) when the romantic attentions of Victor Dupois and Angilina are then encouraged, the maid returns and Mr. annd Mrs. Squiggins find their equilibrium with the removal of the sign "Ici, on Parle Francais."

The home of Mr. Albert Munn occupied by her and Mr. Ab. Munn and family was totally destroyed by fire about seven o'clock Friday night, when fire starting in the chimney got beyond control before noticed. Hastily summoned neighbours removed some of the furnishings downstairs but little was saved upstairs. The property and contents were partially covered by insurance. Neighbouring frame houses were saved by the lack of wind. Owing to the fact that the fire had gained too much headway before the alarm was given the fire apparatus was not used other than the chemical outfit. Mrs. Munn was absent at the time having gone to Trenton in the afternoon.

Lord Marley Appeals

Lord Marley, one of the deputy Speakers of the British House of Lords, and chairman of the world committee to aid victims of the Fascist regime in Germany, is shown as he spoke before a distinguished audience at the Aldine club. Lord Marley, who is in New York on a lecture tour on behalf of the sufferers in Germany, was greeted by Mayor LaGuardia at city hall earlier in the day.

Mr. Percy Peck also Mr. Alex Nivison of Johnstown spent Friday last with Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Curtis.

Coach Ackers of Stirling had brought his school team into shape to defeat the Wooler team here on Friday night by a 6-2 score. The Stirling team with their neat forward passes and general aggressiveness along with Sprental's work in goal are showing form which will give Frankford's leading team in the Southern School League plenty of work to beat in the finals soon. The first two periods of this game were scoreless for Wooler while Robinson netted two and Joblin one for the visitors. In the final frame with the cold keeping Stirling still on the offensive Robinson again tallied two and Brookes one. Ruttan who was easily the best man on the Wooler line left his defence position to poke home Wooler's two tallies. Ruttan's continuous rushes would almost indicate that he would be better on the forward line where his scoring ability would show to better advantage. Only one penalty was handed out in the entire game. In Stirling on Wednesday night no penalties were given in the Stirling Frankford tilt which speaks volumes for the sportsmanship in this league.

Referee—McColl of Wooler.

THREE-ACT PLAY AT STIRLING H.S.

"The Cricket On The Hearth" Well Given

Stirling, Feb. 13—The Stirling High School Literary Society assembled on Friday afternoon in the high school auditorium to witness a splendid program staged by Form II talent. The outstanding feature of the meeting was a three act play "The Cricket on the Hearth," by Charles Dickens, and presented by the youthful performers in a splendid manner.

The cast was made up of Lorne Johnson (John Peerybingle) Olive Stuart ("Dot" or Mary Peerybingle." Stuart McGowan (Tackleton of Gruff and Tackleton), Olive Munro (Tilly Slowboy), Jean Munro (Bertha Plummer, the blind girl), Roy Juby (Caleb Plummer, the old toymaker and Bertha's father), Harold Baker (Edward, Caleb Plummer's lost son and the mysterious deaf gentleman), Laura Tucker (May Fielding). The play was a splendid success and congratulations are due Miss Alice Calow, B.A., English specialist of the S. H.S. staff in directing the play. President Fred Joblin acted as chairman and called upon secretary Dorothy Reid for the minutes of the last meeting. In the interval between the first and second acts, Miss Olive Munro rendered a piano solo. The intermission between the second and third acts was taken up by a banjo solo "The Sidewalks of New York," played by Harold West and accompanied at the piano by Miss Alice Calow. The meeting closed with the National Anthem.

Y'S MEN'S PLAY PLEASES TWEED

Presentation Given Under Auspices United Church Choir

Tweed—"Skinner's Dress Suit", a three act comedy written by Henry Irving Dodge and directed by Miss Jessie Tuite was presented by the Y's Men's Club of Belleville, on Thursday, February 8th, in the Auditorium at Tweed. This play had a month ago, drawn a capacity audience in Belleville and the choir of Tweed United Church was very fortunate in securing it. The coldest night of the present winter and of many winters, greeted the cast and the audience, and resulted in a much smaller attendance than this fine play and its equally splendid presentation by the all-star Belleville cast deserved. There is no doubt whatever, that had the weather been at all favorable the hall would have been packed to the doors.

Every member of the cast was eminently fitted for the part which he or she played resulting in a production which excelled anything ever presented in Tweed in the part. From Mr. Stanley Wilbur as Skinner and Miss Sylva Ross as "Honey" Rutherford down to Ewart Cather as Tommy the office boy every part was admirably played, and the delighted audience was not slow to manifest its appreciation.

The cast was composed of:

Tommy—Ewart Cather.
Mr. McLaughlin— Gerald Graham
Mr. Perkins—Ken Munnings
Mr. Briggs—Harvey Ross
"Honey" Rutherford—Sylva Ross
Skinner—Stanley Wilbur
Mrs. McLaughlin—Mildred Lloyd
Olivia—Eleanor Bone.
Mrs. Colby—Edith K. Budden
Mr. Williard Jackson—Russell Hachborn

Mrs. Jackson—Helen Sulman

At the conclusion of the play the cast and the members of the choir of the United Church were entertained in the Church Parlors by the Women's Association who had provided an excellent supper for them. Rev. R. R. Nicholson and Mr. S. H. Connor expressed their appreciation of the excellent play and of the splendid supper. Mr. Court Miller who had charge of the arrangements thanked the ladies for their hospitality.

Whoever said the winter of 1933 and 1934 would be an open one certainly knew what he was talking about. To date it has been open—wide open. The temperature on both Wednesday and Thursday nights, according to the local Forestry branch was 40 degrees below zero

Word has been received by Mrs. W. S. Gordon that Mrs. (Rev.) E. B. Cooke of Cannington is seriously ill in the hospital in Toronto.

Serious difficulty, due to the extremely low temperatures, has been experienced by the residents living east of the river in obtaining a supply of water. The water main which crosses the bridge has frozen solid and resisted efforts to thaw it out. Equipment was secured from Belleville for the purpose and in the meantime one of the pipes burst and the water has been shut off entirely. New pipes must be secured before service can be resumed.

At the Young People's meeting on Monday night, Miss Evelyn Drinkwater gave an interesting account of the Winter School recently held in Belleville for the Bay of Quinte Conference.

Pedestrians along Bridge St. East, were treated late this forenoon, to witness the now rare spectacle of a runaway horse. A horse of the Citizens Dairy attached to a delivery sleigh, galloped westward along Bridge St. and regardless of the red flash against it, dashed across Front St. By the time the equine had crossed the lower bridge its speed had diminished applicable, and it turned northward on Coleman St. to seek its quarters and oats at the dairy plant. The sleigh remained upright and no damage was resultant of the horses unguided morning capers.

THREE INJURED IN RIOTING IN IRELAND

Irish Troops Called out to Quell Disturbances

DUBLIN, Irish Free State, Feb. 12 —(AP)—A woman and two children were numbered today among the injured in a week-end of political violence.

They were hurt seriously when a bomb damaged the home of the woman, Mrs. Macrory, at Dundalk. Police said her son testified in a case in which two men were sentenced for robbing a collector of the United Ireland Party.

Earlier yesterday, soldiers were called to quell disorders at both Dundalk and Drogheda when members of the party, opposing the government of President Eamon De Valera, battled opponents—and police fought both.

Clubs were wielded freely. Several men were injured.

Two hundred police were rushed in lorries from Dublin to break up a fight which started when a crowd attacked a group of U.I.P. supporters travelling from Drogheda to Dundalk.

BOULEVARDS PEACEFUL

Paris, Feb. 13 (CP Cable)— The Paris squares and boulevards which only a few days ago were centres of violent rioting enjoyed unusual peace today on account of the strike. Many stores were closed and with transport services curtailed there were fewer persons around than usual.

LIBERAL CANDIDATES TO BE NOMINATED

Determined to Have Candidate in Every Riding

Toronto, Feb. 12—Determined to have a Liberal candidate in every riding in the province at the next election, Ontario members of the party have called two more nomination meetings for Toronto this week. On Thursday, James Marsh of Toronto, well known Labor organizer, will probably be nominated to contest the riding of Toronto Riverdale on a straight Liberal ticket.

On Friday night, Mitchell F. Hepburn, M.P., Provincial Party leader, and Harry C. Nixon, Progressive chieftain, will atend a meeting of Toronto Eglington delegates which is expected to select Alderman Harold Kirby as its standard bearer in the coming election.

POULTRY

Just as for the meats, I am going to refer my students to "Marketing and Meal-Planning", to learn how to buy poultry, and what to buy for different purposes.

To Prepare For Cooking.

We have to prepare chickens, turkeys, ducks, geese and other birds in pretty much the same way.

Poultry bought from the butcher is usually delivered already cleaned. Your best way to learn to clean a bird yourself, is to have someone actually show you.

Wash bird well inside and out. Baking soda in hot water or rubbed into the skin and rinsed off, is helpful. Oily birds like goose, should be scrubbed. Flush out inside with running water and be sure nothing is left clinging to the inner framework.

The giblets should be delivered with the bird. Split gizzard, remove the inner sack (uncut if possible); wash heart, gizzard; add the neck and wing tips, and simmer them together to make stock for gravy, or you may cream this meat or make up some little attractive dish with it and left-overs.

To Roast a Bird.

TIME TABLE:—Sear bird in very hot oven, 500° F., then reduce heat to 375° F. and allow:

Turkey—(8 to 10 pounds), 2½ to 3 hours.
Turkey—(13 pounds up), 3½ to 5 hours.
Goose—25 minutes to the pound with 20 minutes extra.
Duck (domestic)—20 minutes to the pound with 20 minutes extra.

Clean and prepare as needed. Stuff suitably. (I will give stuffing recipes later.) The body cavity is stuffed in all the birds—the crop also in the turkey (a different stuffing from the one used in the body, sometimes gives a useful alternative). Allow space for stuffing to expand in cooking. Mould turkey breast to be evenly rounded.

Truss the stuffed bird into good shape. Use one long skewer to fasten legs high and close to body, another through the wings. Twist the middle of a yard or so of string around the ends of the legs, drawing them together if chicken or turkey, leaving them an inch apart if duck or goose. Carry crossed string under the tail to the two ends of the leg skewer, and twist around it securely. Then cross the two ends of string on the back of the bird and carry to the ends of the wing skewer; twist tightly around it, then tie the string, drawing tight. This keeps all the string on the back of the bird, so that its breast and top are not marked. Turn down the long flap of neck-skin over the back, and fasten with a short skewer.

Rub breast, wings and legs of turkey or chicken with soft butter or bacon dripping—and if a crisped skin is liked, make a paste of fat and flour and rub it in. Duck and goose, because of their own natural fat, need only be dredged with flour. An especially fat goose may be steamed for an hour before roasting, to get rid of excess fat.

Set bird on rack in roasting pan; it is a good plan to lay a few stripes of fat side bacon over the breast of chicken or turkey. I prefer to do this after the skin has browned. Have oven hot—500° F.—until breast is lightly browned, then reduce heat.

Have plenty of bacon dripping or unflavored fat in the pan and baste the bird with it regularly—every 15 to 20 minutes. As soon as bird is somewhat browned, reduce heat to moderate, 350° F. If using cover, put it on at this point.

To test when done, thrust tine of cooking fork into leg flesh and twist slightly; if flesh leaves bone, bird is cooked. Remove it to hot platter, taking out skewers and removing string.

Pour off extra fat in pan, carefully saving brown sediment and 2 tablespoons fat for each cup gravy desired. (See Lesson 1 for gravy instructions).

To Stew Chicken.

Stewing a chicken leads the way to many good dishes. The second most popular way to cook chicken, is to stew it—and this is also a very delicate way to cook turkey.

An older bird, which would not be suitable for roasting, will make many delicious dishes if it is first stewed properly until tender.

Follow the same rules as for stewing meat—put chicken in large pot (I consider it holds more juice and flavor if cooked whole); cover with boiling water, add salt and pepper, a few slices carrot, a stalk or two of celery, when possible, parsley, and if liked, a slice of onion. Or you may use some celery salt or onion salt—convenient seasonings; or perhaps you keep some dried celery leaves on hand for seasoning.

Bring to boil, then reduce at once and simmer gently, always below boiling point, until meat is tender enough to leave bones easily.

Hot stewed chicken—or as it is often called, "boiled chicken" (although it should never really boil while cooking) is very good served with drawn butter sauce (Lesson 1) poured over it—and an extra sauce-boat filled with sauce. Minced parsley improves the sauce. Egg sauce is also good over stewed chicken.

Or the chicken may be carved in pieces for serving and piled on its platter, with the sauce over it. A border of fluffy fresh-baked tea biscuits should surround it. Or steamed dumplings—cooked separately or right in the stew pot with the chicken at the end of its cooking period. You have learned how to make both the biscuits and the dumplings in Lesson 3.

DEEP CHICKEN PIE—Put neatly carved stewed chicken into deep baking dish; small balls or dice of partially cooked potatoes, carrots, tiny onions, may be added; or cooked celery, mushrooms or green peas.

Cover with medium-thick cream sauce.

Make a crust of plain or richer soft drop-biscuit dough (an egg in it is good), and drop it over the top; bake in a hot oven 30 to 45 minutes—covering with paper if necessary. Or shape the dough (having it a little stiffer) in small biscuits and arrange these over the surface of the pie and bake in a hot oven. This requires less time.

Chicken and sauce may be heated before adding biscuit dough, to lessen time of cooking.

BROILED OR FRIED "CHICKEN"—Carve stewed fowl, dip in melted fat and broil till surface is crisp and brown. Or dip in fat and flour and pan-fry; or use flour, then egg and seasoned breadcrumbs, and fry in deep, hot fat.

Other Methods.

BROILED SPRING CHICKEN—Grease broiling iron and press split young chicken flat upon it. Brush skin with melted butter or bacon dripping and broil over or under direct heat.

FRIED SPRING CHICKEN—Cut young chicken in pieces for serving, roll in seasoned flour and brown in plenty of very hot fat in frying pan, turning to brown all surfaces evenly. Then pour in about ¼ cup boiling water, cover tightly, and cook slowly until tender—probably 30 to 40 minutes longer. Remove chicken to hot platter in oven and make a milk gravy in the pan. (See Lesson 1).

OVEN-FRIED CHICKEN—Prepare young chicken as for pan frying. Put in baking dish, with plenty of bacon dripping or other fat, and cook about 45 minutes or until tender, in hot oven, 450° F., turning frequently to brown evenly.

Or dip chicken pieces in melted fat, then in seasoned flour, spread on baking pan, bake in hot oven, 425° F., till brown; turn, pour in ½ cup boiling water, cover, and finish at moderate heat, 350° F.—probably ¾ to 1 hour total cooking.

FISH

In "Marketing and Meal Planning", you will learn the very important points about buying fish. Be SURE you understand them.

I am just going to tell you very briefly, the most useful ways of cooking fish.

BROILED—Grease hot broiling rack. Brush with soft butter and season fish steaks or fresh fillets or small whole fish; broil same as meat.

PAN FRIED—Season steaks, fresh fillets or small whole fish, and fry in hot pan.

DEEP FRIED—Wipe pieces, dip in seasoned flour, in diluted beaten egg and again in flour or in seasoned, sifted dry crumbs; lower into deep hot fat, 365° F. (or hot enough to brown a little cube of bread in 60 seconds); cook to golden brown. Drain.

OVEN FRIED—Prepare as for frying, put in baking pan, dot with plenty of butter or bacon fat and cook in very hot oven; turn if necessary to brown evenly.

BOILED—Wrap cleaned and scaled fish in a piece of cheese cloth—or still better in wet cooking parchment (for if you use this modern cooking paper, you can cook all your seasonings right into your fish—butter, lemon juice, pepper and salt). The parchment may be washed and used over and over again as it is very tough when wet. Wrap closely, set in the steamer and cook over boiling water, keeping tightly covered.

If boiling in cloth, add chopped onion, celery, and carrot to water; 1 tablespoon vinegar or lemon juice (to increase whiteness and improve flavor), 1 tablespoon butter and ½ teaspoon pickling spice for each quart water, makes plain boiled fish very different. Serve with a good sauce (parsley, drawn butter, egg, from Lesson 1).

BAKED FISH—If possible, place fresh or salted fish on a rack or perforated tin sheet to keep off bottom of pan. Rub cleaned, scaled and washed fish well with flour and dot with bacon dripping or butter or sprinkle with cooking oil. Season well. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F. to 375° F.

Stuffing improves a whole baked fish.

ANOTHER METHOD—You may wrap fish, stuffed or unstuffed, with all its seasonings, closely in wet cooking parchment, set on rack in baking pan, pour in some boiling water, cover closely and bake in hot oven. The juices closed in the cooking parchment make delicious sauce.

STUFFINGS FOR MEAT, FISH, FOWL

Breadcrumbs form the base for most stuffing mixtures; mashed potato is often used, and there are special stuffings such as sausage meat (used in turkey crop), mashed and seasoned cooked chestnuts, etc.

Breadcrumb Stuffings.

There are three types of bread stuffings:

1. The dry, crumbly stuffing—soft breadcrumbs with seasoning and a little softened fat (butter or bacon dripping).
2. Same mixture as above, but moistened with beaten egg and a little milk, water or stock. This holds its shape—will slice nicely.
3. Sliced bread covered with warm water and drained well when soft —then combined with seasonings, melted fat, egg if desired.

Breadcrumb Foundation.

2 cups crumbs, 1 teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, 1 egg (when used), 2 to 3 tablespoons fat, 1 tablespoon minced parsley, 1 to 2 tablespoons onion, milk or water as desired.

Potato Foundation.

Rice or mash required amount of potato (white or sweet). Beat light with beaten egg yolk, butter, a little hot milk and season—with just salt, pepper, parsley and lemon juice; or with additions of onion with sage or savory or mixed herbs.

Special Stuffings.

CHESTNUT—Cook chestnuts, and chop or mash them; combine in any up to equal quantities with breadcrumb stuffing. Wet with egg (diluted if desired).

GIBLET—Cook well-washed gizzard, heart, with neck and wing tips, until tender. Chop meat and add to breadcrumb stuffing.

Uses and Variations.

CHICKEN—(a) Use delicately seasoned breadcrumb foundation recipe; slight onion flavor when desired. Where stronger flavors are preferred a very little powdered sage or savory, or mixed poultry spice, may be added.

(b) Use potato stuffing flavored with parsley and lemon juice.

TURKEY—Use same as chicken, making twice or three times the quantity.

For the crop at least, slightly beaten egg should wet the breadcrumb stuffing, so it will slice nicely. Or a different mixture may be used, such as sausage meat or mashed and seasoned cooked chestnuts bound with egg. Giblet, chestnut and oyster stuffings excellent for turkey.

GOOSE, DUCK, PORK, PORK TENDERLOIN—Use same stuffing as for chicken (in suitable quantity), adding 1 teaspoon powdered sage and more onion to foundation amount; for goose and duck, which are fat themselves, less melted fat may well be used in stuffing.

VEAL—Breadcrumb stuffing, seasoned as for chicken or goose.

LAMB—Breadcrumb stuffing, seasoned as for chicken, including a little onion; finely chopped mint good also.

FISH—Breadcrumb stuffing, with egg when possible—flavored with salt, pepper, parsley, lemon juice and perhaps a little chopped pickle and capers.

Weddings

McGRATH—LALONDE

Stirling—(Special)—The marriage took place at the Church of St. James The Minor, Stirling on Monday, February 12th, at 8 a.m. of Mary Isabelle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Antoine Lalonde of Belleville to Francis Joseph McGrath, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. McGrath of Stirling. The wedding ceremony which was performed in the presence of the immediate relatives and friends was followed by the celebration of the nuptial mass by Rev. H. J. Farrell, P.P. of Stirling.

The wedding march from Lohengrin was rendered by the organist Mrs. J. Clinton McGee, who also played softly during the mass.

The bride was becomingly attired in a midnight blue and white ensemble with matching accessories while her only attendant, Mrs. Arthur Ketcheson, aunt of the groom, was smart in a trimly tailored suit of navy blue with accessories of harmonizing shade. The groom was supported by Mr. Arthur Ketcheson.

During the signing of the register Mrs. J. C. McGee sang "All Joy Be Thine".

Following the ceremony, the bridal party along with the immediate relatives repaired to the groom's home, where a sumptuous wedding breakfast was served.

HINZKE—THOMAS

Christ Church was the scene of an interesting wedding at three o'clock, yesterday, when Aileen Isabel daughter of Mrs. Thomas, and the late George I. Thomas, became the bride of Mr. Walter Hinzke, of Port Arthur, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hinzke. Rev. A. L. Geen officiated at the ceremony.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother-in-law, Mr. H. O. Stewart of Oshawa, wore a smart frock of navy blue triple sheer crepe trimmed with bugle beads, French hat and shoes to match. She carried a bouquet of Sunset roses. Wedding music was played by the organist, Mr. Cyril Waite.

After the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of Mrs. William Cooper, St. Agnes' Manor Apartments. Mrs. G. I. Thomas, wearing a handsome gown of black triple chiffon, received with the bride and groom, forty guests being present. The tea table was most attractive with its decorations of silver, pink and white, pink roses and tall tapers being used to carry out the colour scheme.

Later Mr. and Mrs. Hinzke left on a wedding trip to Montreal, Quebec City, and Ottawa. The bride wore a cadet blue travelling frock with hat to match and her wrap of Hudson seal, silver fox trimmed, was the gift of the groom. On their return they will reside at 30 Emmerson Avenue, Port Arthur.

Kiwanis Dance Smart Party

Despite many counter attractions in the city on Monday night, the At Home sponsored by the Kiwanis Club in Johnstone's Academy was a complete success and a fair profit was made from the enterprise which will be used to further the under privileged work of that organization. The success of the affair can be laid directly to Kiwanian Frank Domenico, who as chairman of the dance committee worked unitiringly and was supported by a most energetic committee.

President Eddie Shapiro and Mrs. Shapiro welcomed the guests and every person entering the hall was the recipient of a carnation for a butonhole bouquet. The hall was most tastefully decorated in the club's colors and Don Lee donated to the club artistically work programmes which enhanced the beauty of the dancing floor. Soft lights played on the many beautiful—gowns worn by the "younger set" and those more mature. The gowns were simply adorable and ranged from the shimmering white to the alluring pastel shades, and vivid jewel tones.

The Commodores provided an excellent musical fare, the numbers being the most popular tunes heard nightly over the radio and encores were insistently demanded and readily given. Favors of all kinds were distributed during the evening and at times the hall was a bedlam of noise from the merry-makers. The dances were so dovetailed, that everyone met everyone else and a most enjoyable party was the result. Many dances for fine favors were run off, the recipients being most pleased. The party continued till two o'clock and then many were reluctant to bid adieu but another such party is promised after the Lenten season.

Government forces also stormed Ebert Court, another municipal apartment block which had been fortified by the Socialists.

Both of these apartment districts had been centres of street fighting during that night, but troops withheld their big offensive until daylight.

[illegible]nts of the inner city of Vi[illegible] could clearly hear the artillery fire at Ottakring, but there were no disorders there.

As the bombardment continued an artillery Captain told the Associated Press the turret-guns (one-inchers) and armored cars were proving too light.

"Those municipal apartments over there," said the Captain, "are Socialist strongholds too.

"We tried to storm them during the night, but there were seven machine gun nests there.

"Inasmuch as it is also filled with women and children, we cannot use the artillery. Therefore we are simply surrounding the place, confining our fire to gunners, who show themselves in the windows."

Snipers among the Socialists fighting against what they term "Fascist threat in the government" peppered soldiers and police with pistol and rifle fire.

Asked to Surrender

Socialists defending George Washington Court—a great municipal apartment house completed scarcely a year ago—were handed an ultimatum to surrender or prepare to receive artillery fire.

The block is equipped with a kindergarten, day nursery, community laundry and other comforts for women and children. The general strike, called by Socialist leaders in Vienna after soldiers and police attacked party headquarters at Linz, continued with paralyzing effects.

The death toll in Southeastern Styria Province, where fighting centred around Graz, was estimated as high as 69. At least as many were believed dead in Upper Austria. Most of the casualties resulted from yesterday's opening struggle at Socialist headquarters in Linz.

In Vienna, it was believed more may have been slain than in either Graz or Linz. Twenty-two soldiers and policemen officially were reported slain.

These reports, added to earlier casualty lists—nearly all unofficial—indicated a death list running into the hundreds. Previously 37 had been estimated slain in fighting at Eggenberg.

While the fighting was at its height, the government struck at Socialist political organizations.

The party was outlawed. Elected public officials were thrown out of office. Many were jailed. Vienna's Burgomaster, Karl Seitz, was among the first to be imprisoned. He was held at the Vienna City Hall.

Otto Bauer, veteran leader of the Socialists, was reported to have escaped across the Austrian Border. Julius Deutsche, the party's general secretary, earlier reported jailed, also was said to have fled.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Feb. 13 (CP)—Mining shares developed a buoyant tone today on the Toronto Stock Exchange, all groups moving into higher ground. Secondary gold shares registered substantial gains under heavy buying.

Senior gold issues were up a few cents to 50 cents by noon. Dome advanced 50 cents to $35.50, McIntyre 50 to $41, Hollinger 5 cents to $13.75. Wright Hargreaves 5 to $7.20 and Lake Shore 50 cents to $45. Teck was off 5 cents and Pioneer 15 cents to $11.75.

Buying was small in the base metal group but prices were up generally. Hudson Bay gained 40 cents to 10.25, Coast Copper was stronger at $4.55 and Sherritt and Sudbury Basin were firm or a point higher.

Secondary gold shares continued to lead the mining section in volume and healthy price gains registered from Sylvanite, and Siscoe and the rest of the group held firm. Silver stocks were all in good demand, supported by a higher price for metal and the base metal shares to strong.

While buying was not heavy in the senior gold issues, the group registered gains up to 50 cents for Dome, Lake Shore and McIntyre. Pioneer sagged moderately.

WALL STREET FINANCIAL

New York, Feb 13.—(AP)—Storm clouds over Europe, the recent United States Aircraft tailspin and probable governmental regulation of speculation apparently failed to disturb the stock market today to any great extent.

Trends were somewhat mixed, however, and, while a number of rail, steel, silver and specialty equities advanced the alcohols were heavy along with scattered aviation issues. Bonds and higher Canadian equities held to a comparatively close range. Shares of International Nickel, Canadian Pacific, Dome and McIntyre ruled steady to a little higher. On the Curb Lake Shore was a shade higher but Hiram Walker eased a point. Dominion Government 4s ruled steady. Other maturities were inactive. The Canadian dollar was 1-16 of a cent lower at 99.06 1-4.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 13— Interlisted industrials, construction, shares the banks and utilities were generally strong in the morning session of the Toronto Stock Exchange industrial section today while the brewery stocks and oils were mainly unchanged and food issues were irregular.

The strong New York morning tone gave International Nickel a lift to 22.90 for a gain of 45 cents. Ford A. again pressed forward under a fair volume of buying, standing at 24 3-8 at noon, up 1-2 and Brazilian gained 1-4 to 13 5-8.

Outside of Walker's common which dropped 3-4 to 44 3-4 the distillery shares held and Industrial Alcohol gained 1-4 to 16 1-4. Distillers Seagram at 21 was unchanged and Brewers and Distillers at 2.55 was unchanged. All the Brewery stocks remained unchanged, Malting at 33, Canada Bud at 9 1-6 and Walkerville at 6.

The general tone of the board elsewhere was firm with substantial improvement appearing in the construction, utility and the bank stocks. Nickel had a rise of nearly half a dollar.

POLICE NEWS

Several theft charges have been reported to the police during the past 24 hours. Fred Mapes, 246 Ann St., had his car stolen last evening but some four hours later it was found abandoned on Pinnacle St. Mr. Mapes parked his automobile on Bridge St. E., early last evening. Upon his return to where the car had been parked, the vehicle was gone. The police were immediately notified. The car was later found abandoned on Pinnacle St. by Constable Taylor, while he was patrolling his beat. Joy riders are blamed for the removal of the car. Some two and one half gallons of gasoline had been consumed.

A boy of tender age was taken into custody by the local police this morning, when he returned to a local junk dealer to collect a sum of money for a number of automobile radiators sold by him to the dealer yesterday. The automobile radiators are alleged by the police to have been stolen from a local second hand car dealer. The youth admitted to the police the theft of the radiators, but, stated he was but stealing them in order to raise funds to provide his mother with food and the necessaries of life, the family being in dire circumstances, he stated. The case was presented in the police court this afternoon.

Dohertys Lose Game to Trenton 5-3 but Win Round 10-5 and Meet Campbellford in Finals

Local "Oilmen" Played Careful Hockey And Took No Chances

GOULD STARS

First Game For Group Title to be Played Here Wednesday

TRENTON, Feb. 13.—(Special)—"Congratulations Belleville."

"Seven goals proved too many".

"May you go far and enjoy the honours."

Enjoying a seven goal lead the Belleville D.A.C. intermediates capitalised to the fullest measure on the margin, when they dropped a 5 to 3 game here last evening to win the semi-finals in the local intermediate O.H.A. group and the right to meet the Campbellford Maroons in the group finals with the first game being played at Belleville on Wednesday night.

The home team facing the large deficit carried the play the majority of the night but could not get into scoring position, when in around the Belleville net as the Dohertys repeatedly set up a defence, that proved a tower of strength. The game was devoid rough play, being cleanly fought with the better team winning the nod. The visitors seemed satisfied to coast along on their wide margin lead and rest up for Wednesday night's tilt versus the Maroons.

Once again Joe Gould led the home team with miraculous saves to stem the tide of battle, when the Belleville team did apply the pressure. In front of him history was made when "Barney" York on the local's defence scored his first goal of the season following a beautiful lone rush and a hard ankle drive, that literally sizzled past Buskard. Smith went well offensively. Of the starting line "Doug" Powers starred, as a matter of fact Powers was the gleaming light for the entire Trenton team with his undying efforts. Normie Johnson carried his usual speed with Bill Miller standing out head and shoulders over the alternates. "Slasher" Bohan played good hockey offensively, when he wasn't decorating the penalty bench, which incidentally was far too frequent for the welfare of the homesters.

D.A.C.'s Play Defence

No particular star shone on the firmament for the L'Heureux-coached aggregation from Belleville as they seemed satisfied to coast in to victory. Rigby was seen at a better advantage, especially on the offensive, he scoring his first goal of the current season. Ethier carried the bulk of the visitor's defence work. The front line of Carl and "Pete" Morgan, flanking Roy Covert played spotty hockey never extending themselves although "Pete" and Roy did stage occasional bursts of speed. The "kid line" of Connors, H. Morgan and McGuire also rested up as did Alex Weir sub defenceman.

The Play

"Pete" Morgan opened the pastime by racing in on Gould, bringing him to his knees on a play, that proved sensational on Gould's part. "Slasher" Bohan took a rest for laying on the hickory and upon his return to the ice camped in front of Buskard to slap home a nicely timed pass from Bill Miller and open the scoring. Buskard beat Smith from close-in and on the return play Rigby drilled one into the upper right hand corner of the net to knot the count. On a scramble in front of Buskard. Smith poked the rubber into the Belleville net on a pass from Miller to end the period.

Gould raced out 20 feet to beat Carl and Pete Morgan at the opening of the second frame. York and Powers were thwarted by the local defence and Bohan again "slashed" his way into the penalty box to have Covert and Pete Morgan combine nicely and knot the score, when the former rifled Pete's pass past Gould. Rosenplot put the locals again in the lead on a long shot from outside the defence. The puck deflected off Rigby's stick into the net. Covert took a rest for holding the puck only to have Bohan push the puck past the Belleville goalie on Powers' nice pass to end the middle canto.

Covert and P. Morgan combined to open the last stanza with Pete back-handing the puck past Gould to end the Belleville scoring although Covert tested repeatedly afterwards. The home team moved five men forward to have York drill a long one past Buskard after weaving threw the Belleville front line. Gould came out to beat Connors, McGuire and H. Morgan while Carl Morgan was also robbed by the same player later. Buskard stemmed the local tide of attack led by Smith, Powers, York and Johnson until the final bell sounded. The local players wished the Belleville team every success in future games and an O.H.A. championship.

Belleville—Goal, Buskard, defence Rigby and Ethier; centre, Covert; wings, Carl and Pete Morgan; subs H. Morgan, Connors, McGuire and Weir.

Trenton—Goal—Gould; defence, Smith and York; centre—Johnson; wings, Powers and Rosenplot; subs Bohan, Miller, Kidd and Utronki.

PRE-GAME PREDICTIONS

By A. E. FULFORD
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Players who were good enough to be picked on the all-star team to play Toronto Leafs in the Bailey benefit match games and train rides that will test the hardiest of the old troopers

All but four of the 16 will play three games of the fastest sport in the world in three nights and sandwich in train trips of anywhere from a few hundred to more than a thousand miles.

Howie Morenz and Aurel Joliat, of Canadiens and Lionel Conacher and Charlie Gardiner of Chicago, are the lucky ones. Their teams don't play tonight. But the other 12 National Hockey League stars must do their best for their employers tonight, stand the test of comparison with other greats of the game Wednesday and then go back into action Thursday in tough league contests.

Eddie Shore and Nels Stewart, of Boston Bruins, will have a particular trying three days. They play New York Rangers tonight in Boston, hop to Toronto for the Bailey game and then leave immediately after it to return to Boston for the Montreal-Boston game Thursday.

Hard Games

And they will have no quiet evening tonight to rest up for the all-star game. Tied with Detroit for United States leadership and determined to leave the persistent Red Wings behind, Lester Patrick's Rangers will have their big guns trained on the cellar team.

Detroit play Maroons in Montreal tonight for points that mean a lot to both teams. Red Wings need them to keep pace with the New Yorkers or forge ahead and Maroons could use them to consolidate their hold on second place in the Canadian division.

Trains carrying the players to the Toronto game will speed along tonight with many thousands of dollars of hockey flesh snoring in their berths. Bill Cook and Ching Johnson, of Rangers, will travel from Boston with Stewart and Shore a shipment that would cost something more than $100,000 if it could be bought.

From Montreal, Larry Aurie and Herb Lewis of Detroit, will join the Maroon representatives, Hooley Smith and Jimmy Ward in the Toronto trip. Red Dutton and Normie Himes, of Americans, who play the Senators in Ottawa tonight, will travel with Frankie Finnigan and Allan Shields, the capital's contribution to the Bailey game.

ROTARIANS HEAR OF BOYS' PARLIAMENT

Kenneth Munnings, Representative, Addresses Local Club

Ken Munnings, who represented the city of Belleville at the Older Boys' Parliament held recently at Aurora, Ontario, was a guest of Belleville Rotary Club Monday, and gave a brief outline of the aims and objects of the Boys' Parliament and what was accomplished at the recent session. Matters of vital moment to the new generation of boys and girls as well as present day problems of young and old were discussed by the representatives present from all parts of Ontario, and recommendations were made to Premier Henry as to conclusions arrived at in regard to pending legislation. One of the suggestions of the Boys' Parliament of general interest is to have an annual celebration in which all youths reaching the age of twenty-one years will be welcomed as citizens and voters. On this occasion the value of the franchise and the duty of citizens can be clearly brought out and emphasized. The speaker outlined the aims and objects of the boy parliamentarians and asked all Rotarians for support.

COLORFUL STARS TO PLAY IN BENEFIT GAME

HOWIE MORENZ

AUREL JOLIAT

Two of the most famous stars of hockey shown in their new N.H.L. All-star sweaters in which they will play against the Toronto Maple Leafs at Toronto in a benefit game for Irvin Ace Bailey, star of the Toronto team, who was injured at Boston when Eddie Shore knocked him to the ice. It is feared Bailey's hockey career is finished as a result of the injury. Eddie, however, will take part in the exhibition game, along with Joliat and Morenz and two players from every team in the league.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

"On to Campbellford and another group title"—was the cry heard in the Belleville dressing room following the elimination of the Trenton intermediates last evening. Coach Wilf L'Heureux did not ask the locals to extend themselves as they have two tough games ahead of them this week. The Maroons have the benefit of a two week lay-off and will naturally be as fresh as the well known spring daisy when they take to the ice here Wednesday night.

Last night's tilt proved but a good workout for the locals. "Mind you we are not detracting from the efforts of the Bowen-coached clan as they played heads-up hockey but naturally with the group finals ahead of them the "oilmen" coasted home to victory and did not take any unnecessary chances. About the only time the Patterson-managed crew applied the pressure was when they would be trailing the homesters in the first two periods. After that they coasted home. The game was clean throughout although a comical incident occurred in the middle frame after Referee Thompson had banished Rigby and Rosenplot for coming into a little too close contact with each other. When they finally landed in the "hoose-gow" they started to argue as to how and why they were there, each blaming the other until words, and nearly fists, became too prevalent and the timekeepers were forced to separate the boys. No serious damage being reported from either camp.

Before the Dohertys pass on in quest of the group title we wish to congratulate the Trenton players and their executive on the sportsman-like manner in which they conducted themselves throughout the entire play-off series. Both clubs gave their all and the better team won, but the Bowen-coached team threw a scare into the locals' camp at that. We also wish to spike a rumor that seems to be prevalent up around Cobourg. They are of the opinion that the locals "laid down" to Trenton during the last group game played when the Trentonians downed the locals 4 to 3. There is absolutely no truth to such statements. The Trenton club won the game on their merits. Inability of the locals to beat Joe Gould was the answer and solution. Oh, well, that's ancient history; the burning question now is—"how many goals of a lead do the locals need tomorrow night?"

Both Rigby and Ethier went well last night, in spots, showing a marked improvement over previous endeavors while "Pete" Morgan occasionally skated the proverbial miles. Roy Covert staged a few of his "ghost" acts and thus giving the home town fans a few cases of heart failure when he tested Gould. A word about Mr. Gould. On three different occasions he was forced to leave the nets to save. Once he skated out nearly to his own blue line to save from Harry Morgan who had outfooted the Trentonians, who were all on the offence at the time. It was an excellent play on Gould's part. York, Johnson and Powers were by far the best for the losers with Bill Miller coming into his own occasionally.

Wednesday of this week seems to have assumed a red letter day effect in the local sporting world. First there is the Irvin "Ace" Bailey benefit hockey game in Toronto to which a number of local fans have already procured tickets. Then of course there's the intermediate O.H.A. final game between Campbellford and Belleville at the arena, up at the Collegiate Institute there is a double-header of basketball on the program with the Queen's intermediates and juniors meeting the local quintettes. Down at the South End A. C. they are staging their fortnightly boxing show to give the sport loving fans of the city a varied program for Wednesday night.

As for the basketball games considerable rests on the result of the junior tilt as a loss for the local Deacon A. C. juniors will see them eliminated from further E.O.A.B.A. competition. The Deacon kids should come down in front of the Queen's "students" if they play up to form. Perhaps their reverse of Saturday at the hands of the Queen's kids will awaken the better qualities of the locals and bring them down to earth. It has to be granted the local juniors have garnered together a smart team of cagers but it must be taken into consideration they are but enjoying their first season of O.A.B.A. competition. As for the local intermediates they are in a much keener group, where the competition is as strong as could be found anywhere in the province.

The South End A. C. announced yesterday that they would open the boxing season with a prominent card to be presented at the City Hall on February 28th. The "South Enders" are holding bouts tomorrow night, when the majority of their mittsters will appear in impromptu bouts, matched with other club members. About the only possible mistake the matchmakers made was the chances they have taken in running into an O.H.A. hockey play-off date. If the local intermediates are fortunate enough to eliminate Campbellford they will be drawn against the fast Queen's intermediates with a game possibly being played in Belleville on the same date announced by the boxers. It has to be admitted that Belleville is not large enough, or should we say does not possess a following that warrants two major sport attractions in one evening. Of course there is plenty of time to cross such bridges when the occasion arises, if it ever does.

Tonight is junior O.H.A. night in Belleville when Ed. Thomas' kids entertain the Hastings juniors in the first game of the group finals. Skipper Thomas will introduce a new face to the hockey fans in the person of Don Ridley, he announced yesterday. Ridley has proven his worth while playing with the Grills' Garage sextette in the Central loop. The total number of goals on the round will decide the group championship. Faced with a return trip to Norwood the juniors will endeavor to secure as large a goal lead as possible this evening. Ross Burtt of Trenton has been named as the official.

MAROONS HOPE TO WIN ROUND

Campbellford Will Have Two New Players For The Finals

By virtue of finishing the regular playing schedule in first position the Campbellford Maroons elected to play the first game of the local intermediate O.H.A. group final play-off at Belleville on Wednesday night with the return game being played in the Hydro Town on Friday evening.

Manager Jay Ferris with his charges in town has played numerous exhibition games during the recent two week lay-off experienced by the Maroons, thus assuring them of plenty of practice for the all-important play-off series with the local "Oilmen." The Maroons have recently signed a new face in the person of Ken Lambert, of Maroon junior fame in '32 and '33. Lambert is at present teaming with Ken Davis and Archie MacKay, while "Jumping Jack" Buster Whitton is at the pivot position flanked by those two scrappy juniors of last year, Bush and Hendy. Harry Ingram has returned to the fray and will team up with brother Fred in front of Don Morton who guards the Maroon twine. Either Shannon or MacWilliams, of Marmora will fill in as the other alternate. The Maroons are reported to be in excellent condition for Wednesday night's fray, when the final group series opens at the Belleville Arena.

Fresh from routing the Trenton Intermediates in the group semi-finals by the score of 10 to 5, the L'Heureux-coached clan are ready for the "big series." Skipper Patterson will use the identical same lineup, that proved themselves under fire here last Friday by blanking the Bowen-coached aggregation. A neutral referee has been asked for and will be appointed by the O.H.A.

CANNIFTON, WEST HUNTINGDON WIN

Centre Loop Doubleheader Played at Stirling Enjoyed

Stirling, Feb. 13 (Special) — In the first game of the Centre league double header staged in the local arena on Friday evening, Cannifton defeated Bethel by a score of 6 to 1 while West Huntingdon took the second fixture from Minto by a 5 to 4 count.

Cannifton built up a 2 goal lead in the first frame when Johnson and Empson tallied on Sills of the Bethel nets. The second period saw the play become more even and no score was registered. Cannifton once again opened the scoring in the third period when Johnson bulged the Bethel twine for the second time. Bethel in turn tallied but before the period was out Johnson notched two more counters and Empson one more to wind up the game with a 6 to 1 win for Cannifton. Penalties went to E. Dickey and Cranston.

Lineups:

Cannifton—Goal, Sharpe, defence McQuigge and Bleekman, centre, Johnson, wings, Empson and J. Jarrell, subs, Carmichael, Williams, E. Jarrell and Hanna.

Bethel—Goal F. Sills, defence, Cronkwright and Hudgins, wings, E. Dickey and J. Fargey, subs, B. Brough, G. Kennedy and Cranston.

Referee—Jack Armstrong.

Wset Huntingdon took the second tilt from Minto by the close score of 5 to 4. The Minto lineup was quite different from that used in former fixtures and the new combination seemed to work quite well.

The scorning in the initial frame was by Fraser of Minto. Mott of West Huntingdon evened the count but Scott once again put Minto in the lead by tallying on Searles. Judd McGowan and Mott of Huntingdon each secured an additional counter to make the score 3-2 for the league leaders.

The second period was terminated with a 4 all count, Mott scoring for Huntingdon and Scott and Fraser for Minto. Penalties became numerous and Referee Armstrong sent Mott to the cooler twice while Fraser, Scott and McGowan each made one trip.

West Huntingdon cinched the game in the final frame, Mott once again copping the scoring honor. Penalties continued strong and were meted out to Henderson (2), Scott, Mott and Tomlinson. The game ended 5-4 for Huntingdon.

Lineups:

West Huntingdon—Surley, goal, McGowan and Post, defence, Mott, centre, Kerby and Wright, wings, subs, E. and F. Murray, G. McGowan, and D. Cooke.

Minto—C. Mumby, goal, Henderson and Toblinson, defence, Scott, centre, Hagerman and Mumby, wings, subs, Tanner, Fraser and Scott.

Referee—Jack Armstrong.

INCREASE LEAD IN CENTRAL LOOP

Madoc Takes Tweed 6-3 For First Time on Home Ice

Tweed, Feb. 13 (Special)—Madoc representatives in the Central League defeated Tweed on Friday night by a score of 6 to 3 and further increased their lead over contending teams. They are practically sure of a play-off position. This game was the first between these teams on local ice during the present season, the two previous meetings in Madoc having resulted in victories for their opponents. Akey, Ware and Henderson formed a powerful first line for the visitors, the former securing three goals and being a constant threat. This boy is also the mainstay of the Junior squad and always makes things interesting for opposing goalies. Ware is a fine play-maker and Henderson has lost little of his old-time effectiveness. It is said that his playing is vastly superior to his refereeing.

Two goals for the locals in the first period from the sticks of Geraldi and Orr, with no reply from the visitors, gave the home squad a good margin to work on; but when the second stanza opened this lead did not last long. In this period practically everyone took a hand at scoring—for the visitors—except the referees, and the team left the ice with the invaders leading by a 5-2 score. Alex Rupert, right wing man for the locals and a former member of the Madoc team, could not forget his erstwhile affiliations and presented them with their first goal via a bullet-like drive into his own net when attempting to clear a loose puck lying some distance in front. Arber paved the road to the goal on his side of the defense with fallen Madocers through the medium of well, and legitimately delivered body-checks. One of these checks didn't look so good to the referee in this hectic second frame and his sojourn in the penalty box gave the visitors an opportunity which they capitalized to the limit, Akey getting two goals.

Henderson for Madoc and F. Geraldi for Tweed notched the only goals in the final period. W. Leal was painfully bruised when bumped by West, and it was feared at first that he had sustained a fractured collar-bone. Dr. M. G. Dales, who attended him, expressed the opinion that he would be back on the ice again for the next game. Maguire, Shanque, and Rupert played best for the locals. Thompson, in goal, stopped shots aplenty but looked weak on a couple that beat him.

Jas. Watson of Madoc and G. Geraldi of Tweed refereed the game. The home team was without the services of A. Geraldi, LaFontaine, Meraw and C. Rashotte.

M. SCHMELING FIGHTS HAMAS

Steve Hamas, youthful Jerseyan who first gained athletic fame at the Pennsylvania State College, is that barrier, and the promoters expect 15,000 enthusiasts to witness the clash.

It is Philadelphia's most important boxing bout since 1926, the year that Gene Tunney, late of the United States Marines, knocked the heavyweight crown from the head of the Manassa mauler, Jack Dempsey.

Schmeling dubbed by some the German Dempsey, is a seven-to-five favorite to conquer Hamas in their 12-round battle. The fight prophets suggest that Schmeling will find his opportunity as Hamas wades in too aggressively for his own safety.

Both fighters are claiming the victory by a knockout.

Defeat, Schmeling has indicated, might mean his retirement

Charley Harvey, manager of Hamas, advised spectators to "look for him to put over a knock out by the seventh or eighth," and his protege gave laughing assent.

Little advantage in weight is expected, Schmeling probably weighing in around 190 and Hamas, 192.

EVERY SEAT SOLD FOR BAILEY BENEFIT GAME WEDNESDAY

Expect Over $17,000 Will be Handed "Ace" After Contest

(By Elmer Dulmage)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Feb. 13.—(CP)—To put some $17,000 to the account of Irvin (Ace) Bailey, whose career on the ice was ended in an accident during a game last December, an All-Star team chosen from eight National Hockey League teams will come into Toronto tomorrow and play the Maple Leafs. Close to 14,500 will watch the parade of the greatest players in hockey.

There has never been any question about the success of the venture. Toronto fandom probably would have packed Maple Leaf Gardens for any hockey event if the proceeds are earmarked for the Bailey Fund. With the certainty of seeing division-leading Leafs play against a set of famous stars, the available tickets lasted less than two hours yesterday.

The gardens will seat nearly 13,000 and every inch of standing room is sure to be filled. There was every prospect that thousands would have to be turned away before Lester Patrick, boss of the New York Rangers, sends his starry brigade against Toronto's National League Champions.

The Line-ups

The packed house will likely find the teams lining up like this:

Without the leadgue-leading scorer, Charlie Conacher, the Leafs will not be at full strength. The big right winger has an infected knee. Charlie Sands, also a right-hand shot, had not recovered from an injury received last week. He will watch the contest from the bench. But Joe Primeau, who has been ill, will be back at centre and it was believed Hec Kilrea will be shifted over to right wing on the first-string forward line with Joe and Harvey Jackson.

"Chuck" Conacher Absentee

The young Conacher, outstanding forward of the season, will be one of the few top-ranking stars not in this game of games. The All-Star force is complete with great players—Shore, the blonde bombshell of the Bruins; Morenz, the old Canadien thunderbolt; the masterful little Joliat; curly-headed Charlie Gardiner, hockey's No 1 goal-tender.

It may be only the first of an annual benefit feature. Directors of the Toronto Maple Leafs have donated a trophy and attached to it the suggestion, that an all-star team be chosen each year to play alternately against the leader of the Canadian and United States section.

penthouse love

BY

alma sioux scarberry

Expertly, she brought her ship down to a perfect landing and taxied it to where Doug sat waiting in the limousine. Yanner's blonde curls blowing about her round, tanned, air-kissed face gave her the look of a little girl when she jumped from her plane to Doug's waiting arms. She had never seemed quite so dear and desirable to him before. He held her to him closely before he kissed her. When Yanner's blue eyes searched his brown troubled ones she knew something has gone very decidedly wrong. Her heart began to beat rapidly with a disappointed premonition. But her face showed none of her feelings.

Yanner was schooled in hiding her emotions. Doug would have been amazed had he sensed the inner turmoil of the cool, beautiful little debutante as she smiled up at him. She was only a little over five feet tall; and from his six feet two Doug looked down at her longingly, a cold fear clutching at his heart. If he lost her——

Yanner stood up on tiptoes and kissed him gaily. "Darlin' — don't look so gloomy! Let's get in your car—and you tell me all about what's worrying you.

"No—let's sit in the plane. I've got to talk to you—alone."

Yanner hid her nervousness with a great effort. Doug turned to Rafferty. "Wait for me at the house, Rafferty."

Doug picked Yanner up like a child and lifted her into the plane. Then he climbed in beside her, and took her in his lap. She tried hard not to look too interested in what he was about to tell her. Her curly head buried in his shoulder, she begged sweetly. "Tell Yanner what hurts her old honey."

CHAPTER FOUR

Doug knew there was no use beating about the bush; he plunged into his story.

"My—father must have been out of his mind when he made his will. He—he left half of everything to me—and the other half to his secretary."

"How— awful! No wonder you're all upset, darling'. She must be a very smart and attractive girl to—"

"No," Doug said, shaking his head, "father wasn't that sort. I—that isn't the half of it. Before I get even the half of Dad's money—I've got to marry the secretary."

Yanner started to laugh. He must be teasing her. But when she searched his face she knew he was telling her the truth.

"Oh!" she gasped, turning pale, "but I—I'm sure no one could get away with a will like that. It can be broken."

"Simmons says there's not a chance in a million years. I've got to marry Charity Jones within a week—or I haven't even got a roof over my head."

Yanner felt her world reeling around her. All her hopes and plans for helping Doug Temple spend his father's millions tumbled about her ears. Wildly she tried to think of the proper thing to say. Surely there was some way out. She forced all the unhappiness in the world into her next words:

"But darlin'—I—I can't give you up to another woman. Oh—Doug!"

"I'd rather die than marry anyone but you," he told her dully. "What are we going to do?"

For a long time they sat in silence. Several times Yanner reached up to kiss him on the lips, passionately. Doug's response was automatic.

Yanner's mind raced busily ahead. She turned the ridiculous situation over and over and weighted it from every angle. The thought of marrying for love—money or no money—did not enter her mind. She had to marry money. It was her life.

No one, outside the Vandergriff family, knew the low state of the one-time great Vandergriff fortune. Both her mother and father had drummed into her constantly the past two years since her debut that she must marry and recoup it. When Doug stepped into the picture they had hugged themselves with delight. Not once, now, did sympathy for him enter Yanner's grasping, mercenary little heart.

Suddenly, she thought she had hit upon the best thing to say. She pulled away from his arms and looked into his face with a sweet little smile of resignation.

"Dear—I've been trying to forget ourselves—and—what this means to us. You —we will just have to respect your father's dying wish. It —would be too terrible not to."

Doug held her to him fiercely again. "No—I love you too much—"

"But, dear," Yanner reached up and put her face against his brown cheek, tightly so that he could not see her eyes. "you must give it a fair trial. We—you can get a divorce in a little while."

Doug started.

"There's nothing in the will that says you've got to live with her all my life, is there?" Yanner asked then, craftily.

A look of relief spread over Doug's face and he almost smiled. "By golly! That might be the way out. I'll marry the dame, all right. But I'll never live with her. And we'll find some way to get out of it."

Yanner sighed, inwardly relieved. Then she smiled wisely. "Just give a working girl, who has never had anything, a little money to spend and she'll hang herself. It'll be easy! You'll soon have plenty grounds for divorce."

Doug grinned happily and gave Yanner a quick kiss on the ear. She took his face in her little tanned hands and looked into his eyes with mock severity: "But—heaven help you, Mr. Temple, if you as much as look at that woman after you go through the ceremony."

"I wish you could see her," Doug sighed heavily. "You'd never worry about being jealous. If my father didn't will me a —lemon—then—I don't know my fruit."

And while Doug and Yanner sat making plans for their future, when Doug would be divorced and they would be free to marry—Charity fought her battle alone in her little room.

Dawn was just streaking the sky the next morning when she made her decision. If Doug Temple asked her to be his wife she could not refuse. It was not her own happiness that counted. She would know that as long as her father and mother lived they would never need know poverty and hard work again.

And she knew she could not refuse to follow out the dying wishes of her old employer.

"God help me," she prayed wearily, before she fell into an exhausted sleep.

Six days later Douglas Brookhart Temple 3d and Charity Mildred Jones were married by the City Clerk in the Municipal Building in New York City, with Milton Simmons as a witness.

Charity went through the ordeal like an automaton. They had left the Municipal Chapel and started to drive away before life seemed to come back into her tired, aching body.

She became aware then that she was sitting leaning against Simmons. He was holding her hand. Charity moved her eyes to look at Doug and saw that he was looking straight ahead with set jaws, his face wooden and white.

Now that it was all over she wanted to fall asleep and never wake up. It seemed it had been weeks since she had closed her eyes.

Simmons noted her pallor—and his heart ached in sympathy for her. The poor girl had been a brick to go through such a damnable ordeal so bravely.

Someone had to speak sometime—so the lawyer broke the silence with an attempt to be jovial:

"Well, it's all over! Now what are your plans, Doug?"

Doug turned to Charity. "Let's ditch the town house and go out to the Long Island place for a few days."

It was strange—but Charity had not thought of any plans beyond the ceremony. She smiled tiredly. "That's quite all right with me. It's so warm now—like summer."

"It'll be great out there now," Simmons said enthusiastically. "Drop me off at the office and I'll see you soon."

Simmons felt as though a thousand years had fallen off his shoulders when he ran up the steps of the bank and disappeared from the sight of the bride and groom. But when Doug and Charity found themselves alone both of them were in a panic. Suddenly Doug sat up.

"Let's go right out to Long Island now. The house is ready. Dad always keeps a housekeeper out there. We can have our things sent out."

Charity nodded with relief. "That will be all right. My bags are all packed at the Secretaries and Stenographers Club."

It would be a relief to get out to the country to hide away for a few days while she got her bearings—and while she and Doug got acquainted. They were really total strangers. Sometimes Charity was sure she must be dreaming—the whole affair was so crazy and impossible.

Rambling, incoherent thoughts chased themselves through her brain as they rode along through the warm May sunshine. It was impossible that she Charity Jones of Riverside, Iowa, was now Mrs. Douglas Brookhart Temple 3d. And it was still more impossible that she had millions. That never again would she have to worry about money. That anything in the world her heart desired she might buy. But could she? Where did one buy happiness? Would she ever be able to find out?

Doug's thoughts were of Yanner. He could see her, sitting heartbrokenly on his wedding day, wondering how life could be so unkind. Of course, it wouldn't be for long. Soon he would find a way out of this crazy situation, and be able to divorce Charity and marry her.

He pictured Yanner on her wedding day—and how different things would have been were it Yanner sitting beside him in her bridal gown. Yanner beside him, sweet and desirable.

His eyes were closed—and it was several minutes before he opened them to look at Charity. She was lying back against the cushions seemingly asleep. There was something indescribably pathetic about the white face in repose. For the first time he took a good look at her—and for the first time he forgot himself and his own misery and wondered if she too might be suffering. Her face looked like it.

Charity's bridal outfit was a blue silk suit. A sort of Chinese blue. Doug remembered that he'd never seen her in anything but blue. He wondered why; it certainly wasn't her color. Her skin was too white—her face too thin. He wondered, being an artist, what she would look like in gay colors. Would it bring out anything hidden in her looks? Surely any woman could dress to suit her type and be a little attractive.

Charity's hair, he noted, was curled for her wedding. Waved-in too close waves. She had too much hair, anyway. A great bunch of it in a bun down her neck. Too much hair was unbecoming to any girl. He had found out when they got their marriage license that she was only 24. She looked 30. It might be her hair that aged her. The turban she was wearing was too far down on her face.

Suddenly Charity opened her eyes and saw Doug staring at her. The color spread to the roots of her hair.

TARZAN AT THE EARTH'S CORE

(Metropolitan Newspaper Service) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

"That fellow up there is turning the gun on us!" cried Jason Gridley, sharply. Presently another man appeared upon the bow deck of the enemy's ship. "Heave to," he shouted, "or I'll blow you out of the water." Tarzan ordered Lajo, the Korsar, to obey while Jason called up: "Who are you?" "I am Ja of Anoroc," replied the man. "This is the war fleet of David I, Emperor of Pellucidar." Then Gridley, as if out of his mind, shouted, "Hurrah, hurrah!"

For Gridley could hardly believe his ears. Here at last was communication with the man for whose rescue he had organized the expedition to the earth's core. Ja, suspecting Jason was crazy, asked, "Who are you?" The longboat had come about and lay beside the flagship. "Friends," replied Tarzan, as Gridley was too excited to speak. Bronzed Mezop warriors gazed down in curiosity at the ape-man's party. "This man is Jason Gridley. His expedition came from the outer earth to rescue David I from the dungeons of the Korsars."

Ja, of Anoroc, was skeptical of the truth Tarzan spoke. The three Korsars in the longboat made him doubly wary. Never before had he seen human beings of the rich, deep, black color of the Waziri. The radio message to Gridley from the inner world's Emperor also was way beyond his understanding. But after a suspicious examination of the longboat's party he finally ordered Tarzan and the whole party taken aboard the flagship. Here Jason and Tarzan had to repeat their story over and over again.

Word quickly spread that two of the strangers were friends and from the outer world, Captains came from the other ships to inspect and greet the strangers until Jason and the ape-man felt they were as much a curiosity as circus freaks. But after hearing the wondrous tale of their expedition, the officers of David the First's armada accepted the truth of their statements and welcomed Tarzan and Gridley with fine hospitality.

THIRD STAGE REJUVENATION IS REACHED

Mrs. Elliott, 75, Beaverton Can See After Being Blind 3 Years

CUTS NEW TEETH

Hair, Snow-white For Years Starts to Turn Darker

BEAVERTON, Ont., Feb. 13.—(CP)—The strange rejuvenation of 75-year-old Mrs. Mary Anne Elliott, whose grey hair is darkening and who is cutting a third set of teeth, reached a third and more thrilling stage today for the aged woman.

"I can see," she exclaimed to an interviewer. She has been practically blind for three years.

Two weeks ago Mrs. Elliott was unable to recognize a neighbor who called on her. She had smiled sadly in describing how she had cut 11 teeth and discarded the set of false teeth she had used for years. Friends told her how her almost-white hair had turned darker.

"Oh, I can see you," she cried excitedly today. "One eye is pretty clear now and it seems as though the film is passing from the other one. I know now that my hair is becoming darker," she added, pulling a strand in front of her eyes.

Tiny and cheerful, and not a little excited about the whole business of growing younger. Mrs. Elliott has started to plan what she will do when the weather becomes milder. Days and weeks and months of inactivity are over for her, she said.

"First of all," she said, "I'm going uptown—just as soon as the sidewalks are clear of snow. I'll walk, of course."

Cutting Teeth Painful

Cutting teeth has been regarded as a bothersome and irritating process down through the ages, and it was particularly painful for Mrs. Elliott because she wore false teeth and had no suspicion that nature was preparing to treat her more generously than usual.

"I wondered for a long time what made my mouth so sore," she explained. "Finally the gums became so sore I could not wear my false teeth—and of course the new ones came in. I feel better than I have in years. I can eat anything I want to and my appetite is excellent.

Born at Bowmanville, Ont., Mrs Elliott, lived in Brampton Ont. for many years. Her twin brother died of smallpox. She was an ardent lacrosse fan in the days, when Brampton Excelsiors were one of the most famous teams in Canada

AT THE BELLE

"THE SOLITAIRE MAN"

The "Emotional X-Ray" is the latest startling effect to be revealed in talking pictures. This unusual screen quality is to be seen in "The Solitaire Man" a mystifying and fascinating detective story featuring Herbert Marshall to be presented at the Belle tonight and Wednesday, matinee and evening.

In no other picture since the advent of sound on the screen has there been packed the penetrating study of human emotions as in this new offering. A large part of the action takes place in the cabin of a passenger plane during a flight over the English Channel. Into this small space, hardly six by twenty feet, has been condensed the drama of human lives faced with death and dishonor.

Powerful Situations

The action is covered in intimate closeups that reveal the slightest mental change of the players. As dramatic tensions are built up in the confined space, the emotion is transmitted with maximum power to the audience.

A notable cast has been assembled for the leading roles with Marshall in a portrayal that is pleasingly reminiscent of "Trouble in Paradise". As a war hero forced to become a jewel thief through financial reverses he scores with a performance full of reserve power. Elizabeth Allan is given a dramatic opportunity that she plays to the limit.

Also featured prominently are May Robson, as a dignified English "Dowager" who assists in disposing of jewelry with aristocratic dignity and a high sense of comedy other notables in the select cast are Lionel Atwill, Ralph Forbes, Lucille Gleason and Robert McWade.

"Air Balance" Cameras

The realism of scenes on the air liner are maintained constantly with special "air-balance" cameras in operation that record every dip and plunge during dramatic sequences. Settings in exact duplicate of many famous gambling resorts in Europe have been built on a lavish scale with every feminine player brilliantly costumed in the latest of fashion designs.

"Cross Country Cruise"

All Aboard!—for one of the most sensational, action-crammed screen plays of the season. "Cross Country Cruise" the companion feature on the same program will take you at a mile-a-minute clip straight down the fateful highway of life.

There's a laugh and a cry for every mile. There's a hodge-podge of life. Love and hate as day by day night by night, and mile by mile those huge transcontinental carriers of precious cargo cover the continent. "Cross Country Cruise" is a vivid interlude in the hectic, hateful, laughing, loving lives of people like you and me who ride on busses, and supplies a story that will thrill and chill you with its gripping action. Sitting side by side each passenger, you'll peer into the screen story lives of Lew Ayres, June Knight, Alice White, Alan Dinehart, Minna Gombell and a host of others. Don't miss "Cross Country Cruise". Belle News and a Kartune will be exhibited on the same program. The last complete show starts at 8.30 p.m. nightly.

AT THE CAPITOL

"IT'S A BOY"

To give a brief outline of the story of "It's a Boy" showing today, is to suggest its obvious laughter-making possibilities. A few gay bachelors are gathered together to bid farewell to Dudley Leake (Edward Everett Horton) on the eve of his wedding to Mary Bogle (Wendy Barrie) and although he and his best man, James Skippett (Leslie Henson) are more or less incapably inebriated they manage to find their way home and retire to bed, there to oversleep to such an extent that the wedding party waiting at the register office despair of their arrival!

And when they are finally dressed there enters one, Joe Piper (Albert Burdon) a Lancashire lad, who greets Dudley as his long lost father and demands a thousand pounds to keep his mouth shut. Dudley, a little uncomfortable as a result of the "false step" (details of which he had confided to Skippett the night before), gives him some money on account, but meanwhile the wedding party had returned home and when Dudley and Skippett finally arrive Mr. Bogle refuses to permit the marriage to take place.

Hastily the two concoct a story of a big business deal with "John Tempest" (a name culled from a novel lying around) and old Bogle demands the production of the gentleman as evidence. The fact that "John Tempest" is really a woman and among the bride's guests is quite unknown to Skippett and how the Lancashire "son" is introduced as the novelist; how old Bogle discovers that "Tempest" is really a woman; how both Skippett and the "son" impersonate her and how matters are eventually straightened out must be seen to be enjoyed.

"Royal Princess Dinnerware" tonight for the ladies and don't forget to get your Capitol free ticket from Capitol Thrift Merchants. Watch for trailer announcement on our screen.

EX-RESIDENT LOSES LIFE

Stanley Green, California, Former Belleville Fireman

Injuries caused by a motor accident on a state highway near Bakersfield, California, on Monday, claimed the life of Mr. Stanley Green, formerly well known resident of this city. He was prominent in athletics, especially baseball and hockey.

The body will be brought to Belleville this week for burial.

Letters to The Editor

ISLAND PARK NAME

(Re Zwick's Island)

Feb. 10, 1934.

Editor The Ontario Intelligencer:

Dear Sir:

Should it be found necessary or profitable to give Zwick's Island another name I cannot think of any other name than: "WAR VETERANS PARK."

Any other name would be very limited in its application. This name would keep us in remembrance of the prayers we prayed in our homes—in or places of business and in our churches; and the promises we promised during the time our brave fellow-citizens overseas were fighting and suffering in defence of our lives and property.

A substantial beautiful Arch of Triumph could be placed at the entrance to the Park with this name thereon in large gold letters; and inside the Park at a reasonable distance from the entrance there could be placed a statue of Sir Arthur Currie, Commander of the Canadian Corps.

Yours faithfully,
Robert Bogle.

GROWERS FAIL TO DECIDE ON LICENCE FEE

H.H. Colliver, M. P. P., Takes Part in Debate

FARMERS WILLING

Tomato Growers Had Offered to Assess Selves

Toronto, Feb. 14—(CP)—No decision was reached at a meeting of Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers with the agriculture committee of the Ontario Legislature today regarding an appeal from the growers for legislation to effect compulsory registration and a license system for growers throughout the province. At the conclusion of the meeting, a sub-committee was formed to meet a group of the growers and attempt to reach an agreement. It had been suggested in the event the license system was turned down, the government might grant the growers $35,000 a year for 3 years to carry on their work.

The meeting was enlivened by a fiery speech from F. V. Laughton, Conservative, North Middlesex, who objected to members of the committee declaring farmers and growers would be unwilling to pay the license fee.

Farmers Willing to Pay

"I have sat in the agricultural committee for four years," he said. "Farm marketing matters have been discussed in such a manner that all possible and beneficient improvements have been cluttered up by the introduction of non-essential details. Possible progress has been entirely cancelled by local prejudices and problems. There is no question that in paying attention to the matters we have balled up the necessary machinery."

H. Colliver, Conservative, Prince Edward, thought the council could collect more money than "it knew what to do with" through the license fees. "I think it is a little too drastic," he asserted.

In reply to Mr. Colliver, Mr Robinson said growers of Prince Edward and Northumberland counties had appealed to the Minister of Agriculture for aid. The tomato growers had asked Hon. T. L. Kennedy to arrange a meeting with the canners, who offered 27 1-2 cents a bushel for tomatoes while the growers wanted 35 cents. The growers had even offered to assess themselves for funds and wanted the legislation, he said.

M. P. P'S WILL VOTE IN McCAUGHRIN CASE

Final "Say" Will Rest With Report of Committee

Toronto, Feb. 14 (CP)—The Ontario Legislature as a whole may have to make its own findings regarding the charges of Magistrate Daniel McCuaghrin of Orillia to the effect two cabinet ministers had tried to "buy" him out of office, and neither the sub-committee or legal bills which held the investigation into the charges is empowered to bring in any findings. Whether by error of otherwise, the motion of Premier George S. Henry which provided the legal bills committee should hold the investigation, makes no mention of findings.

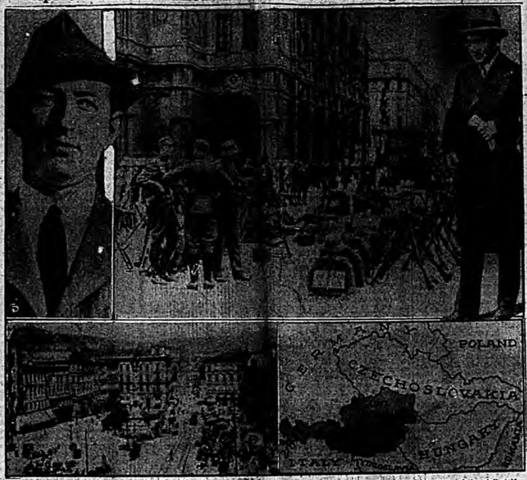
Hugest Shipment of Old Whiskies Shipped from Here to U. S. Points

Carefully sealed and guarded in the prepared cars, one of the largest cargoes of whiskey ever to leave Corbyville was shipped from the plant of the Canadian Industrial Alcohol Company on Tuesday afternoon, destined for distributing points in the United States. The shipment consisted of old matured stock of rye and bourbon which has been aging for the past six years in the oak barrels. It is just one of the first of the regular consignments that will be sent across the U.S. border from the local plant from now on under the new importation quota. Further shipments will be dispatched at intervals, stated officials at the plant today.

A high note of optimism is noted at the plant, and voiced by officials in charge. They point to the increased pay rolls and the added force of workers taken on during the past month or so. As regular shipments commence to flow from Corbyville a new prosperity will be felt there and in this city.

Report Hundreds Killed in Three-Cornered Fight in Austria



With hundreds mowed down by machine-gun fire, thousands injured in hand-to-hand conflict, Austria joins the growing list of countries in the throes of civil war. Chancellor Dollfuss, midget leader of the country, who had permitted the Socialist party to oppose him until the last few days, found it impossible to continue his battle against German Naziism in the face of Socialist opposition which he had heretofore been using as a block against the Nazis. Now, however, the Socialists are being swept from any power by the Fascist state being set up by Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, leader of the Fascist Heimwehr. Torn three ways, Austria is now in such a state of chaos and confusion that martial law has been declared. One party, the Socialists, are well armed and in possession of several cities throughout the country. They opposed the setting up a Fascist dictatorship and called a general strike, immediate cause of the civil strife. Opposing the Socialists are the Fascist Heimwehr and the German Nazi element, who are themselves opposed to each other. Meanwhile, Fascist Italy and semi-Fascist France are fighting any more on the part of Germany to bring about Nazi domination in Austria, which would lead to an alliance between the two nations and make Germany, theoretically, strong enough to wage war. The layout ABOVE shows: RIGHT, Chancellor Dollfuss; LEFT, Prince von Starhemberg; CENTRE, a Vienna street scene from recent disorders, showing machine guns ready for instant use by the home-guard. BELOW is shown Austria's position in Europe. Also shown is a section of Vienna where heavy fighting has been going on and where many have been killed by use of artillery and machine guns.

Col. Papineau Seeks to Trace Family Connections in District

Col. D. B. Papineau, A.D.C.' the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec is very eager to trace out some of his family connections who formerly resided at Belleville. In his quest he has enlisted the Department of Public Records at Toronto and the Chamber of Commerce at Belleville.

It appears that Francis Papineau migrated from Quebec and settled at Belleville about the middle of the 19th century. He was a French-Canadian with a large family. He and his son, Napoleon, carried on a hotel business for a time on the east side of upper Front st. in the tavern known as the Willard House and afterwards operated by Samuel Kyle. Francis Papineau eventually retired from the hotel business and acquired a farm on the Stirling road between Foxboro and Chatterton. Francis Papineau had a daughter by the name of Mary, Napoleon Papineau, the son, moved to Rochester, N.Y.

Some further particulars have been gleaned from the Hastings County Directory of 1869. According to this record Francis Papineau is listed as a hotelkeeper at Trenton. In an advertisement in the same directory the Papineau House, Front St., Trenton, is announced with P. Papineau as proprietor. But in the county directory of 1879, neither the Papineau House nor its proprietor is listed.

In the Hastings directory of 1869 Augustus Papineau is listed at Belleville as having his home with Charles Papineau. Charles Papineau appears in that issue as the proprietor of a saloon that is advertised as the "Terrapin Restaurant" on Front St.

In Mackay's directory of Canada for 1851 the name of Papineau does not appear in the Belleville portion but in a supplement published in 1853 this entry appears —"Francis Papineau, Wellington House and livery stables, Belleville, a comfortable house and moderate charges."

In the Hastings County directory for 1865 there appears an advertisement of the Dafoe House, corner of Bridge and Pinnacle Sts., with Francis Papineau, proprietor. The Dafoe House stood on the site now occupied by Hotel Quinte and was at that time Belleville's foremost hostelry.

We have been informed from another source that the farm occupied by Francis Papineau in the Foxboro neighbourhood comprised the northern half of lot 37 in the 6th concession. In the latest available county map the name of John Shaw appears as owner of the northern half of lot 37 and Jas. Gay of the southern half. On the east side of the Shaw farm the road is known as Papineau Lane.

From other sources it has been learned that there is an Ed Papineau now resident in Cavan township. He has a brother named Dennis and two sons Harry and Fred, the former of whom resides in Castleton. It has not been ascertained whether or not this family is connected with that of Francis Papineau.

It has been stated that other branches of the family reside in the Napanee district.

If any of the Ontario Intelligencer readers can provide with further links in the family chain the information will be gratefully received. Communicate with J. O. Herity care of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce.

SHEEP FLOCKS LOSS $20,000

Big Bad Dog Prowlers Cost Province Large Fortune

Toronto, Feb. 14—(CP)—Marauding sheep-killing dogs prowling Ontario's farmlands by night and leaving behind them a trail of mutilated flocks, annually cost municipalities throughout the province more than $20,000.

This was the estimate made by W. R. Wade, director of the Livestock Branch of the Ontario Department of Agriculture today in commenting upon recent reports of wholesale sheep slaughter by prowling killer canines.

PRINCIPAL FYFE IMPROVES

'Heaven,' 'Purgatory' and 'Hell' Adorn Parliamentary Repartee

Ottawa, Feb. 14 (CP)—Heaven, hell and purgatory when discussed in parliament provide a sudden change from tariffs, unemployment and broken election promises.

The three realms of the future life were mentioned yesterday when Hon. R. J. Manion, Minister of Railways and Canals chided Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Liberal leader, with making a long pessimistic speech.

"I spent my time reading the 42 pages of it, on a trip to Fort William," Dr. Manion told the House "I belong to that religion, which believes in purgatory and since reading that speech I have come to the conclusion that when I suffer in purgatory for my sins I am going to be forced to do my sufferings reading the Right Honorable Gentleman's Speech."

"I hope," Mr. King retorted, "my Honorable Friend does not flatter himself by thinking he will get off with purgatory."

"Well I am even more convinced" Dr. Manion shot back, "if I go to hell I will be reading his speeches all the time; yes and the Prime Minister suggests I may even have to listen to them there."

"My Honorable friend can be very happy" Mr. King rejoined, "even in hell if he does not have to listen to the Prime Minister."

"Probably the Prime Minister will not go there," Dr. Manion replied, "he will probably go to a better land than either my Right Honorable friend or myself."

Suburb Torn by Shells, Dead Clutter Street as Civil War Rages

BUILDINGS AFIRE

Factory Town of Floridsdorf Strewn With Dead

Floridsdorf, Suburb of Vienna, Feb. 14.—(AP)—This factory suburb on the outskirts of Vienna—one of the centres of the Socialist population—is a shell-torn shambles.

Tomas street is strewn with dead. Many buildings are wrecked by the Government artillery fire and several are burning.

Tragic proof of how terrific the fighting had been could be seen in the dead which lay in the streets. Many bodies have been taken away but ambulances and even commandeered taxicabs were not sufficient to transport the wounded.

Theatre Burns

As I telephone this to the Associated Press office in Vienna, the Socialist headquarters here and a nearby motion picture theatre are ablaze. A fire at the Schlesinger Municipal apartment house has been extinguished.

A government artillery officer to whom I spoke near the Schlesingerhof estimated that 100 persons had been killed in his sector alone.

He said women fought beside their brothers and husbands at the windows in this building through the night and early this morning.

A similar story of fighting women was told of another huge conflict of workers who lived in the Garden City District of Floridsdorf.

I asked a lieutenant there if the Socialists had managed to send away their families before the fighting started.

Women Re-Load Rifles

"On the contrary," he replied, "the women apparently insisted on remaining to help carry munitions and re-load rifles "

He added, thoughtfully, "and I have no doubt there were plenty of innocent noncombatants who had no choice but to go through this shelling with them.

A fantastic and pathetic feature of Floridsdorf street life today, after the bombardment is the troops of children.

Adding to the confusion of the Capital was a run which started on the Central Savings Bank of Vienna, an organization built on Socialist Capital.

Possibly contributing to the panic of the depositors was a government decree forbidding all banks to pay money to Socialists organizations.

LINZ, Austria, Feb. 14.—(AP)—The Government was in complete control of the situation today in this birthplace of Austria's civil warfare.

Here at least, the Socialist Revolution, started when Party members replied with gunfire to the demands that they submit to police search, has been broken.

Money And Trade Seen as Remedies

Paris, Feb. 14 (AP)—Money and business are the two remedies France will urge for Austria before the League of Nations Council when it meets at Geneva again.

The Cabinet of Premier Doumergue decided today that Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss of Austria must be supported.

It took the stand that economic help would be the most effective means by which other nations might enable him to rule firmly.

WEEK AT SEASIDE INDIGENT'S HOPE

Windsor, Ont., Feb. 14 (CP)—A few weeks at the seaside is the valentine desired by one Windsor indigent, armed with the fact that physicians are recommending the Florida climate for eczema patients. The man applied to City Clerk Dickinson for city funds to finance his trip for a period of recuperation.

FAMILY HOMELESS IN ZERO WEATHER

Plevna, Ont., Feb. 14—A family, including two small children, were homeless today in this northern village after a blaze which broke out last Saturday and forced the mother and children to flee out into the 38 below zero night.

Mrs. C. Stalker was the first to be awakened by the sound of flames in her small frame dwelling and had only time to arouse her two small children and escape before the building was enveloped in fire. The three were forced to walk, in night attire, one half mile through the snow to the home of a neighbor where they were cared for. Charles Stalker, the father, was away when the fire occurred.

DIRECT CASH RELIEF REFUSED BY PROVINCE

Stratford, Ont., Feb. 14—The Provincial Government absolutely refuses to consider the payment of direct relief in cash, Mayor O. J. Kerr told the relief committee of the city council last night in reporting the discussion which the Stratford deputation had with J. A. Ellis, Secretary of the Ontario Unemployment Relief Committee on Monday.

"To quote the direct words of the secretary, the reply was 'no cash' for direct relief will be paid," Mayor Kerr told the committee.

MERCURY DROPS TO 22 BELOW ZERO

A cold clammy haze through which smoke of chimneys of hundreds of homes and factories, and the steamy exhausts of motor vehicles struggled vainly to pierce throughout the day, brought misery to a city and district, which snapped and crackled through the night with below zero temperatures, which reached the minimum point of 22 below during the early morning. Fingers and ears tingled and breathing was painful. Even during the warmest part of the day, at noon, the severity of the weather was still apparent. The maximum temperature recorded during the middle of the day was just 4 above.

SMALL FIRES EXTINGUISHED

Members of the local fire department, clad against the zero weather, battled a sharp blaze in a rear shed at 245 Coleman St. shortly after seven o'clock this morning. The blaze was extinguished only after damage estimated at $100 had been caused the shed, furnishings. Again at 9.40 o'clock in the morning another run to 25 Campbell street was responded to. A blazing chimney was qunched without damage. Alarm bells have shrilled six times at both halls during the past 48 hours, setting a record for more runs in the two days than had been recorded so far during the month.

MUSICAL DAY IS ENJOYED

Kiwanis Club Treated to Fine Program by Leo Riggs and Artists

A most delightful musical program was enjoyed by the members of the Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon at the Queen's Hotel on Tuesday, Leo B. Riggs, pianist for the club being in charge. The members are always glad when musical day comes around for Leo Riggs manages to spring something real good on the club and Tuesday was no exception. Mrs. Leo B. Riggs, Miss Leona Riggs, Miss Helen Reddick, Sergeant Major Wiberly of the R.C.A.F. at Trenton were the contributing artists and every number given was a gem.

President Eddie Shapiro presided with Joe Delaney as song leader and Claude Tice as sergeant at arms. Cliff Barragar, in charge of attendance introduced to the club a new member, Frank Folwell, manager of St. Charles Motors, and an enthusiastic welcome was given. B. C. Donnan, K.C., also returned to the fold and was heartily welcomed. Rev. Mr. Pringle, rector of the Anglican Church on the Indian Reserve was a guest of the club at luncheon and was introduced by W. C. Mikel, K.C.

The thanks of the club was expressed to Frank Domenico by the president after the chairman of the dance committee had made his report. The dance was a huge success from every standpoint and will be a yearly feature of the activities of the club. The untiring effort of Frank Domenico had much to do with the success of the venture. Dr. Flynn reported medical attention to an underprivileged child and the thanks of the club was expressed to the genial Dick and also to Dr. Chant.

Miss Reddick and Miss Riggs delightfully sang Offenbach's "Night of Stars" while a trio of Mrs. Riggs Miss Riggs and Miss Reddick gave the "Virgin's Slumber Song," by Max Regen while Miss Riggs playing her own accompaniment sang "Only a Rose." Every number was most heartily applauded, the members being loathe to have them conclude. Sergeant Major Wiberly in his inimitable English Music Hall style gave three numbers that were screams and sent the members into gales of laughter. "The Village Pump," "The Egg" and "The Broken Down Car" were given. Every artist will be welcomed back at anytime and the appreciation of the club was ably expressed by George Forhan.

Interest Rate Cut Attracts Roosevelt

Washington, Feb. 14—In line with his recent declaration that interest rates were too high, President Roosevelt has conferred with Congressional leaders on a pending measure which would give hard-pressed municipalities a means of scaling down both the principal and carrying charges of their debts.

The bill, already passed by the House of Representatives but stalled since last session on the Senate side, would afford defaulting municipalities debt relief through the Federal courts if two-thirds of the creditors agreed that a reduction should be made.

The President at a recent press conference said he felt interest rates on most of the approximately $250,000,000,000 of public and private indebtedness in the United States were too high. He suggested they might be scaled down through voluntary agreements or by measures such as those pending.

General Vassily Constantinavich Bleucher, who, as commander-in-chief of Red Russia's military forces in the Far East, would have the responsibility of directing military operation in the theatre of the war in the event of conflict with Japan, cheered the Communist congress in Moscow by describing to them a Soviet army protecting the Manchoukuo border that is "so strong, it will crack the very foundations of capitalism" in the event of a Russo-Japanese war.

Brantford Man Keeps a Record of Belleville For Many Years

Belleville had a temperature of 42 degrees below zero, so says C. E. Rose of Brantford who has kept a Belleville record for many years. Mr. Rose writes as follows:

33 High Street,
Brantford, Feb. 10, 1934

Ontario Intelligencer, Belleville.

Dear Editor:

I am very much interested in comparing present low temperatures with records of years ago.

In today's Toronto Globe I notice as follows—"Belleville, Feb. 9, an all time record for low temperatures in this area was established today when the mercury was found to have fallen to 38 degrees below etc."

Mr. Editor I wish to say it is not "an all time record" for on Monday, Feb. 17, 1896, Belleville (supposed to be officially) recorded 42 degrees below. So it was recorded by Belleville papers of following date. Also an expensive and thoroughly reliable thermometer, at Reid's Cheese Box Factory, Foxboro recorded 42 below on same day, while cheaper and perhaps less reliable thermometers recorded 39 and 40 below. I have for very many years kept a record of "low" and "high" temperatures and my records show the 42 below on Feb. 17, 1896.

I send this thinking it may be of interest to you and readers of your paper.

Wishing your paper and all my Belleville and Hastings County friends every success,

Sincerely
C. E. Rose

Diligent examination of the fyles of this newspaper of the above date, Monday, February 17, 1896 and days succeeding, proves the contention of Mr. C. E. Rose of Brantford, whose letter appears in another column. On that day the mercury descended in Belleville to the lowest point ever recorded in the history of the city. 34 degrees below zero was officially recorded in the city at four o'clock on Monday morning. At Corby's distillery, Corbyville, according to the unknown chronicler of that time, "an official temperature reading of a government thermometer there, was marked at 42 below. On Monday," continues the writer, "the mercury started to descend at noon and by nine o'clock in the evening had reached 18 below. Before morning shivering residents who kept watch on thermometer discovered that the lowest point reached before morning was 43 below. On the following day the weather moderated and snow fell.

The thermometer on which the record breaking low temperatures were recorded on that date in Corbyville has long since disappeared, stated officials of the plant when questioned. It has been replaced by a new instrument.

BURNS MAUSOLEUM WILL BE REPAIRED

Churchyard at Dunfries Mecca For Burns Lovers

It seems the people of Dunfries, Scotland, are complaining about the condition of the Burns mausoleum in St. Michael's Churchyard there, the mausoleum being a mecca for Burns lovers from all parts of the world. The citizens asked the council of Dunfries to do something to keep the mausoleum in good shape and the town council are taking steps to comply. It is a far cry from Dunfries to Saint John, New Brunswick, in Canada, but, notwithstanding, there is a definite link, for the man who undertook the work of erecting the mausoleum lies buried in the Loyalist cemetery in that city, states the Tourist Department of the Canadian National Railways. He was John Milligan and he emigrated to Canada shortly after the work was completed. The mausoleum was designed by G. P. Hunt architect, London, and the plans were approved on the 25th of April, 1815. The successful tenderer for the mason work was John Milligan.

POLICE NEWS

John Weiman, Tweed, who was found guilty of carrying concealed weapons and also assaulting a police officer one week ago, was sentenced to serve ten days in the common jail by His Worship Magistrate Mikel, when he appeared for sentence this morning. Weiman was given a similar sentence for a breach of the L. C. A. one week ago. The sentence meted out today will commence at once and run concurrently with the remaining three days Weiman has to serve on his previous jail term.

Weiman was arrested by Constable Hayes at Tweed in the early morning of Feb. 7th last and assaulted the officer with a drawn dagger knife at the time. He was intoxicated, he admitted. Weiman's previous record showed no criminal charges having been registered against him although he had been convicted twice previously on charges of intoxication. His employer at Tweed gave a creditable testimony as to his actions, all of which were seriously taken into consideration.

Yesterday afternoon in the local Juvenile Court a youthful resident of this city was charged with stealing automobile radiators and selling them to a local junk dealer. The youth claimed to be under the age of 16 years. His case was enlarged for one week pending an investigation as to his proper age. He was turned over to the custody of the Children's Aid Society for the period of his enlargement.

The meeting opened by the singing of "O Canada". After the secretary's report the annual financial report was read by the Treasurer, Mrs. J. Millar showing a creditable balance. It was moved by Mrs. Turner and seconded by Mrs. Harrison that the report be adopted and a vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Millar for her work. Miss Boyle's room won the picture contest.

Mrs. Russell Smith read an inspiring address given by Mrs. Reece at last year's convention on Founder's Day. This is celebrated each year in February in memory of the late Mrs. Cortice of Toronto, who, seventeen years ago, established the first Home and School Club in that city. Later this was extended to become a provincial organization. Now the movement is national.

New officers for 1934 were elected as follows:

President—Mrs. W. J. Harrison.
Vice-President—Mrs. S. Turner.
Secretary—Mrs. Ralph Smith.
Treasurer—Mrs. J. Millar.

After the regular business the members for a short time forgot their cares and responsibilities as parents and enjoyed whole-heartedly the games provided and supervised by Miss Dorothy Boyle and Miss Hazel Thompson. Mrs. Turner was awarded the prize for having the highest number of points. A very delectable lunch was then served by refreshment committee and the meeting closed by singing "God Save the King".

PENSION RESTORATION

Ottawa, Feb. 14—The intention of the Government to restore all ex-soldiers pensions, which have been discontinued without a hearing, was made known to the House of Commons by Prime Minister R. B. Bennett. Whether legislation would be necessary or not, he had not been able to ascertain as yet, the Prime Minister said, but steps would be taken to achieve that end by whatever means necessary.

He is Louis Philippe Brosseau, shown ABOVE, who declares is the grandson of the "lost" Dauphin, the son of the illfated Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette, guillotined during the French revolution of 1793. Brosseau's royalist moniker, he declares, is Prince Louis de Bourbon.

Legal Rules Exist to Further Justice and More Convenience in Business

Address by Prof. Walker on Business Law Quite Interesting

CASES CITED

Reasonableness Ideal of Common And Busines Law

"Legal rules exist, not for their own sake but to further justice and convenience in the business of human life," stated Prof. E. J. Walker of Queen's University, Kingston, addressing a packed audience of business men and women of all classes at the Y.M.C.A. last evening.

The lecture was the second of the series of five which have been arranged for local residents by the Chamber of Commerce in collaboration with Queen's University experts.

"Reasonableness is the ideal of common law and business law," amplified the speaker as he prepared to delve into the hidden recesses of the problems of every day law questions, which confront the business man and woman. It was a refreshing talk from the layman's point of view on these knotty problems and tangles of common law. In clear non technical language, and delivered with forceful style, Prof. Walker, entirely at ease with his large audience elaborated upon the subject.

Again he quoted from previous works: "The object of law is order, and the result of order is that men are able to look ahead with some sort of security as to the future. The operations of the mind in the domain of law are based upon commonsense and may be followed without difficulty by persons of ordinary intelligence and education. That sums up the attitude of those versed in the subject", pointed out Professor Walker.

Contracts In Daily Use

General contracts head the lists of articles in daily use, explained the speaker. A contract he defined as:—an agreement, a promise, an undertaking. The essentials of a contract are:—competent parties; offer and acceptance consideration, legality of object and capacity. Persons of unsound mind, or who are intoxicated, and Indians living on reservations are not liable parties to a contract.

In the latter classification there was considerable room for explanation. It was at this juncture, that business men, who have had past dealings with this troublesome subject paid particular attention to his definition of "capacity".

"Every person is assumed to have capacity to contract, but there are certain classes of people in whose cases this may be rebutted," he explained. "This incapacity must be proved by the person claiming the benefit. Persons under 21 years of age, referred to as minors, are a group entitled to protection because of incapacity. It is apparent, however, that such persons although protected from liability under a general contract should assume some liability under certain contracts. For example, the courts have held, that minors should be liable on contracts for the purchase of 'necessaries'."

Explained Necessaries

"What are necessaries?" asked the speaker. He illuminated the findings of an early court case on this matter. Necessaries in this case, decided, the court, are articles suitable to the condition in life of the particular minor. This legal rule was established.

The defendant in the case was the younger son of a deceased baronet, who had an income, and on attaining his majority, he was to become entitled to a large sum. He moved in what was considered the highest society, and rode races for a friend.

The plaintiff, a jeweller, supplied the defendant with certain goods valued at a considerable amount. The goods consisted of a silver goblet, gold cuff links and other articles. The case came to trial and the Court proceeded to prove the point "whether these things were necessary to maintain him in his station", and placed the burden on the plaintiff to give evidence of something peculiar, making them necessaries in this case. In his judgment, the Lord Chief stated: "It is clear and obvious, that the articles in question not merely are not, but cannot be, necessaries to any one of any rank or fortune or condition whatsoever".

One more case was illustrated by the speaker. In another judgment, it was stated that: "If the minor at the time of sale was, in fact, sufficiently supplied with goods of the kind supplied, they were not necessaries."

In this particular case the defendant had been supplied with a suit of clothes. The court accepted the evidence of the father, that the son was sufficiently supplied with clothing, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the purchase price from the defendant. The judgment established the rule, that the responsibility of determining whether the minor was already sufficiently supplied, rested with the merchant.

Some general principles on this subject which were established by specific court cases, continued the speaker are:

"A proposal must be communicated before it can be accepted. The acceptance must be communicated. Mere mental assent is not enough. The communication must be by conduct."

Certain contracts, even though the four essentials previously outlined have been complied with, are not enforceable, pointed out Professor Walker, "unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought or some memorandum or note thereof shall be in writing."

Performance of a contract will not be required when damages will place the injured party in the same position as he would have been if the performance had been completed.

In the case of a manufacturing company a plaintiff had agreed to make a machine for a third party to be delivered at a specified date. They did not finish the machine until a month later than the date, claiming that the delay was unavoidable. The buyer refused to take the product and the plaintiffs sued. The Court held, that the defendants had committed a breach of contract, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to collect damages for the loss of profit on the contract, and for all the expenses uselessly incurred by them in making other parts of the machine.

The above judgment, it was pointed out by the speaker, indicates, that the damages may be in access of even the contract price.

Goods Sales Covered

Sale of goods was also covered by Professor Walker. A set of legal rules has been established by common law practices in connection with the sale of goods and they are now incorporated in the sale of Goods Act of Ontario. One case of peculiar interest is that in which the rule was established that "passive acquiescence of a seller in the self-deception of the buyer does not entitle the latter to avoid the contract".

In this case the plaintiff, a farmer, offered to sell oats to the defendant, a trainer of race horses, and exhibited a sample saying, that he had a quantity of oats for sale at the same price. The defendant offered to take the whole quantity at the price.

The plaintiff delivered part of the oats, and the defendant meeting him later said, "Why those were new oats you sent me." To which the plaintiff answered, "I knew they were. I had none other." The defendant replied, "I thought I was buying old oats; new oats are useless to me; you must take them back."

The plaintiff refused to take them back, and then sued for the price.

The case, first tried before a County Court Judge was given in favour of the defendant. The judgment hinged on the fact, that the plaintiff believed he was getting old oats.

The case was appealed and the Appeal Court gave judgment for plaintiff. The Appeal Court submitted the following argument:

"I take the rule to be, that where a specific article is offered for sale without express warranty and the buyer has full opportunity of examining it and forming his own judgment, if he chooses to act on his own judgment, the rule of caveat emptor applies (let the buyer beware). If he gets the article he examined, and contracted to buy, he gets all he is entitled to and is bound by the contract. If indeed the buyer instead of acting on his own opinion had asked the question, whether the oats were new or old, or had said anything, which intimated his understanding that the seller was selling the oats as old oats, the case would have been entirely different. We must recognize the reasonableness of the judgment, when evidence was submitted to show, that the defendant had not asked whether they were old or new oats and he had the opportunity to examine them."

Intricacies of Law

The above are splendid examples of the intricacies of law, but with the element of common sense playing a leading part in every case, explained Professor Walker as he summed up the various forms of contract. For the rest of the address the subjects touched upon by him could not be as clearly presented in newsprint.

Following the address an invitation was given by Professor Walker and Mr. J. O. Herity, chairman of the evening for the audience to ask whatever questions they wished in order to clarify certain points of the illuminating address. Several local business men presented well pointed questions on various topics, which were answered by the speaker with no hesitation.

In introducing Professor Walker, Mr. Herity called attention to the fact, that he was a native born son of Ontario, having come from the western section to take up his duties as instructor at Queen's University. He was graduated from the University of Saskatchewan and launched upon a career of accounting and business law. Prof. Walker is an author of one text book on law which finds wide use in schools throughout the Province including the Belleville Collegiate Institute, and co-author of another text book on accounting.

On Tuesday evening, as a friendly gesture to the students, scholars of the Collegiate Institute were admitted free to the lecture by the Chamber of Commerce and helped swell the large number in attendance.

The audience was reminded that the third lecture of the series, given by Prof. J. L. McDougall, of Queen's would be held in the same room one week from Tuesday. The subject will be a particularly apt one, entitled, "Investing for Security".

Little Benny's Note Book

Sunday afternoon my sister Gladdis left little Willie at our house for ma to take care of, and me and him and ma was in the living room and pop came in and slipped on the loose rug and waver his arms and legs around without quite falling all a ways down, and Willie started to laugh like anything as if it was one of the funniest things he had ever saw.

Wich maybe it was, and ma said, He thinks it's funny because he hasn't had the advantage of sufficient experience to realise the possible danger. I sippose some unreasining people would give him a smack to impress the seriousness of life on him, she said.

I bleeve I'm one of them, pop said, feeling his knee to see if he had bent it or anything, and ma said, Well, according to the principals of the sycology of child education you couldn't havp a more mistaken reaction. Abusing a child's feelings is no way to teach him consideration for the feelings of others. He must learn through his little understanding. Now, Willie, listen to grandmother. Dont you realise that your grandfather mite of fallen and injured himself seriously, perhaps even of broken his leg? she said.

Would he haff to wawk on crutches? Willie said, and ma said, There, now you see, the gravity of it is starting to penetrate his little comprehension already. Yes, Willie, your grandfather mite even haff to wawk on crutches, she said, and Willie said, Well, when he's not using them can I play with them?

Yee gods, pop said, and ma said, Now Willie, that's not the important question, that's neither here nor there.

Well, wherever it is, will you promise to leave me play with them? Willie said, and ma said, I will on one condition, that is if you say you're sorry your grandfather slipped, and Willie said, I'm sorry he slipped, dont forget you promised, when do you think it will be?

There, you see, Willyum, it's at least a partial victory, ma said, and pop said, Quite, I hope you wont think I'm mean to the little fellow but I'm going to get a hammer and tacks and fasten that rug down this very minnit.

Wich he did.

REVENUE OF TEN MONTHS INCREASED

Ottawa, Feb. 14—(CP)—Revenues of the Dominion for the 10-month period of the fiscal year ended Jan. 31 last are $8,395,000 ahead of the corresponding period last year.

Official figures show that the revenue for January is $5,977,000 ahead of Jan., 1933.

This is the fifth time in the past five months that the revenue figures have continued to show a decided upward turn. Money collected in excise taxes, including the sales tax, is $17,453,000 greater than the amount collected in January of last year.

Socialist Attempt to Resist the Government Authority Has Failed

Strongholds Crumble Before Heavy Machine Gun And Artillery Fire

1,000 DEAD

Position of Government Stronger Than Ever Says Dollfuss

Premier Advises House They Will be Restored in Some Cases

By Wade Werner
Associated Press Foreign Staff

Vienna, Feb. 14 (AP) — Socialist strongholds crumbled before heavy machine-gun and artillery fire loosed in a sweeping government offensive today.

Government officials broadcast the claim that the opposition had been vanquished on all fronts

Socialist headquarters at Flokkdsdorf, in which retreating revolutionaries had taken refuge by the score, was captured after fierce fighting.

Linz, capital of Upper Austria, where the first fighting in the civil warfare broke out Monday, was brought completely under control by soldiers and police

After the triumph at suburban Floridsdorf, government forces turned upon Garden City, another workers' settlement nearby. Government sources said defenders there had surrendered.

As fighting continued, the dead were estimated at near 1,000. No attempt was made to reach an estimate of the wounded and injured.

Government Stranger

Driving the revolutionaries before them troops pressed into the area of the Vienna municipal apartments still held by their defenders.

Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss told the Associated Press that the Socialist attempt to resist government authority with armed force definitely had failed.

"The position of the federal government is stronger than ever," he declared.

Street-car service, after having been disrupted since Monday by the Socialist general strike, was resumed in Vienna today. Electric lights flashed on again.

The Socialists began falling back before the advancing government forces shortly after dawn. They retreated, fighting stubbornly towards the Floridsdorf sector across the Danube.

Follows Normal Course

"Life in Vienna and in Austria has followed its normal course in spite of isolated heavy fighting"

"Railway traffic has been kept punctually to schedule, thanks to the excellent discipline of the Austrian railway men.

"Similarly, electric power plants and other technical establishments in Vienna and other provinces have not been forced to abandon their services.

"It is regretted that it could even be attempted—even for a short time—to damage Austria's economic life.

"This attempt has been repulsed and Austria's path leads forward and upward."

The Chancellor visited the Ministry of Public Security today and then made a motor tour of the threatened districts around Vienna, inspecting troop operations.

He appeared in good health, but obviously overworked as a result of the strain of the last few days.

Savage Resistance

Driven from one barricade in the running battles in the working class sections, the Socialists would retreat only far enough to find shelter, then their savage resistance would be renewed.

One company of Socialist Republican Guards, for example barricaded itself in a state-owned pawnshop of Floridsdorf, the fighters staking their lives amid a background of pawned valuables and clothing.

Meanwhile, in Graz, Vienna and Linz, 34 Socialists accused of violence against the government in connection with the warfare and general strike, faced court martial today. The death penalty was expected for all of them.

The flight across the river began after government guns had torn into workers sections. The great Karl Marx apartment building was wrecked.

As the result of the bombardment on this and other municipal apartment sections where thousands of workers lived, the hospitals were crowded with wounded and injured. A little five-year-old girl and a boy of 14 died in the fighting around the Karl Marx development.

Graphically illustrating the confusion of the fronts in Vienna was the fact that printed appeals to resist "this government of desperadoes which has nothing but a few thousand bayonets behind it" were distributed this morning through the government post office.

Not to be Slaves

The circulers reached Vienna homes with the regular mail. "Fight with all weapons," said the appeal. "Your freedom, your children and your future are at stake, we will not be slaves."

Great bitterness prevailed among the population on both sides.

Today were was no longer any academic attitude for or against the Socialists in their fight for "a chance to live" and against "a Fascist government threat."

Bourgeoisie residents of the city were clamoring for the ruthless punishment of Socialist Burgomaster Seitz and all other leaders of the Socialist movement now under arrest.

Although the most bitter hostilities continued in Vienna, Fighting was again reported in Steyr, Eggenberg, Bruckandermur, Judenburg and in Weorgl and Kufstein, along the German border.

The government announced Socialist headquarters at Eggenberg had been demolished. Socialists were reported still in possession of several hotly-contested streets in Steyr and Buckandermur.

A dispatch from Thomasroith in Upper Austria told of a sanguinary encounter there today.

Soldiers entered Socialist headquarters, the dispatch said, after a white flag had been raised over the building, only to be greeted by savage gun fire.

Other troops poured in and the government forces retaliated by killing outright every Socialist within reach. The total of these casualties were not reported.

HOUSE VOTES DOWN KING AMENDMENT

Immediately C.C.F. Leaders Proposes Another Against Government

PENSIONS UP

Ottawa, Feb. 14 (CP)—Another amendment to the address in reply to the Speech from the Thone, tantamount to a want of confidence motion in the government confronts the House of Commons today. No sooner had the House voted down the straight want of confidence motion of Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King last night than J. S. Woodworth, C.C.P. leader, proposed another.

Announcement from Prime Minister R. B. Bennett last night that pensions withdrawn from war veterans withous a hearing would be restored following an attack on the actions of the Pensions Board by Hon. J. L. Ralston, former Minister of National Defence, one of the front bench Liberals, who took part in the address debate yesterday.

The men affected are chiefly those, who have married a second time, and received allowances for their children without producing proof of the death of their first wives. Col. Ralston claimed the Pensions Board placed upon these men the onus of proving the validity of their second marriages, whereas the courts of the land regarded an accused as innocent until proved guilty. He argued the onus would be on the authorities to prove the marriage invalid.

Restore Pensions

The matter had not escaped the attention of the government, Mr. Bennett assured the House. He had tried to find a way to correct it but did not see how the decisions of the Board could be overruled without an amendment to the Act. A little later he announced the government's intention to restore the pensions by whatever means were necessary.

Hon. Ian Mackenzie (Lib. Vancouver Centre) joined with Col. Ralston in assailing the Pensions Board and demanded the 20,000 outstanding investigations of marriage cases should be reviewed by a committee headed by the Minister of Pensions rather than by the Pensions Board.

In some cases the actions of the Board were "simply bastardizing children, declaring marriages illegal without offering the man an opportunity to present his case," Col. Ralston charged.

Two western farmer members voted with the government against the Liberal want of confidence motion. They were A. M. Carmichael (Prog. Kinderaley) and Donald Kennedy (U.F.A. Peace River). The rest of the third party, however, voted with the Liberals, the vote was 110 to 76.

Mr. Woodsworth's amendment may prolong the debate on the address for several more days.

In Ticklish Position

It is calculated to put the Liberals in a slightly difficult position. During the debate they have been unsparing in their condemnation of the C.C.P. and also of the alleged failure of the government to relieve unemployment and assist agriculture.

The new amendment regrets the government had not taken steps necessary to "deal adequately with unemployment" and "put the agricultural industry on a basis, that will ensure the farmer a decent standard of living." If the oficial Opposition votes against it, the left wingers think, they will be voting against their convictions. If they vote for it they will be joining with the third party, whose general policies they have denounced.

Although most Liberal speakers have been demanding an early election there is one who would be content to have the government serve its full term in office. He is Jean-Francois Pouliot of Temiscouata. Last night he said he was not in favor of an election this year provided the Conservative party got a new leader.

LITTLE AMERICA IS LIKE A BOOM TOWN

Construction of Winter Camp is Speeded Up

Heavily dressed men bustled about. Dogs and sledges hurried in and out with supplies. Hammers pounded and saws sang.

This was the scene as preparations were rushed for winter occupation of this capital of a barren waste.

A new mess hall, radio shack, observation trucks and the library are under construction. Temporarily, the cows brought from the United States were placed in a tent. The portable barn was connected into a bunkhouse.

Dogs and tractors collaborated in the work of hauling supplies from the east barrier cache a mile and a half to the south.

Women's Conservative Club Re-Elects Mrs. Hope McGinnis

With representatives from all the wards of the city present, the annual meeting of Belleville Women's Conservative Club, was held Tuesday evening in the Conservative Association Rooms, Front St. Mrs. Hope McGinnis occupied the chair and in her review of the Club's activities for the past year presented much of encouragement to its members.

Miss Olive Blue, secretary and Miss A. Harold, treasurer, read their reports, which met with unanimous approval. The treasurer's report showed a most creditable balance on hand after the organization's substantial contribution to charitable and worthy causes throughout the past twelve months. Miss Blue, the Club's capable secretary tendered her resignation, and Mrs. F. B. Brodribb was elected to fill that office.

Resultant of the annual election, the following were made honorary and active officers of the Belleville Women's Conservative Club for 1934: Honorary President, Mrs. W. E. Tummon; Mrs. W. H. VALENTINES

Saint Valentine's Day is here again and with it it has brought those touches of a civilization and courtesy not so rude as in almost forgotten days when the cheap valentine used to be so much the "rage." Today fortunately these are kept in hidden places in the shops, while things of beauty take their place with delightful suggestions of sentiment instead of the rude shafts and darts of evil motives.

Probably people are more outspoken today and men say things to one another's faces rather than hide behind a nasty valentine. Indeed in the name of St. Valentine these wicked old blotches on the face of printing should not be honored with the name of a saint who was a martyr and whose name somehow became associated with lovers.

Much of the love interest in association with St. Valentine's Day is gone with the present day sophistication which does not care so much for what is traditional, and yet there is enough left to find its way into art productions.

It is hoped that this day brought not the wicked brutal pictures once exhibited in show-windows but rather the delightful productions of an age which notes that if there is anything worthwhile in the day it is worth an artistic valentine.

THE LENTEN PERIOD

Lent has been ushered in and this year it occurred in association with the anniversary of Saint Valentine.

With Ash Wednesday more and more the churches today regard this period of meditation and even abstinence in more or less measure than in the long past years. The Lenten season offers mankind a time in the dull of the year to prepare for the awakening which is associated with Easter and springtide.

Self-denial is one of the motives the world has learned or ought to have learned in the past four years. Lent but strengthens this virtue.

Life is made up of contrasts. Life on the peak of incessant business or unending sensations and shocks is not enjoyable, but by contrast life is fuller and broader. The best preparation for the joys of Eastertide lies in a Lenten attitude during the next six weeks.

A COLLEGE IN THE CAMPS

Frontier College under the stress of the unusual conditions of unemployment, discovered in 1933 that its field activities were nearly double those of any other year in its history. The Frontier College receives some aid from the Department of Education but the main support comes from contributions of public-spirited men and women who approve of the work among the men in the isolated camps among whom the laborer-teachers do their service.

Recently General McNaughton, Chief of Staff at Ottawa, asked the Frontier College to place a representative in each camp under the Department of National Defence. Eighty-seven representatives were placed in these camps across the Dominion last year, and there yet remain scores of camps not served.

Last year 4,800 men enrolled in study, 10,000 benefitted by general classes, and 33,000 magazines were placed at the disposal of the men.

The instructors are men who are able by their training, their physique, and their broad human qualities to serve the men in the camps through the agency of the Frontier College whose headquarters are 26 Queen Street East, Toronto.

In these days when in the more developed parts of Canada young men and women are crowding institutions of learning it is not surprising to find the men in the labor camps also striving for knowledge.

CAUSE FOR ENCOURAGEMENT

Events in Europe and the Far East may unnerve the peace of mind of some persons but in North America there is reason to be more optimistic as witness after witness rises to speak of the evidences of improvement. This week Mr. Louis Wiley, the business manager of the New York Times, noted before a Canadian audience that Canada was showing signs of recovery without recourse to the experimentation which is going on "across the line" in the United States, and in the latter country he added, progress in getting men back to work is a visible evidence of a return to normalcy.

With the world unrest the average man can seize the opportunity to do his share to improve conditions and if all do this the united result will be of a kind to re-establish confidence.

It is the road of a radiant hope

Shall come to our stricken world.

FINLEY PETER DUNNE, who created the famous Dooley newspaper character, has made a lot of money and kept it, according to the "Very Odd" McIntyre, columnist de luxe, late of Galliopolis, Ohio, now of the Big Stem known as Broadway. Dunne started his writing career as a Chicago reporter, which shows that even a reporter can win his way to riches, a la Horatio Alger. He was probably fired for incompetency and had to write pieces or hit the bread line—then he created Dooley, the old philosopher whose dialogues with his friend Hennessey were the forerunners of the Will Rogers "All I know is what I see in the papers." Dooley used to spill his wit and wisdom to the tune of "I see b the papers." Dunne belonged to the Eugene Field era, when George Ade's "Fables in Slang" were the toast of the hour. In those days Finley Peter Dunne could absorb a quart of champagne at one sitting with no visible deletrious effects. Today he is ruddy cheeked and brimming with vitality. He has been the crony of some of the richest men in the United States and has several times circled the earth. So Dooley didn't do so bad, and all young reporters can take a leaf from Dooley's note book and make a million—perhaps even by getting fired for incompetency by some ignorant city editor, and writing pieces for the funny papers.

HARDWARE MERCHANT asks us to take a message to that downtown merchant who complained of folks slamming the door going out and knocking goods from the shelves. Says he, we'll fix his door so that it will shut automatically, quietly and easily. Doors that slam are things of the past as far as modern merchandising is concerned.

ANOTHER MERCHANT SAYS:—Tell all the customers that they can slam our door all they like, but if they don't slam them coming in they certainly won't going out, for they will be so pleased with our service that they will close the door quietly, yea, even reverently.

BATHING SUIT TRAVELLER hit town one of the coldest days of last week, waited a long time for his best customer to come down to the store, but failed to make a sale, because the pipes were frozen in the store and the clerks were in a huddle trying to keep warm, while the customers were busy trying to keep the home fires burning. How'd you like to be selling bathing suits on commission at thirty-five or more below zero, or demonstrating them.

"A SUCCESSFUL MAN now is one who thinks up ways to make money faster than the government can think up ways to take it from him," remarks the editor of the St. Petersburg, Florida Times, who has evidently just received his income tax papers.

Mr. G. M. James Describes Scenes During Vacation Tour of the United States

(From Our Special Travelling Representative, MR. G. M. JAMES)

ARTICLE V.

As we sat in Memorial Park, which faces St. Johns River and is the largest in Jacksonville, a young woman passed by wearing a green dress, low shoes and turned down short green stockings. Her legs were bare. This gives an idea of the January climate. There was a group of grey-haired men near by. One played the mouth organ while another danced and all were enjoying themselves. As the walks and drives in this park are smooth like our sidewalks, many children were darting here and there on roller skates. The palms, oleanders and other tropical plants were numerous, luxuriant and beautiful. Women are wearing white coats and dresses just as in the summer time at Belleville.

After a very happy week we left Jacksonville on January 28 for the city of Miami, a distance of 360 miles straight south. As Jacksonville is in the extreme north of Florida and Miami is in the south, we passed through the entire State along the east coast often sighting the deep blue Atlantic. To our surprise most of Florida, though quite level, is waste land covered with scrub palms and other worthless growths. The soil is uniformly sand as white as salt and the amount of fertilizers necessary to make this land even moderately productive is prohibitive because of the great cost. There are evidences that this sand has been washed up by the ocean in ages past as it contains much salt, another factor harmful to vegetation. True there are a few acres here and there producing pine trees, oranges and grapefruit. Most of the pine trees had a few feet of bark peeled off on one side to allow the pitch to run. Pitch largely used for varnishes and paints is an important industry in Florida. The United States has many, many thousands of acres of unproductive land that we have seen in the following States: New York, New Jersey, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia and Florida. Such facts emphasize the greatness and fertility of the soil of Canada, especially of Ontario. If the United States can support 110 million people, Canada can ultimately support three times as many. Young Canadians should realize that they live in the most favored land in the whole world.

On this journey south we saw eagles, buzzards (like our crows but larger), pelicans, kingfishers and blackbirds. The temperature throughout the day was 90 degrees but it was just pleasant and comfortable as there is always a delightful ocean breeze. We passed a few fine orange groves and at one home there were about fifty hives of bees. We have tasted Florida honey but for us it has not nearly so fine a flavor as our own.

We were much amused at some methods of roadside advertising. A Burma-Shave Co. has small yellow boards on stakes at intervals of about fifty feet. On each board is painted two or three words until at a mile a minute you read a sentence like the following: "Moonlight and roses, whiskers like Moses, just don't go together, Burma-Shave." From Detroit to Miami we found billboards in fields by the road very numerous. The leading Miami daily newspaper did such advertising for two hundred miles before we passed its office. Nearly all hotels do such advertising extensively.

From Detroit to Jacksonville the traffic on the highways was very light but from Jacksonville to Miami it was heavy both ways. As we came near Miami cocoa-nut palms were numerous, each tree well loaded with ripening fruit.

We glided gracefully into Miami about 7:30 in the evening amid a brilliancy of lights that outdid Paris. Flagler street like Broadway in New York was thronged with merry people going to the theatres. Many stores had folding doors which pushed back each way and opened the whole front to the street. Most of the shops on Flagler street like those on the boardwalk at Atlantic City sell curios of every description.

Miami city has a population of nearly two hundred thousand, half of which are visitors. It is a very clean city consisting entirely of homes and hotels, which are made of stucco (concrete) with red tile roofs. Many wonder at the numerous fine hotels similar to those at Atlantic City and how they can all make it pay, but there is an answer. They are largely monuments to the activities of Cupid for the sands of the beach near here are known to be covered with young men seeking romance. The largest class of visitors to the resorts of Florida are parents with daughters eligible for marriage. They usually come to Miami for the months of January, February and March, and, if Cupid's infection does not take, they go to Atlantic City for the next three months. During any of these six months something usually happens because the sun shines and the flowers scent the air by day while the moon at night plays peek-a-boo with the clouds with the result that even mediocre feminine charm is bewitching and the guileless young man is engulfed, hook, line and sinker. True, American youth work fast and furious and the heavenly spell may soon fade away in a matter-of-fact divorce but there is one chance in twenty-five that daughter will stay "put" and that is sufficient. In case worst comes to the worst alimony may be substantial and that is better than marrying a village "gawk" or country clown. Papa and mama did not become engaged under such conditions or amid such surroundings but it is the way the "upper ten" are doing it and of course it must be all right. Does anyone really know to what an extent he or she is a slave to custom or fashion with which they had nothing whatever to do? But for papa and mama (especially the latter) this romance of love is a serious business. Daughter must not look cheap; she must be invitingly (the come-hither style) dressed and there are plenty of stores here ready to wave the magic wand of beauty and charm. That cuts into papa's bankroll until it hurts. Then they must put up at a fine hotel (ten to twenty dollars a day each) so that daughter's impassioned lover may call and meet papa and mama under inspirational surroundings. Everything must be done properly and that costs a pile of money, the main reason why there is a beautiful Miami ("just a bit of heaven") with its famous stores and hotels and all that goes with them. Money puts the "my" in Miami. The writer has been at Atlantic City and is now at Miami; he has eyes to see and ears to hear, so do not imagine that the above is more fiction than fact.

But there is another part to this "bit of heaven" picture. The next largest class (and it is surprisingly large) that go to Atlantic City and Florida are husband and wife well past middle life who are enjoying the end for which the beginning was made. They have borne the heat and burden of the day, they have suffered many severe trials together and each has supplemented the faith and courage of the other to final triumph and success. Sons and daughters are married and are fighting their own stern battles which come to all, high or low, rich or poor. They sit together in the park and talk over their courting days, how it required their united strength to put a big, knotty chunk of wood in the parlor box stove, how it was saving to turn the coal-oil lamp low, how long and hard they had to toil to save enough money to get married and start housekeeping, and a thousand other well remembered details which to them were far more interesting than the Civil War or the Gold Standard. It is deeply touching to see the little courtesies and attentions they show each other on the street, in the hotel and at the table. All that conceit and fierce passion of youth is gone but instead there is deep calm, love, reverence, courage and faith born in their youth and days of trial. They are very happy and contented and fully realize that their sun is setting but rejoice at its glory. Which is the better courtship, the new or the old?

Then there is a third important class at these winter resorts, "THE might-have-beens", those who long have desired to experience matrimony but to whom Fate has been cruel. The maiden ladies are usually in pairs but the bachelors are absolutely alone. Who can fully understand or appreciate that void and loneliness which all too soon robbed them of their physical beauty and made them "just a bit peculiar" as we so often unkindly say? The blind cause us to appreciate the great gift of sight, the deaf likewise the power to hear, the lame to appreciate our perfection, in like manner are these "unclaimed jewels" a warning to others not to be too particular or exacting but to grab a partner while that is possible? I am glad to report that Cupid succeeds in bringing together some of these neglected, lonely people and better still in making them happy though a little late in life. It all helps business for Miami.

There are other minor classes visiting here but they cannot be mentioned just now as it would spoil the effect of what has gone before. Perhaps something about them in another letter.

As the lovely maple trees grow on our streets in Belleville, so here are palms, oleanders (several varieties) and many shrubs and flowers, plenty of them everywhere. The oleanders and many tropical shrubs (some with a name that sounds like "high biscuits" are in luxuriant bloom. The streets and sidewalks are cement, in perfect condition without a bulge or a crack, and so clean that we are amazed. Miami city proper has the lovely Bayfront Park between it and Biscayne Bay, an inlet of the Atlantic Ocean like the Toronto Bay is of Lake Ontario. The park is beautifully laid out with palms, oleanders, shrubs and flowers of many kinds, cement walks and drives with many benches for the weary or thoughtful. In this park we saw many of our common garden flowers like the marigolds, salvia and others. Two long rows of sweet peas in bloom were trained up chicken net wire four feet high. These sweet peas were lovely. There were many others which we had never seen before. A flock of over a hundred homing pigeons live grandly in this park, say "look at the coon" and are fed plenty by those who love to have them perch on every part of their body for as in Buffalo they are boldly tame but amusing. As we sit in this lovely park, we hear the wind passing through the mighty leaves of the palm trees and it sounds just like rain falling gently on a wooden roof. This common sound soothes us to sleep at night but the people who live here are never conscious of it.

The daily papers here have three editions per day and cost five cents per copy. There is very little news apart from this country and we are getting out of step with the world. Every paper contains cross-word puzzles and servant girls are sometimes working them out instead of waiting on customers.

The first day we were in Miami I set out to find the general postoffice as I expected mail from home. Soon I met a well dressed lady with a dog on a leash and carrying eye-glasses on a handle (lorgnette). "Could you direct me to the general postoffice, please?" "Umph," came the immediate response while with one hand she brought the eyeglasses into focus and with the other brought her ambitious dog to his hind feet. "It's up two blocks and then one block to the right," indicating direction with the dual purpose lorgnette. "We had a perfectly good postoffice but they had to spend two million on a new one which we did not require any more than a cat requires four tails. Come on Victor." I confess that I was rather upset but come to think of it I have known other taxpayers nearer home who were on occasion just as vindictive.

Miami is simply jammed with automobiles from every State of the Union (U.S.A.) and it is as difficult to cross streets here as in London, England. Most intersections have the changing lights as with us but at every change bells ring automatically. It is necessary to have policemen at the busy corners as well as there is often a traffic tangle. The policemen here are remarkably fine, strong young men, attractively dressed in a well fitting navy blue uniform with pure white helmet, belt, gloves and trouser stripes. They are the finest we have seen anywhere. From chat on the street we gather that there are many people here from New York, Chicago and other large American cities. We have not run across any Belleville people or other acquaintances so far.

A leading Hollywood motion picture producing company has a studio van going from city to city in search of raw material suitable for future stars. We saw this gilded van like a circus car at Jacksonville and young ladies entering it for a test or an audition as it is called professionally. That same car is to be here too. Thus this great country is combed for its loveliest and most talented maidens. Why? Because it pays some people. Is this a mania or just natural human development? Does it lead to weal or woe? Is there danger of the finer things of life being crushed out ruthlessly? Will it gradually undo the work of the home, the school and the church? It would not do any harm to think the great problem over in every country before it is too late.

On a vacant lot in a prominent part of the city, a husband and wife have set up a tented platform from which they display and discuss maps of the stars. They call themselves astrologers and tell you everything that concerns you from the stars and the date of your birth.

"Come and see the Horriblescope," said one old lady to her companions as they were passing by. Like very many others they paid one dollar for their 1934 Horoscope which reveals their past and future and makes each and every one a Solomon. Is it not remarkable that intelligent people are so amply endowed with "faith" that they are capable of believing anything no matter how absurd or ridiculous?

As we expect to remain at beautiful Miami for several weeks, we will try to give you more details of "Just a little bit of Heaven" in future letters.

LOOKING BACKWARD

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES
OF BY-GONE YEARS

FEBY. 14TH. 1914.

William R. Dempsey, ex-M.P.P. one of Prince Edward county's best and highly esteemed residents, passed away suddenly yesterday afternoon. He was 82 years of age and was born in the township of Ameliasburg where he had resided all his life. He had been a councillor, reeve and warden of the county and in 1898 was elected Conservative member of the Ontario Legislature. He was a veteran of the Fenian Raids of 1866.

At 6.40 last evening a contingent from this city numbering about thirty left by train for Marmora to participate in a banquet which was being tendered to Mr. E. Guss Porter, K.C., M.P. and Mr. Robert Cooke, M.P.P. With the Belleville party were Mr. Corby and Mr. Porter. After leaving Trenton, the engine was detatched from the train at a tank to obtain water. The pipes were frozen and no water could be obtained. Several hours delay was caused in an endeavor to get the pipes thawed out and by that time it was too late to go on to Marmora. The party returned to Belleville and upon arrival here was entertained by Mr. Porter. The banquet, however, took place and was a success, about 175 people being present. Mr. Cooke was able to reach Marmora by driving from Anson where he had intended to board the train carrying the Belleville party. Much regret was expressed at the absence of Mr. Porter.

What kind of a valentine did you get today? Was it a soulful thing with two bleeding hearts tied together with pink ribbon or a horrible nightmare of a thing that would stop a clock? The good old custom like many other good old customs is dying out.

If our friend Mr. Hunt will kindly set it to music we will nominate "Beautiful Snow" as Canada's new national anthem.

There will be an up-to-date hockey match at the rink shortly when a team representing the Ritchie Company will clash with the Grocers' team.

A horse belonging to Dr. Elizabeth Embury and attached to a cutter became frightened when rear the Bank of Montreal this afternoon and ran down Hotel street. It became detached from the cutter and ran through the show window in Nathan Jones' drygoods store at the foot of Hotel street and was brought to a standstill by a pile of drygoods in the centre of the store. The horse's right eye was put out by glass and it was badly cut in many places. Mrs. Philip Denyes was sitting at the counter making purchases when the horse came through the window and when it fell one of her feet was caught under it and sprained badly. There were a number of others in the store at the time.

The water in the river has fallen about a foot since yesterday and all danger of a flood is apparently ended for the present.

Goodyear Company in Strong Position

Statement Reveals Profits, Assets, Reserves And Liquid Position Up.

Toronto, Feb. 14.—An increase of almost 92 per cent in net profits, an increase in net current assets, satisfactory ratio of assets to liabilities, a strong liquid position and increased reserves, were shown in the statement of The Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company of Canada, Limited, and subsidiary companies, for the year ending December 31st, presented by the president, C. H. Carlisle, at the annual meeting today.

Profits for the year, after providing for manufacturing, selling and administrative expenses and for income taxes, but before providing for depreciation, amounted to $1,991,510.64. Depreciation allowance was $614,034.05, leaving a net profit of $1,377,476.59, an increase of $659,723.92 over the net profit for 1932. Dividends of $507,547.25 on Preferred Stock and $360,164.00 on Common were paid during the year. The balance added to the surplus of $7,230,421.93 carried forward from the previous year, gave a total surplus as at December 31st, 1933, of $7,740,187.32. During the year, bonds of Goodyear Cotton Company of Canada, Limited, of the par value of $582,500 were purchased, reducing the amount in the hands of the public to $769,000. This balance outstanding is being called for redemption as of March 1st, 1934. Preferred Shares redeemed amounted to $13,500; expenditures on plant and equipment $229,648.07; increase in miscellaneous investments $82,210.54; increase in net current assets or working capital $211,338.44; increase in deferred charges $4,602.34. The accumulated reserve for depreciation is now $6,238,692.57, and the net book value of plant and buildings 47 per cent of cost.

The balance sheet shows an increase in liquid assets from $6,558,032.45 to $6,943,614.79. Cash increased $518,560.39 from $684,544.08 to $1,203,104.47; call loans and Government bonds at market were down $132,978.05 to $5,740,510.32; accounts receivable less reserve for bad and doubtful accounts were up $87,458.26 to $1,467,580.04; inventories at cost or market, whichever is lower, dropped $126,202 to $2,273,570.39; making total current assets $10,634,763.22, or $346,838.80 more than at the end of 1932. As against these, current liabilities totalled $496,704.65, an increase for the year of $220,631.05, largely accounted for by an increase of $134,260.97 in the necessary reserve for income and other taxes. Net working capital was therefore $10,188,060.57, an increase of $211,338.44.

An item of accrued profits on export business amounting to approximately $200,000 is not included in the statement for the year because the exact amount has not yet been definitely determined.

Assets other than current comprise miscellaneous investments in stocks and bonds of $205,796.96 up $82,210.54; fixed assets of $12,149,586.28, down $127,772.48; and deferred charges of $43,434.08, up $4,602.34. Assets total $23,083,582.54, an increase of $305,879.

The depreciation reserve of $6,238,692.57 was up $256,613.50. Bond obligations were reduced by $582,500 to $769,000 and preferred stock outstanding was reduced by $13,500 to $7,247,300.00. The 128 630 shares of common (no par value) appear at $591,698 unchanged.

Mr. Carlisle pointed out that total working capital, after deducting all current liabilities and tax reserves amounts to $10,188,060.57; that cash on hand alone is approximately two and a half times total current liabilities; and that cash, call loans and Government Bonds, aggregating $6,943,614.79 represents an increase of $385,582.34 over the amount of these assets at the beginning of 1933. He pointed out that the amount of the various kinds of taxes paid was equivalent to 11.37 per cent of the net factory costs exclusive of taxes paid. Although rubber and cotton prices had increased substantially, practically no increase had been made in selling prices of finished products. The year had been entered with large stocks of rubber and cotton at prices materially below the average for the year, and large stocks now on hand were bought much below current market prices. Adequate reserves for doubtful accounts and for depreciation had been made, accummulated reserve for depreciation now standing at $6,238,692.57. Plants and buildings were valued at 47 per cent of cost, and equipment of the rubber plants at 19.8 per cent of installed cost. Dividends on the 7 per cent preferred stock totalling $507,547.25 were paid, and dividends on common stock at 80 cents per share for the first three quarters and $1.00 for the last quarter, totalling $360.164. Earned surplus was increased by $379,768.34 net earnings accruing on common stock totalling $869,929.34, equivalent to $6.76 per share.

Regarding production and sales, Mr. Carlisle said: "Statistics of unit sales of the Canadian rubber industry compiled by the Rubber Association show for the year 1933 a decrease of 10.2 per cent. on sales to dealers, an increase of 9 per cent. in sales to car manufacturers, and an increase in export business of 24.55 per cent.

"The plant of Goodyear Cotton Co. of Canada, Limited, at St. Hyacinthe, Quebec, has operated at a high percentage of capacity during 1933. The production of the Cotton Company is at the highest peak in its history and it is proving an important factor in the business of the consolidated companies.

"Inasmuch as business conditions show signs of a gradual but sure improvement, we anticipate that in the year 1934 there will be an increase in the unit volume of sales of rubber products, not only in Canada but elsewhere. Your company has not deviated from its policy of continually improving its products and with an increased demand for rubber goods, particularly tires, your company should secure its full share of the available business in 1934."

Regional Director G. Donaldson Speaks on Objects

Belleville Y's Mens Club was visited Monday night, in his official capacity as Director of Ontario Region, by Garnet Donaldson, who is also President of Toronto Central Y's Men's Club. He was accompanied by Miles Dewar, a member of the Toronto Y staff.

In introducing Mr. Donaldson to the members, Past International President Newton Thompson explained that the office of Regional Director was the highest in the power of any region to bestow and was conferred on Mr. Donaldson at the 1933 convention in London.

Opening his remarks, Director Donaldson paid tribute to the work of the Belleville Club and expressed his pleasure in again being present, his last visit was as one of a party which presented the Belleville club charter in 1925. On this former occasion, the musical program was in the hands of Mr. James Bankier as soloist, who was again present last evening.

Taking as his theme the motto of the Y's Men's Club, "To acknowledge the duty that accompanies every right," the speaker defined a Y's Man, in the words of the constitution, as a man of and for the Y', with the implication of a desire to attain fuller mental, physical and spiritual standards.

One of the chief rights conferred by membership is the use of the name Y's Man. "Only the individual himself," said the speaker "can know whether he lives up to the ideals implied." The first duty accompanying this right is loyalty to the local club, demonstrated by regular attendance, willing co-operation and prompt discharge of financial obligations. The use of the name Y's Man also demands full participation in the program outlined by International and District officers, the setting up of committees on Boys' Work, World Services and Young Men's Work, prompt attention to routine matters and the furthering of the work of the Association as a whole by exchanging visits with other clubs and fostering new ones when possible. In return, the Ys Man should feel that as one of 4000 members in 145 clubs in 12 countries, he is exercising an influecne that is world wide at a personal cost of the price of a postage stamp weekly.

Thanks of the club was expressed to Mr. Donaldson and to Mr. Bankier, the soloist, by President Earl Boyd, who also assured the the members that all was in readiness for next week, which is to be the Annual Ladies' Night.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

HOW CAN HE LET HER KNOW

Dear Miss Fairfax:—

I have asked her to go out with me this Sunday, and she's told me she'll let me know later. How can I make her understand I love her? She is handicapped in being crippled, and that makes her very sensitive about being loved. She is just 19 and I am 24.

Very soon she will have a birthday, and I want to give her a little remembrance. Would a heart-shaped box of chocolates be the right thing, or would you suggest something different?

L. B.

The chocolates would be all right if she likes candy—and what girl doesn't. The only trouble with such a gift is that its delights are over too soon.

You might give her one of those handy leather cases for holding everything for letter writing—paper, pens, calendar, and space for filing letters!

Such a portfolio might prompt her to write to you.

I believe all girls—unless they're unusually dumb—know when they are loved. Your girls' physical handicap may make her a little slow to respond, but it's likely to make her value your love more deeply.

THE FIRST GIRL HE EVER KISSED

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I'm terribly in love with my girl friend's brother, and have been for the last three months. He does not care for girls very much, but enjoys making me jealous by discussing this girl and that.

One night he kissed me and told me I was the first girl he had ever kissed. I knew this to be true, but was surprised when he treated me so coldly next day. Now he barely speaks to me. He's terribly bashful. How can I snap him out of it?

I thought I would have a party, but I do not believe he would come, for he does not care about parties and dances, while I just love them.

Unhappy.

When your "terribly bashful" boy friend so far overcame his timidity as to kiss you—and you the first girl he had ever kissed—no wonder he was cold, not to say "barricaded" next day. Have a heart! Give him a chance to recover from this momentous experience! Seems to me you're bringing him along very well.

DANGEROUS TO STAY WITH HIM WHEN HE DRINKS

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been married almost two years. My husband drinks to excess and it makes a madman of him. He has such spells that it's dangerous to stay with him alone. I plead with him to stop drinking, but he doesn't listen.

I went away from him about four times, but always came back when he promised to stop drinking, and said he couldn't live without me. He has nothing to worry about; we have no children. I work every day, and work more steadily than he does. Still, I can't make him stop drinking. I'm not careless with the money; I try and pay all the bills first, before I spend my money on myself or for the house.

Will you please tell me what I should do? At times I wish I were dead. I'm only twenty two years old and he is six years older.

Unhappy

There are "cures" for this most unfortunate habit, and men who have gone to them and taken the treatment have been made sober permanently. Your family physician would be the one to recommend such a place, and the difficulty would be in getting your husband to consent to go.

I'm afraid you've been too good to him, paying all the bills and working more steadily than he.

SAYS HIS GIRL "SMELLED GAS"

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I read your column every day and often have wondered if I'd ever have a love story of my own. And lo! Behold! Here I come.

My girl has left me for another. She "smelled gas"—that is, gave me the "ta ta" for a fellow with a car. I'm as good as he is any day, but I can't afford a good car and I would not own the rattle-trap he has bought.

Tell me, please, how to get her away from him, Miss Fairfax, because I really think a great deal of her. Would you suggest my buying a car and getting in the race?

FRANK.

"Smelling gas," as you put it so well, has played havoc with many a romance. If you can afford it, why not get a car and enter the race? And here's wishing you success. But her dropping you for the boy with the rattle-trap makes me wonder if this young lady mightn't have something of the gold-digger in her make-up.

CONSIDERED ENGAGEMENT AS BINDING AS MARRIAGE

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I considered our engagement as sacredly binding as marriage; indeed, I felt we were married. How can a man be so heartless as to forget a girl he loved so dearly—one who lived only for him and never denied him?

Don't you think it was dishonorable in the other girl to take him, when she knew we were engaged and about to be married so soon? I can't go to places of amusement because they only bring back memories I'm trying to forget.

Janet.

You've had this painful experience, my dear, because you loved a man of the type that doesn't value free-hearted love, such as you gave him. Women have shed Niagaras of tears over this since the beginning, and will till the end of things comes. It would be cold comfort if I reminded you that one so lacking in generosity and so changeable is not likely to make a dependable husband.

Travel would be the thing, if you could afford it. Or how about getting a job in another city, where you wouldn't have these painful reminders? Thank goodness — and the New Deal —it's easier to get jobs now than it was a year ago.

Fashion Flashes

(By Alice Alden)

(Copyright 1934, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Just a minute or two and you'll be seeing the new Spring modes. An ideal evening ensemble for Spring evening is a frock of heavy cream net lace posed over a dark red taffeta foundation. The belt of the frock is of the taffeta and the loose, three-quarters taffeta coat is quilted.

It is late for talk about furs, but we must mention one new fur coat. It is a swagger model of nutria. The fur, mounted in lozenge like plaques of various sizes, is posed on beige woollen, narrow strips of which show between the fur plaques.

Well packed in wardrobes headed for the Southland are charming white accessories. A smart handbag is of white crepe with double crepe ruffles all around. There is a liftlock frame of green galalith set with marcasite and silver.

You will be hiding again beneath a broad-brimmed hat this Spring and Summer, if Palm Beach is any indication. Typical of the hats seen there is a capeline of novelty rough straw, the crown small and flat, the brim very wide. The hat is finished with a hand-painted ribbon showing a Mexican design in gay colors.

Partnerships in various fabrics will again be the features of Spring ensembles. A typical suit is a dress of navy blue woollen crepe with a bodice top of medium blue taffeta. There is a cape of the woollen lined with the taffeta, while the hood collar that distinguishes the wide full cape is also taffeta-lined.

Beauty . . . . By Helen Jameson

Dress, Make-up, Coif fure Must Harmonize

(Copyright 1934, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

When the high priests and priestesses of fashion hit upon the ensemble idea, they struck a happy note. At first it was just a little tinkle, welding frock and coat to a state of friendly acquaintanceship. It has developed into a grand old beauty anthem now. And that's why the woman of this particular moment has beaten all previous records for chic and charm. She's the world's champion goodlooker.

Ten or fifteen years ago a woman's getup was selected piece-meal and the result was patch work. She did realize of course that certain hats looked best with certain frocks, but she wasn't all-fired particular. Now matching things up is a delightful mania. The matching goes on even to the unity of odor of soap, powder and perfume.

A smart woman says that the coat is the starter. That's the biggest expense. And it isn't easy to choose a coat. From coat to frocks. One does not necessarily wear a brown dress with a brown coat, but one doesn't wear a blue one, unless it is combined with brown. There must be some color relationship.

Coat and gown decide the color of the shoes and shoes must trot out and fetch home the kind of stockings they like. Hats have to be congenial to all the rest of the sartorial trappings. So do gloves, handbag, do-dads that dangle round the neck, and scarves. It's fun working out the problem of the ensemble.

One has to buy clothes. Why not avoid confusion of colors and general effect?

Styles of the moment determine the style of the coiffure. An old-time hair dress takes the shine from the little Paris model that just made the trip over. There's discord. Too often that's where the ensemble takes a fall. Women aren't keen about changing the manner of the hair arrangement. They have fixed ideas. Though I will say they galloped through rather gloriously when the bob got a good running start. That was because short hair was youthful, it lopped off birthdays.

The fluttery, shoulder length bob with the tailor made and the Alpine hat will turn a pretty girl into a caricature. There is an element of comedy about such a combination. Just as there was a sour note struck when the boyish bob and a ruffled tulle frock started up partnership.

Cosmeticians are working hard for the complexions ensemble-powder, rouge, lip stick, eye shadows getting together harmoniously with facial features, skin and hair. It is a problem that has to be worked out cleverly, but, when the answer is the right one, what an elegant appearance a gal puts up!

Not much time is needed for wardrobe and make-up concord. It it a matter of developing a sense of beauty, knowing how to observe and criticize line and color knowing what should go with which, training the eye to take in the full-length figure, noting each detail. No trouble, just pleasant excitement.

Don't let clothes, make-up, millinery quarrel. Strive for unity. Then the composition will put you in the front ranks of the pulchritude pageant.

Current Attractions at Local Theatres

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE BELLE "GALLANT LADY"

Could a woman do it? Would it be possible for a mother to be daily associated with her own child and yet never reveal her true identity?

That is what Ann Harding has to do as Sally Wyndham, in "Gallant Lady" the new 20th Century picture coming to the Belle tomorrow (Thursday) and Friday.

"Yet," says Miss Harding, "If I were called upon to make such a sacrifice in real life, I'm afraid I wouldn't be big enough to do it!"

This new picture to which every fan magazine and every national screen critic, has awarded the extreme "four star" honor reveals the story of a woman who, in order to be the legal mother of her child marries the man who adopts him, without revealing to either the fact that she is really the child's mother.

"It is a problem no dramatist can solve," asserts Miss Harding, "nor do I think that any mother can solve it either! The authors of this story have offered one solution, but they make her pay for the privilege of mothering her boy by exacting the penalty of silence.

"I have a daughter, so I know what it would mean never to be able to call my child my own. Frankly, I believe the urge would be too strong for me. This is a story that every woman is going to have an opinion about, depending upon her own experience and views of motherhood. The question of whether it is fair to the child . . . whether a mother once having renounced her claim through force of circumstances, should permit the youngster to remain in ignorance of his parentage . . . it all involves a vitally dramatic problem and one which speaks the language of every women, whether she be a mother or not.

"In this story, it is the wisest, and logical choice of Sally Wyndham," concedes this brilliant young star of stage and screen, "but in my own heart of hearts, I know I could not be brave enough to pay the price that Sally pays, the price of silence."

Marie Dressler Comedy

A special extra attraction on the same program is the appearance of the screen's best loved comedienne, Marie Dressler and Polly Moran in the comedy classic "Dangerous Females." Vincent Lopez and his orchestra in a clever melodious offering. Paramount Pictorial with its intimate views of important people and events rounds out a program of exceptional screen entertainment.

Treasure Night

Thursday is "Treasure" Night at the Belle and sharp at 9 p.m. ten beautiful silver gifts will be presented free to patrons.

Two Features Tonight

An exceptional two-feature program will be presented tonight for the last times, when Herbert Marshall appears as "Raffles" in a mystifying detective story. "The Solitaire Man" featuring Elizabeth Allan, May Robson and Mary Boland. The second feature attraction

AT THE CAPITOL "FROM HEADQUARTERS"

Romance is not usually emphasized strongly in the ordinary murder mystery drama, but it plays a vital part in the latest Warner Bros. picture, "From Headquarters" which comes to the Capitol Theatre on Thursday with George Brent and Margaret Lindsay in the leading roles.

While the sordid and secret love affairs of a millionaire Broadway playboy are the motivating causes of his being murdered, romance comes in through the love of a police lieutenant for a beautiful and popular show girl whose name has been linked with that of the slain man.

George Brent as the young and intelligent police officer, has been the sweetheart of the show girl, a part played by Miss Lindsay, until she suddenly seems to grow cold to him and is seen in public places with the man afterward murdered. The murder places the lieutenant in a strained position, for the woman he loves had been in the slain man's apartment the night of the crime and is one of the suspects. Despite that fact the officer follows his line of duty and investigates every phase of the case relentlessly, and the love of the young couple is rekindled into a beautiful romance.

How the dream of love returns is unfolded in the unravelling of the mystery which surrounds not only the killing of the playboy but of an innocent person at police headquarters. The picture is realistically presented in the screen play by Robert N. Lee and Peter Milne, who were former police reporters.

Others in the cast in addition to the two leads include Eugene Pallette, Hugh Herbert, Dorothy Burgess, Thedore Newton, Hobart Cavanagh, Robert Barrat and Henry O'Neill. William Dieterle directed.

"Lone Cowboy", the story of a killer's regeneration through the love of a child, which has towheaded Jackie Cooper of "Skippy" fame as the star, is coming on Thursday to the Capitol Theatre.

It tells the story of Scooter O'Neal, played by Jackie, who is lifted suddenly from his tenement home in Chicago to the wide open spaces of Nevada.

Here he is reluctantly accepted by a hardened killer who wants "no kid hanging around."

With characteristic child-like innocence, Scooter tries to prevent a murder almost at the cost of his own life and wins himself a lifelong place in the heart of the man who has learned to love him.

Last showing tonight "It's a Boy". If you want a good laugh and real entertainment don't miss this one.

"Cross Country Cruise" lists such favorites as Lew Ayres, June Knight, Eugene Pallette and Alice White. The last complete show begins at 3.30 p.m.

St. Valentine's Day

Today is St. Valentine's Day, set aside from time immemorial as the day when Cupid's messages, with all their tender sentiment and expressions of love and friendship are sent winging to and fro from lovers all over the world. But a casual survey of downtown counters reveals today, that not all the valentines that will be sent or given locally will be of the fragile, lacy kind, dripping with precious words of endearment, carefully hidden and entwined with forget-me-nots and other painted blooms.

Arranged with more of an eye for color than harmony on the counters of local shops are the other kind—the old-fashioned ones, which are screamingly funny to all but the recipient. Old favorites there are in plenty, the same kind as those purchased twenty and more years ago by flaming youth of the city. There is a teacher with the scowling countenance and large spectacles holding forth over a shivering class room; the dentist whose instruments are exceedingly crude, and whose smile is anything but inviting. There is the butcher with thumb on the scales, weighing an insignificant pork chop and the grocery man mixing his sugar with sand There is also the road hog—a new invention for youthful minds—the porcine appearing glutton, armed with over size knife and fork and seated at a table heaped high with solid food. Next to this Valentine is a girl, that would do credit to a circus side show as the fat lady and further on another girl, whose figure resembles nothing less than an animated bean pole. Under each eye torturing figure, with bold words, a jarring verse calls attention to the alleged short comings of the helpless recipient of the "funny Valentine".

Stock Cartoon Valentine

"Yes, we stock them, and we sell he waved a hand toward the dangling comic valentines, that hung suspended from a wire. "I wish we didn't have to sell them, but when people ask for them, why we have to keep them on hand. They sell fairly good. No, not as good as the really sensible ones, but still there's some profit in them. I've been in business for a long time, and I don't see any particular change in fancy of people on St. Valentine's Day".

Another dealer pointed toward a depleted stock of the really sentimental messages on lacey paper, that local swains have been thumbing over for an inscription, that will be suitable for the only one.

"Selling lots of them," he ventured. "More perhaps this year than last year. It must be that the depression is over. The kids this year have more dimes and nickles to spend on them. And they're the ones who are buying the funny ones".

Telegraph office officials stated that this was one day, when no sentimental messages were being despatched by formula over local wires. They have no special blanks for this day, but will accept the usual written telegrams, if you wish to send them to some friend. Mother's Day, Christmas and Easter are the only occasions when special blanks are provided.

Postal employees of the local office stated, that no unusual burden of mail had been received at the office, although carriers reported just a slight increase of weight in the mail bags. "The main difficulty," stated Postmaster J. V. C. Trualsch "is that many of the valentines are of odd size, generally large size, which makes it hard to tie them up for delivery."

IF FLOWERS BLOOM CHINESE ARE LUCKY

New Years' Day of China is Observed in City

If steamy and dimly lighted laundries, and in restaurants and elsewhere, the city's Orientals are watching with dark, slumbrous eyes today the swelling buds on the Chinese lillies in their fancy bowls.

The wax-like buds of the slender flowers has a great significance for Chinese throughout the land today, for it is the Chinese New Year's, and should the blossoms open today great luck is expected to grace the establishments.

But not all Chinamen in this city will observe this ancient custom, and traditional festivals of the New Years. Those who belong to the Chinese Nationalist League, of which a great percentage of Belleville Chinese do, have adopted the western calendar and scorn the antiquated customs of Imperial China. It is only the older residents of the Chinese colonies in various cities, who have been slow to adopt the customs of the new country, who will enter into the spirit of the day.

Lack of it all, however, still clings a little sentiment of the day. A census of several laundries, and even the higher class restaurants of the city revealed, that there is no scarcity of their favorite flower. In several instances it was observed, that the carefully nurtured lillies have begun to bud with graceful curling petals....and back of many a partition many a pair of dark eyes are watching to see the bloom unfold.

PRODUCE PRICES IN MONTREAL

Egg receipts at Montreal yesterday were the heaviest in some time, totalling 2,196 cases, compared with 656 on the preceding Tuesday, and 1,614 on the corresponding day last year. Reports of stormy weather in the country tended to lessen the bearish effect of the heavier arrivals, but prices were inclined lower than on Monday, and graded shipments in carlots or l.c.l. lots were being quoted 38-40c for A-large, 37-39c for A-medium, and 36c for A-pullets.

The butter market was firm and was quoted mostly 27c to 27 1-4c per lb. for carlots or l.c.l. lots of No. 1 Quebecs. Receipts were 1,597 boxes.

The cheese market was also stronger, current make Ontarios being 10 3-4c to 11c per lb. Receipts 170 boxes. The potato market was $1.05 to $1.15 for 80-lb. bags.

NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 14 (CP)—Metal issues, International Nickel and Consolidated Smelters were volume leaders at higher prices today on the Industrial Board of the Toronto Stock Exchange. Outside of these and the distillery stocks came in for some active selling again following a strong opening.

Walkers Common scored an early recovery of 1½ points to 44¾ at which level selling was resumed and the price was forced back to 43¼ where it closed yesterday. Distillers Seagrams lost its early gain, returning to 20¼ and Industrial Alcohol at 15⅜ was unchanged.

Ford A weakened to 23 under a second-hour selling wave, off ⅜, while Nickel held a narrow gain at $23 and Smelters at 139 was up 4 points, Brazilian held a gain of ⅛.

Bears took another whack at the distillery issues today, driving Walkers Common down to 43 after it had gradually worked up to 45 in the first hour. Distillers Seagram slipped back to 19⅝ and Industrial Alcohol to 15½.

Nickel slipped from a top of $23 back to $22.50. Consolidated Smelters gained 4 to 139 and was holding half the gain this afternoon.

Ford A was active and a half point down to 23¼. Brazilian and C.P.R. were slow.

WALL STREET FINANCIAL

New York, Feb. 14 (CP)—Financial markets were somewhat on the defensive today and prices in most categories reflected mixed sentiment.

Stocks were quite spotty and bonds diffident.

Shares of Liggett & Myers B, American Tobacco B and Reynolds B dropped 1 to 3 points and most of the alcohols were down fractionally to 2. The metals slipped back after early advances. U. S. Steel, Case, American Can, Santa Fe and a number of others showed recessions of about a point each.

Minor changes occurred in Canadian dealings. International Nickel and Canadian Pacific eased a trifle but Dome and McIntyre were a little higher net. On the Curb, Lake Shore was steady while Hiram Walker got up a point. Dominion Government 4s eased 1-4 point. The Canadian dollar was 1-16 of a cent higher at 99.06 1-4 cents.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Feb. 14—(CP)—Recent reports that Washington had something up its sleeve pertaining to silver started heavy buying in the white metal shares today on the mining section of the Toronto Stock Exchange. Volume was particularly heavy in Premier, Eldorado and White Eagle.

High-priced gold shares moved slowly and price trends were irregular, Dome gained 25 cents, and Wright Hargreaves 10 cents while McIntyre was down 35 cents to 40.75 and Lake Shore 20 cents to 44.50. Teck and Hollinger were unchanged.

Buying in Premier sent the price shooting up 12 cents to 1.25. Eldorado at 3.65 was up 10 cents, Nipissing gained 5 to 2.65, Castle a fraction to 57 and White Eagle a fraction to 36.

Base Metal issues were firm to strong. Noranda gained 20 cents to 35.50.

Silverstocks showed the way in the mining section today, the whole group registered gains with volume heavy in Premier, Eldorado and White Eagle.

POLICE JOTTINGS

Just why any person would want some 40 feet of air hose is today puzzling the police department. Last evening some mischeivous maunder cut 40 feet of air hose from the free air pump at the Imperial Gasoline Station situated at the corner of Church and E. Dundas Sts. The hose is of the type that pulls out to the length desired and the entire length was taken.

Twelve transients were afforded a warm night's lodging at the police station last evening, the largest number to apply at the sergeant's desk in over a fortnight.

"Numerous complaints have been registered at the police station of late relating to motorists not observing the stop streets about the city," stated Chief Kidd this morning before police court. "Not only is this a dangerous practice, especially this weather when the streets are icy, but motorists should slow up at these stop streets so that they can stop," continued the Chief as he stated complaints had been received of motorists approaching the stop signs much too rapidly. "If the practice is not discontinued the offenders will be summonsed into police court and dealt with accordingly," added the Chief as a concluding warning.

MERCHANT ALLEGES THEFT OF FISH

But a few days after he opened a new fish market at No. 3 West Bridge St., G. H. Taylor, complained to the police department the fact that his place of business had been burglarized and 100 pounds of fish taken. Upon further investigation by the police department yesterday numerous foot prints were found in the snow near a side door where the robbers are supposed to have gained entrance. Mr. Taylor had but nicely established his business stand when practically all of his stock of fish was stolen some time Monday night.

Juniors Smother Hastings 13-4 in First Game of Playoffs for Group Section Title

Packed Too Much Speed and Clever Combination For Northerners

CHANCES MISSED

"Thirteen" proved anything but unlucky for the Belleville juniors last evening when they defeated the Hastings kids by the score of 13 to 4, on the 13th of the month, to win the first game of the local junior O.H.A. group play-offs and carry a nine goal lead to Norwood for the return game on Thursday night, with the winner meeting the fast Queen's juniors in O.H.A. group No. 1 finals next week. The sub-zero weather and tonight's intermediate play-off game diminished the number of patrons to a mere handful as but 300 fans, the majority gratis spectators, saw the locals trod rough-shod over their rivals in a one-sided game with the Thomas-coached outfit completely out-playing the Hastings kids in every department.

The feature of the pastime was the excellent combination play set up by the locals, it proving a tower of strength and difference between the teams. Practically every minute throughout the pastime the local marksmen were inside of the visitor's defence area never relinquishing their power of attack. Besides playing an excellent brand of systemized hockey at times, the locals carried the punch, that brought them the one-sided victory while their speed was far in access to that of the Hayes'-led team from Hastings. Skipper Thomas' first line of McGuire Barriage and Harvey were the chief goal getters, while the second line of Lee flanked by High and L'Heureux used a system of combination attacks, that completely bewildered their opponents "Stewie" McElrath was the fastest man on the ice and teamed well to give the locals a superior defence with Bob Greer. Bill Hammett, playing his first junior game, won his spurs while Sinfield had a comparatively easy night between the goal posts. Repeatedly the local forwards literally flew into the Hastings area to either miss the open net or bang the rubber into Tharby's pads. Had the local juniors capitalised to the fullest measure on their scoring possibilities the margin would have easily been doubled.

The Play

The visitors opened the scoring in the first few minutes but their lead was short-lived and they were never in the picture the remainder of the evening. "Doc" Hayes' charges were minus the services of their star defenceman McCoy necessitating the bulk of the defence work to be carried by L. Rogers. Godin looked the best of the Hastings forwards with Fenton, their hefty left winger playing a stellar game. Voyer and Sargeant looked the best for the alternates although the visitors were completely out-classed in every department.

At the termination of the first period the doors of the Arena were thrown open to a large number of teen age boys standing outside and exactly 67 were admitted free at that time. The summary that follows tells who scored the goals but in no way indicates the number of goals missed by the local marksmen, when in scoring position as each and every member of the team should have been entered in the scoring column, so often did they muff scoring opportunities.

The line-ups:

Belleville—Goal Sinfield; defence Greer and McElrath; centre Barriage; wings, Harvey and McGuire; subs, L'Heureux, Lee, High and Hammett.

Hastings—Goal Tharby; defence, Wrightley, L. Rogers; centre, Godin; wings Puffer, Fenton; subs Sargent, N. Rogers, Stewart and Voyer.

LONDON TECS BACK IN THE RUNNING

Defeat Cleveland Indians 3-2 in Rough, Tough Game

London, Ont., Feb. 14 (CP) — London Tecumsehs today were tied with Windsor Bulldogs in fourth place of the International Hockey League as a result of their 3-2 overtime victory here last night over Cleveland Indians.

Tecs found the tail-end Indians staunch adversaries last night. Even after they had won the match in the overtime they had to hold off a determined five-man onslaught by the visitors that threatened to tie the score again. The second period brought a vigorous fight when Cameron Proudlock, Cleveland sub, dropped his stick and tore into Tory Gregg who had cross-checked him.

MARMORA H.S. WINS ROUND

Will Meet Belleville in Second Round of C.O.S.S.A.

Marmora, Feb. 14 (Special) — Thrills aplenty were in evidence at the fourth meeting of Marmora and Tweed High School hockey teams at Tweed on Saturday evening when the result was a 3-3 tie, thereby Marmora won their first round of the C.O.S.S.A. play-offs and are entitled to meet Belleville Collegiate seniors in home and home games in the second round.

Though ten minutes overtime was played, the third successive drawn game between these teams had to be recorded. Marmora's win at Tweed in the first game gave them the final advantage. Line-ups of teams as follows:

Marmora—Goal, Callery; defence, Smith and Lummis; centre, T. Shannon; wings, O'Neill and Hewitt; subs, Gray, Loveless, Simmons, Poquet.

Referee—J. Brody, Marmora, J. Arber, Tweed.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

All season we have heard the cry from the fans—"we'll wait for the play-offs". Well, here it is right in our midst and if all fans who made the above statement are on hand this evening, the season's largest crowd will grace the arena when the Maroons and the Dohertys clash this evening. Reports from the northern part of the county inform us that a large delegation of fans from Tweed, Madoc, Stirling, Marmora and Campbellford will follow the Maroons to town. The local group finals carry a rather uncertain air as can be vouched for by the showing of the two clubs during the season's play. On opening night the Maroons downed the locals by a 2 to 1 score in Belleville while the "olimen" reversed that score when they played the return game in Campbellford on January 19 last. On the surface it looks like a toss-up with the team getting the breaks winning the series. In leaving, however, we'd like to point out the fact that the L'Heureux-coached aggregation have been scoring more goals than usual of late. Maybe it's a hunch but while the two teams are battling at the arena this evening the boxers will be holding sway at the South End A. C. and a twin bill of basketball is being staged at the B.C.I. The Queen's cagers will be the E.O.A.B.A. opponents of the two local squads.

Eddie Thomas' juniors presented him with a nice valentine last night in the matter of a nine goal lead over their Hastings rivals. The score about indicates the play as the locals were far superior, going both ways, to their northern rivals. The kids should coast home to another win during the return game at Norwood on Thursday night.

The local juniors are far from being superstitious either, they went right out on the 13th of the month and scored 13 goals. One noticeable fact or perhaps one should call it a feature, was the unselfishness of the local forwards. Their combination plays completely and continually baffled their opponents. Their shooting was slightly off last evening but if they keep passing the puck in the manner they did last evening it will take a good junior team to count them out. Had the locals scored as many as they perhaps should have under the circumstances a goal scoring record would have been established at the arena last evening. The Thomas-coached kids had fully eighty per cent. of the play or even more. How they missed the open goal mouth at times was miraculous. A little more practice in shooting and the continuation of their present combination play the locals should give the fast Queen's team a battle they'll long remember. Now if the intermediates can but garner just one half the lead enjoyed by the juniors, everything will be hotsie totsie tonight.

Now that some of the American sport fans and a few Yankee newspapers have become hockey conscious they have apparently taken it upon themselves to not only dominate Canada's national game but even went so far as to reconstruct the spelling of the pastime. A recent press dispatch from Chicago states the latest coinage of the word is to be "hocky". Apparently the sport scribes in the Windy City have little or no respect for Webster's definitions, etc. Perhaps James Sutherland, Kingston's grand old man of hockey, could set us right as to the adoption of the word "hockey". At any rate it is defined as deriving from the word "hoquet" meaning a shepherd's crook or hook. Undoubtedly the first hockey sticks used in those pioneer days of hockey did resemble a shepherd's hook or even something more primitive. If the American sport scribes had returned the name of the game to its original—shiny—they might have been justified as the rule makers have surely jumbled the rules of the game considerably of late until even the players are beginning to doubt as to authentic interpretations of the present day rules. Regardless as to what Canadians may think of the new fangled rules there is one assurity—they need no suggestions as to the game or its spelling from American authorities?

Through the old grape-vine wire, this time coming direct from Toronto, we have been given to understand that the Ulster Stadium Baseball League WILL definitely affiliate with the T.A.B.A. and subsequently the O.B.A.A. and play all their league games in the Ulster Stadium Park. The underground info' also tells us that the newly-formed Ontario Amateur Sports Federation is to be a reality and sure-fire association that may some day supplant the A.A.U. of C. in Ontario. If the newly suggested body operate as they advocate, many changes for the better may be expected in Ontario amateur circles. Incidentally the recently issued transfer of amateur baseball players throughout Ontario did not carry any local names, or should we say potential local names of possible diamond stars to appear locally next summer. Street rumor has a new third sacker in town while others better known to local baseball fans were announced last year.

Out in Tweed the followers of the winter pastime are more than proud of their league leading Tweed juniors, who now are perched on the top rung of the rejuvenated Trent Valley League. Sam Curry's charges have been going great guns all season, never having lost a game in league competition. The newly revamped Trent Valley loop adopted an age limit—all players participating must be 21 years of age or under. These kids are demanding no end of attention in the north country hockey circles as can be vouched for by the large attendance at the various league games. In Madoc one night recently, the Tweed kids were three goals down with but ten minutes to go in the final chucker, they tied the score and went on to win in overtime. Naturally the followers of hockey are proud of their Trent Valley League leaders. It was with the idea in mind of rebuilding the old Trent Valley League that the present youthful loop was formed late last fall. "May their efforts be amply rewarded".

"Busher" Hollett Stars at Left Wing for Ottawa and Team Betters Its Position

Defeat Amerks 3-2 With Hollett Scoring Two Goals

DETROIT WINS

Bruins Ahead of Rangers For Time Forced to Accept Defeat

By A. E. FULFORD
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Toronto Leafs may have been all wrong when they sent young "call me Busher" Hollett down to Ottawa to study hockey defences under George Boucher, an old star master at that sort of thing. Perhaps they should have shipped him away with directions labelled "develop as a left wing."

For the Busher, who takes over the nickname Harvey Jackson, stepped out as a forward last night and drilled two pucks past Roy Worters to give Ottawa 3-2 win over the ambitious New York Americans.

Hollett got his chance to move up to the line, when Bill Touhey reported ill and Boucher needed a left winger to work with Nick Wasnie and Carl Voss. The youngster, who believes he will step into the void Frank Clancy or Happy Day will leave some day on Leaf's line-up, promptly outshone the regular forwards.

His goals in the first period, on a pass from Voss, and another in the second with Wasnie's help, were enough to give Senators the edge and label him the most effective man on Ottawa ice last night.

Jerry Shannon scored Ottawa's other goal and Rabbit McVeigh and Deed Klein counted for the Americans. McVeigh, incidentally, furthered his claims for the Lady Byng trophy, playing effective hockey without a penalty.

Senator's win can't mean a thing to them as far as play-off chances are concerned but it spoiled an opportunity Amerks had to creep up on even terms with the idle Montreal Canadiens. None of the three National Hockey League games last night, in fact, changed the standing. Wins by New York Rangers and Detroit left them still tied for United States division leadership.

Detroit Wins

Red Wings beat Maroons 6-1 while Les Patrick's men were taking Bruins 6-4 in Boston. Maroons had figured on a win to increase their four-point margin over Canadiens but they were away below the form they have shown lately and made easy pickings for the fast-travelling Detroiters.

Red Wings took everything Maroons had in the way of attack, backchecked them to a standstill and, after scoring twice in the first period, showered in four goals in the third frame. They were as good as Maroons were bad as they scored their first league victory in Montreal since Jan. 6, 1930.

Cooney Weiland, ace centre, was the individual star of a brilliant attack, scoring two goals. Teddy Graham, Johnny Sorrell, Lloyd Gross and Ebbie Goodfellow got the others. Young Wally Kilrea scored Maroons' only counter in a first period drive.

Rangers Come Fast

Bruins were two goals up at one stage of the wide-open Boston affair but the New Yorkers outlasted them. After Murray Murdock had started the scoring in the first period and Marty Barry had tied it up, Perk Galbraith, scoring his first goal of the year, and Joe Lamb put the Bostonians well in the lead in the second.

Before the middle frame was over, however, Bill Cook and Danny Cox, recently discarded by Ottawa, brought the New Yorkers back on even terms. Miles Lane's goal gave Bruins the lead again early in the third before Frank Boucher, Bun Cook and Cecil Dillon had given Rangers all the edge they needed.

Earl Seibert, Ranger defenceman, was given a good part of the credit for the New York win. Three of his rushes ended up in goals, when he assisted Cox, Boucher and Bun Cook.

Eddie Shore and "Ace" Bailey to Shake Hands Before the Start of All-Star Benefit Game

Injured Player Will Also Face Puck to Start Game

STARS ARRIVE

Biggest Crowd to Witness Game in Toronto Will be on Hand

(By Elmer Dulmage)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

TORONTO, Feb. 14.—(CP) — Eddie Shore and Ace Bailey will clasp hands tonight in Maple Leaf Gardens as a prelude to the National Hockey League's benefit game for Ace, former Toronto Maple Leaf right winger, whose injuries received in a game at Boston last December 12th., closed his ice career.

As the group leading Leafs line-up against an All-Star cast, selected from the other eight teams, Bailey will make his first public appearance since his skull was fractured when Shore accidentally bumped him to the ice. He will face off the puck.

Probably the largest crowd that ever witnessed a hockey game in Toronto close to 14,500—will view the colorful preliminaries and a contest between star-studded outfits. Gate receipts of approximately $17,000 are to be turned over to Bailey as professional hockey's gift to the one-time sharpshooter:

Every seat in the Gardens has been sold for the unique contest and every inch of standing room will be filled shortly after the doors are opened. Gardens' officials said there was no hope that all, who wanted to see the game would gain admittance.

Morenz to Start

Most of the famous figures of present-day hockey were in Toronto for the event. Howie Morenz, regarded as one of the two greatest players of all time—the other is Fred (Cyclone) Taylor—arrived yesterday. Recovering from a leg injury, the Canadian centre player, will nevertheless be a starter.

The Leafs, not quite at full strength, will face a team of celebrated names. Morenz, his long-time partner, Little Aurel Joliat and New York's Bill Cook will make up the starting forward line. The three are in the top-flight of major league goal-scorers for the last ten years.

Behind them — Shore, dynamic Bruin defenceman and Hefty Ching Johnson. Sports writers selected them both for the Canadian Press all-star team in 1933, and in goal, Charlie Gardiner, the reigning king of the puck-stoppers.

Conacher to Be Used

The Leafs pack just about as much wallop and color into their first lineup as any All Star brigade with George Hainsworth in goal King Clancy, Red Horner, Happy Day as defencemen and the grown-up "Kids", Charlie Conacher, Harvey Jackson and Joe Primeau in front. Conacher, not completely recovered from a knee infection, is likely to play very little, however.

But Boss Lester Patrick of the All-Stars will throw nothing but Stars over the boards. His second line includes Nels Stewart of Boston, Hooley Smith and Jimmy Ward of Maroons. His third is made up of Normie Himes of Americans and Herbie Lewis and Larry Aurie of Detroit. Frank Finnigan, Ottawa veteran, will be fitted in where Coach Patrick decides he will do the most good.

Three other defenceman, Lionel Conacher, of Chicago, Red Dutton, of Americans and Allan Shields of Ottawa, will be at work besides Shore and Johnson.

THE BIG SEVEN

By The Canadian Press

Charlie Conacher's absence from the ice with injuries is bringing Frank Boucher closer to the Toronto flash who leads hockey's big seven. When Rangers beat Boston 6-4 last night Boucher got a goal and an assist to run his total to 37, three points less than Conacher. Cecil Dillon also got a goal and an assist to hold fifth place in the big seven, while "Bun" Cook joined in Ranger's scoring bee for a goal and an assist to obtain a last place tie with Aurel Joliat of Canadiens:

Standing:

	G.	A.	P.
Charles Conacher, Toronto	25	15	40
Frank Boucher, Rangers	11	26	37
Joe Primeau, Toronto	10	24	34
Harvey Jackson, Toronto	17	14	31

Black Uhlan of Prize Ring Forgotten Man of Boxing

Schmeling Decisively Defeated by Hamas in Rounds

By Edward J. Neil
Associated Press Sports Writer

Philadelphia, Feb. 14 (AP)—The Black Uhlan of the prize ring, Max Schmeling, was the forgotten man of boxing today. He has forgotten how to fight.

He started last night on his comeback trail, a former heavyweight champion of the world, and he stumbled down to the end of 12 rounds, still trying, still grinding, still brave as any man who ever pulled on leather—but beaten and torn by the gloved fists of Steve Hamas.

Hamas is the 26-year-old youngster from Passaic, N.J., who made his first athletic name half a dozen years ago as a fullback at Penn State. He came out of college, took up boxing. He once knocked out Tommy Loughran in two rounds. He has lost two decision to the former light heavyweight champion.

They would have called him cannon fodder for Schmeling in 1930 when the German won the heavyweight title from Jack Sharkey on a foul, in 1931 when he knocked out Young Bill Stribling in Cleveland in 15 rounds, in 1932 when he lost his crown back to Sharkey. Last night he was cannon fodder for a boy who would have been fortunate to have acted as his sparring partner back in the days when Schmeling was tough and hungry.

Record Crowd

A crowd of 15,000, the largest to see a fight in Philadelphia since Gene Tunney won the heavyweight title from Jack Dempsey in Sesqui-Centennial Stadium in 19[illegible] saw Schmeling hesitate, fumble, [illegible] and fail against the rugged, clean-cut youngster. That crowd paid $3[illegible]000 to see Schmeling fail as completely as he did last summer, when Max Baer knocked him out in 1[illegible] rounds in the Yankee Stadium in New York.

Hamas stabbed him with left jabs and the Schmeling who used to brush them aside and shuffle in with right hand chops to the head, strength-sapping left hooks to the body, stood and took them. Hamas slugged him with both hands, and the Schmeling who once revelled in that kind of going, stood there helpless, and blinked.

Schmeling's left eyebrow was slashed open so deeply in the ninth round that three stitches were required to close the wound today, but the courage of the Teuton from the black forest remained undimmed. He fought on through a bloody haze, trying, plugging, heaving a right hand that has lost its sting.

With the last punch of the 11th round, a right hand smash, he broke Hamas' nose and the blood from the two of them crimsoned them to the waist. Through the 12th, the final round, they fought head to head like a pair of wounded, falling moose, horns locked in a death struggle.

At the end, Schmeling, only 2[illegible], was the stronger of the two, but the decision of referee Sp[illegible] Murphy and two judges was unanimous.

Picton and Prince Edward County

By Our Own Correspondent

Picton, Feb. 14—(Special)— At the nomination meeting, held in the council chambers, in the basement of the Public Library, on Monday night, to select a councillor to fill the recent vacancy, the following received nominations and have twenty-four hours to qualify for election: Arthur Goodwin, Rolland Haddon, Lloyd Gerow, Harry Carter, Arthur Clarke, W. A. Jones, Thomas Shannon.

Since the recent heavy snow falls, roads in the county are badly blocked with snow. The mail from Trenton on Tuesday morning had to come by way of Belleville. Many are unable to get delivery in Picton, of wood that has been purchased from farmers, because of the bad roads. People from the Black Creek district have to come via Milford to reach town.

Mrs. David Harrington was able to leave Prince Edward County Hospital on Tuesday and returned to her home on Union St.

Picton people were shocked at the sudden death on Monday evening at her home, Mary St. East, of Mrs. William Keys, a well known and highly esteemed resident of the town. Mrs. Keys had been in her usual health and at nine o'clock, as she sat talking with her daughter and a friend, she suffered a sudden heart seizure, and expired before medical aid could be summoned.

Mrs. Keys was before her marriage Jennie Ferguson, and was born in the Township of South Marysburgh, a daughter of Guy Ferguson and his wife Mary A. Mouck. She had resided with her family, at her home on Mary St., for the past thirty years, and because of her friendly, kindly personality had many friends. Her husband and one daughter, Mary Keys, of the staff of the Canadian Department Store here, survive. The funeral service takes place at her late residence on Thursday afternoon at 2.30 with her pastor, Rev. David Wren of the United Church conducting the service. Pall bearers will all be neighbors of the deceased, Barton Reid, Erastus Root, H[illegible] Snider, Gerald Kinney, [illegible] Nicholas and Bert Tulley. Interment will be made in Glenwood Cemetery.

CHINESE PAY DEBTS AND START NEW YEAR

Ancient Custom Observed Throughout This Dominion

Toronto, Feb. 14 (CP)—Conservative Chinese throughout Canada today paid their debts and celebrated the dawn of another year in their calendar, for this to them was New Year's day.

From remote days in the history of their Homeland and in whatever part of the world they have been Chinese of the old school have endeavored to observe this festival and honorably to discharge their obligations in accordance with the dictates of custom.

An ancient practice permitted a creditor redress should a debtor fail to pay on New Year's Day. He was allowed to follow the debtor with a lighted lantern thereby bringing on that persons head contempt and derision of his fellows.

SMUGGLING AT MINIMUM

FORT ERIE, Ont., Feb. 14—(CP) —Old time river men queried today said there is no possibility of alien smuggling reported on the Detroit River being revived along the Niagara Frontier. The frequent deportation specials run by Uncle Sam sending back smuggled aliens to their native heaths plus vigilant check-up system now in vogue when jobs are obtained has kept smuggling at a minimum.

CHAPTER FIVE

Doug saw Charity's blush, smiled with amusement, and said, "The blushing bride".

The minute the words were out of his mouth he was sorry. Charity's face grew redder with embarrassment. She tried to to smile back at him. Doug looked out the window and told her with a show of sympathy:

"I'm sorry these last few days have been so tough on you. You can just play around out home and do as you like. I'll get out of your way this evening and you can have the place to yourself to get acquainted."

Charity felt a vast relief. She smiled a little worn smile that tried to thank him. They had ridden along in silence for several minutes when Doug touched her arm.

"There we are now," he said. "Right ahead. That's the old homestead. Dad and mother named it Templehaven."

Charity opened her eyes and saw stretched for what seemed like miles the most beautiful estate she had ever seen. Winding drives—shaded by great trees, which spread their young green leaves lovingly over all the breath-taking beauty. And beyond it all a great white Colonial house, which made her want to weep when she saw it waiting for her at the end of the road.

Doug saw her emotion and wondered at it. Charity got out of the car, the tears stinging her eyes. Inside, Doug turned to her and smiled self-consciously.

"I'll get into my evening clothes—beat it," he said. "You make yourself at home. Mrs. Muggins, the housekeeper, will look after you. I'll call her. She must be at her cottage in back."

Six days later Douglas Brookhart Temple 3d and Charity Mildred Jones were married by the City Clerk in the Municipal Building in New York City.

He disappeared. Charity sat down on a little bench in astonishment.

Could it be possible that Doug was going out on a party—on their wedding eve? Yanner Vandergriff lived over on the next estate. He was going to her! Charity tried to recover her scattered wits and face the situation calmly.

What could she do about it if Doug proposed to go right on with Yanner Vandergriff as if he were not married? Suddenly Charity found herself growing angrier than she had ever been in her life. She had been tricked.

Charity almost forgot her unhappiness for a little while in the thrill of becoming acquainted with Templehaven.

Mrs. Muggins almost collapsed with surprise when Doug Temple knocked on the door of her cottage and told her to "make my wife comfortable and see she had everything she needs." Mrs. Muggins hadn't even know the Temple heir was married.

Then, when she was confronted in the hall by a pale, quiet girl whom she recognised from a visit to the trust company one day as her late employer's secretary, the housekeeper was still more at a loss to understand the strange happenings. But Mrs. Muggins was too well trained to show any surprise. Charity was grateful.

Mrs. Muggins served a delicious dinner to Charity on the side verandah. It was a lovely warm spring evening. Doug had dressed hurriedly and driven away from his bride with a blithe wave of his hand.

Charity selected Doug's mother's boudoir as her haven. It was in ivory and blue, exactly as Mrs. Temple had left it, and so quiet and peaceful that Charity felt she could lie down on the old canopied bed and sleep her life away.

But there were too many things to explore. So for an hour after dinner Charity poked through the house, finding one room more beautiful than another. There were enough lovely old things to see to keep her busy for a week. Charity was glad. It would be pleasant diversion. And judging from her wedding eve, Doug was going to leave the job of amusing herself in her own hands.

It gave her relief in a sense to know nothing was expected of her. But she burned with humiliation as her mind dwelled on the state of affairs from another angle. How could she have been so gullible as to give Doug Temple credit for having come to his senses and been imbued with a sincere desire to carry out his father's dying wish? She felt certain he meant to go on with Yanner Vandergriff.

Fortunately Charity was so tired that she went to bed to sleep like a babe, in spite of her bitter thoughts.

It was ten o'clock the next morning when she awakened. She sat up with a shock when she saw the clock. She'd never slept so late in her life! But when she started to bound out of bed she remembered there was nothing to do—and sank back on the pillows again. Charity loved business. But she was so weary of the battle of life at the moment that she sighed and stretched luxuriously.

In a few minutes she sat up again and was surprised to see her dressing gown and slippers on a chair beside here. The things must have arrived at night and Mrs. Muggins had come in and put them beside her. Then she looked over where the door of her closet stood open and saw her wardrobe had been hung up. And she'd slept through it all!

On the dressing table were her new comb and brush, powder puff and the inevitable can of rice powder. Mrs. Muggins must have been nonplussed as to where the rest of the toilet things and clothes were. The rich Mrs. Temple travelling about unequipped in such fashion!

Charity was running her bath when a light tap came on her door. It was Mrs. Muggins. She was a sweet roly-poly white-haired little old lady and Charity had liked her instantly.

The housekeeper smiled over her glasses. "What time would you like breakfast, Mrs. Temple?"

"As soon as I bathe and dress—about five minutes," Charity jumped up. "I'm afraid I'm a little lazy this morning."

"You look rested. The long sleep was just what you needed." Mrs. Muggins handed Charity her robe. "Your husband is ready for his breakfast too. Shall I serve it on the porch again? We usually eat outdoors here in this nice weather."

"That will be fine." Charity turned her head to hide her confusion.

She'd have to eat with Doug—after that. There was no way out of it. Mrs. Muggins had taken it for granted. And she hoped Doug wouldn't think it was her idea.

Charity looked her new wardrobe over and selected a sport sweater and skirt in the inevitable blue. It would take her a long time to realise she didn't have to select things and colors because they would wear a long time. After her bath, she combed her hair straight back in the inevitable bun, slipped into the blue sport outfit and went reluctantly downstairs.

Doug was sitting in a wicker rocker with his head in his hands when Charity walked out to the porch. It was several seconds before he seemed to discover he was not alone. He looked up with a start.

"Oh—good morning."

"Good morning." Charity forced a smile. But the smile died on her face and her look became one of concern. "Are you ill? You look—pale," she began solicitously when Doug's grin stopped her.

"Just a little hangover sister. Just a little bun—that's all. Celebrating my wedding. Haven't you got a big head."

"I have not." Charity's lips set in a firm, straight line.

She was furious when Doug shouted with laughter. Then he shook his head wonderingly. "I almost believe you. You look exactly like the head matron of an orphan asylum—or an old maid schoolma'am sitting there in that outfit, with that holler-than-thou look on your face."

Charity winced. And once again a hot, unreasoning anger helped her to find her tongue. The color mounted in her face. Her voice shook when she answered: "It does not matter in the least to me what you think of my looks—or myself. Or what you say. But I'm going to tell you what I think of you, and the cheap, rotten trick you played on me."

Doug was so surprised he grasped the arms of his chair as if he were going to stand up. Then he sat back and a look half of amusement, half confusion spread over his face. Charity sat up very straight.

"I'm quite sure I know where you were last night," she went on. "And I don't care—for myself. I'm no more interested in you than you are in me. I have no desire whatsoever to be a wife to you. But, I don't see how you can marry me and start chasing around with another woman before your father's body is cold in the grave."

She stopped. Doug smiled slowly. But it was a rather sickly smile.

"So," he nodded, knowingly, "you are going to try to tell me what to do and what not to do. That's very interesting. But it won't work. I don't owe you a damn thing. You've got my father's money—and so have I. That's what we both wanted. We're even. You go your way—and I'll go mine. I don't care if you go out with every man in New York."

Charity sat searching his face a moment. Doug dropped his head before the scorn in the wide, honest gray eyes. Charity said then quietly:

"I'm not surprised that you'd say a thing like that. I'm not even going to tell you the truth about why I married you. You wouldn't understand my code. We don't speak the same language."

Just then Mrs. Muggins came out on the porch to serve breakfast. But when she left Doug and Charity alone neither of them had an appetite for the tempting morning meal.

Charity stared at the table, her breath coming hot and short after her fit of anger. She hadn't known she possessed such a temper. Doug watched her angrily through lowered brows and tried to think of the proper retort. In a little while he leaned toward her, almost threateningly.

CHAPTER SIX

"You might just as well know now as any other time," Doug said, "that I have no intention of ever living with you—as your husband. We'll stick it out together for appearances' sake, until I get this mess straightened out. Then, you take your money, I'll take mine, and we'll live happily ever after—with somebody else."

Charity got up with a cold little bow, her breakfast untouched.

"Now that we understand each other—" She left the sentence unfinished and started away.

Doug got up and threw his napkin down petulantly:

"And I don't want to live out here in this howling wilderness, either. I'm going in town to find a penthouse some place!"

It was less than a week later that Doug told Charity he had found a penthouse overlooking Central Park. Charity was sorry to leave Templehaven because it was so quiet and spring had lent it the enchantment of fairyland. But from another angle the idea of moving into town appealed to her. Doug might not spend every evening with Yanner—and go out on parties till all hours of the morning, if it weren't quite so easy to drive over to her house.

Charity had felt at home in Templehaven. When Rafferty drove her into New York and stopped in front of a tall building, panic seized her. She'd never been in a penthouse. How did one get up? She didn't even know the first thing about penthouse life.

TARZAN AT THE EARTH'S CORE

(Metropolitan Newspaper Service) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

From Dacor, brother of Dian the Beautiful, Empress of Pallucidar and Tanar son of Chak, each captain of a ship, Tarzan learned the fleet was on its way to attempt a rescue of the Emperor David from the dungeons of Korsar. It had been long in building and only recently had they found a water passage into the Korsar Az. "Soon now," said he who was named Tanar, "we shall be before the city of Korsar."

"Tell me," questioned Tanar, "how did you expect to rescue our Emperor with only a dozen men?" "We are not all here," answered the ape-man. "We are lost from our companions. But we have not many men in our expedition. We depended upon other means than man power to affect his rescue." As if in answer to his words a great cry arose from one of the ships and the men hastily rushed to the deck.

The excitement rose and spread. The warriors were all looking into the air and pointing. Already some of them were elevating the muzzles of their cannons and all were preparing their rifles. A steady, far off roar was heard which Tarzan and Jason recognized. And as they too looked skyward, they saw the O-220 far above them. The dirigible had evidently discovered the fleet and was descending toward it in a wide spiral.

"Those are our friends," cried Jason to Ja. "That is our ship that I told you about," said Tarzan to Tanar. All that happened on board was quickly signalled to the other ships until every member of the armada knew that the great thing hovering above them was no gigantic flying reptile, but a ship of the air come from the outer world on a mission of adventure and rescue of their beloved Emperor, David I. Slowly the great ship settled toward the surface of the sea. ....

BELL SUPPORTS HAVE WEAKENED

Repair to Clock Tower in City Hall Urgently Needed

Said to be weakened by the rot and decay of the many years they have been in place, the bell and clock supports of the city hall may give way at any time and send three tons of bell and metal clockworks to the floor of the first storey floor at the entrance of the city hall at any time, warned Jack Roblin, today.

For more years than the average resident of the city can recall, Jack Roblin, custodian of the clock has been mounting the ricketty steps of the city hall tower each week, carefully winding and regulating the ancient time piece. Each year the steps grow more ricketty, the stringers more shaky. In a strong wind there is even a noticeable teeter to the tower itself. But the main worries at the present time, are the weakening supports of the clock and heavy bell.

"For three years I have had a recommendation before the city council to have the whole upper tower, as well as the supports strengthened," stated Jack Roblin today. "And for three years the council have been putting it off. It won't be my fault if the whole works land up through the basement of the hall some of these days."

Bell Weighs Two Tons

The large bell, he reminds, weighs in the neighborhood of two tons. The clock weighs over two thousand pounds. Each year sees further decay in the wooden supports, with a consequent weaking of the structure.

"It would take about $500. to fix the whole thing up. That would mean the replacement of the entire supports, and include some repair work on the clock itself, which needs it," said the official custodian.

The clock, despite the many years it has been exposed to the drafts and the snow and ice of summer and winter, still retains a reputation for accuracy, that is not surpassed by the railroad time pieces in the city. Many a local clock and watch have been set since time immemorial by the dulcet tones of the booming bell.

On Monday evening, however, the bell went on strike literally and has been striking in alarming and disconcerting odd intervals since.

Rev. Dr. J. A. Seymour Fatally Injured by Street Car in Toronto

Crossing Dundas Street Near Spadina When He is Struck

SHOCK TO CITY

St. Andrew's Congregation Bowed in Sorrow Over Tragedy

Rev. Dr. J. A. Seymour, minister of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Belleville, for the past five years, was fatally injured early Wednesday evening on Dundas street, Toronto, by a street car and died at 9.55 p.m. in the Toronto General Hospital. Dr. Seymour had motored with others from Belleville to Toronto, in the morning, and had registered at the Ford Hotel and planned to attend a meeting of the Ontario Prohibition Union in Toronto.

According to the statement made by eyewitnesses to the police, for some reason the minister started suddenly from the sidewalk on Dundas street, a short distance east of Spadina Avenue. Those who saw the accident said they saw Dr. Seymour dart suddenly from the south side of the street for the opposite side. A westbound street car travelling, it is reported, at a fast rate between Huron street and Spadina Avenue, bowled him over, inflicting a fracture of the skull and severe shock. The motorman, Norman A. Wyscott, had no chance to prevent the accident, police were told. According to the witnesses the street car motorman did his utmost to bring the car to a stop. The front of the car struck the minister, a violent blow and he was thrown forward. He was taken in an unconscious state to the General Hospital.

Police Notify Belleville

From the first it was felt that his injuries were of a fatal character. Police secured identification and at once got in touch with friends of Dr. Seymour in Belleville, and Mrs. Seymour was finally advised of the serious injury to her husband. Half an hour later, about nine o'clock, Mr. Charles A. Cameron, a member of the congregation left for Toronto with Mrs. Seymour and Mrs. Kenneth Hill in the hope that the injuries would be found to be less severe. However, before they reached Toronto, Dr. Seymour had passed away.

Chief Coroner, Dr. M. M. Crawford, opened an inquest today, after which the body was released and prepared for burial. The body will be brought to Belleville on Friday. Notice as to the funeral will appear in Friday's issue.

Planned to Attend Meeting

According to a message received from the Rev. Harold B. Neal, minister of Holloway Street United Church, who had gone to Toronto with Rev. Dr. Seymour and Rev. Robert Hall of John Street Church to attend a prohibition convention they had an uneventful trip to Toronto, after leaving Belleville about ten thirty on Wednesday morning. Dr. Seymour had planned to stay at the Ford Hotel, at the corner of Bay and Dundas Streets and accordingly he was taken about two thirty o'clock to that place while Rev. Mr. Neal and Rev. Mr. Hall drove to the Y.M.C.A. Arriving there they found there was no accommodation available and Mr. Hall decided to go to stay with friends while Mr. Neal made his way back to the Ford Hotel to secure a room.

Mr. Neal did not return to the Hotel until about ten thirty o'clock and feeling that he would like to have a chat with Dr. Seymour before retiring he went up to Dr. Seymour's room and it was then that he learned of the accident. Going to police headquarters to find out where the injured minister was, Mr. Neal was informed that Dr Seymour had died about five minutes to ten. Up to that time it is understood Rev. Mr. Hall had not been advised of the fatal accident. A telephone message from Mr Charles A. Cameron this morning conveyed the information that he was returning by motor bringing Mrs. Seymour to the city and that after the opening of the inquest this morning, the body of the late Dr. Seymour would be released to be brought to Belleville by train.

Minister's Career

The late Rev. J. A. Seymour, D. S. T., was born near Morrisburg, about fifty-six years ago, and was educated in McGill University and in Yale University, where he took his degree as doctor of systematic theology. His work in Canada is closely linked up with his labors in Australia where he served the Presbyterian Church. He was minister of a church in Adelaide, Australia, for thirteen years before coming back to Canada. In Australia he occupied a prominent place in the work of the church and was mainly responsible for the work which resulted in the establishment of a theological college, on the staff of which he served for a time as professor. He was very prominent in mission work in Australia and was a valued member of the Board of Home Missions.

It is just about five years ago when he was chosen as minister of St. Andrew's. In that intervening time he won his way into the hearts of his people and was known as a brilliant, thoughtful and inspired preacher as well as a pastoral worker of great devotion.

Rev. Harold Reid, a member of the congregation of St. Andrew's who will take charge of the pastoral work for the present time, said that in Dr. Seymour the church has a man of fine gifts. "I have been associated with him for the past two years very intimately and I know the more I grew to know him the more I appreciated his character."

People Shocked

Throughout the congregation and city is a feeling of the deepest sympathy as well as of shock at the sudden passing of the minister. In St Andrew's the feeling is most keen, for the people feel they have lost an admirable minister who looked after the interests of the church and the people.

The Ministerial Association, whose ranks have been so suddenly broken by the tragedy will meet tomorrow morning to take what action the association feels it should take in regard to the funeral for their late brother minister.

TRIBUTES

Tributes of sorrow and memory were paid today by,—

W. J. Campbell, Session Clerk of St. Andrew's

"The Session, the Board of Manager's and the Congregation of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church bend their heads in sorrow today in grief over the death of their beloved pastor which no words can fittingly or adequately convey. We are benumbed at the shock of so great a tragedy in our collective and individual lives, and can only bring ourselves to say, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord."

"Dr. Seymour, in his quiet and reserved temperament, had worked himself so much into our hearts at St. Andrew's that we raise our eyes to the future only in deep-seated concern as to how we may get along without him. He was veritably a Priest and Prophet in Israel He gave of his strength, his mind, and his substance, to the maintenance of the cause of God in this community. While we shall stand with Mrs. Seymour and their son at his bier broken-hearted and stricken, we shall feel in our hearts that he has gone to the rich reward of the Master whom he loved and served so faithfully."

Rev. G. G. Wright President Ministerial Association

"In the tragic passing of Rev. Dr. Seymour the Ministerial Association of Belleville has lost one of its most valued members. His penetrating mind, and sympathetic appreciation of points of view differing from his own made his contribution to any problem before

Fat Boys for "Our Gang" Scarce and Roach Sends Out Appeal for Members

HOLLYWOOD, Feb. 15.—(CP)—Fat boys of five years, with all the qualifications necessary to becoming a member of "Our Gang", are scarce in these parts, so Hal Roach today made a general appeal.

He wants a boy of about five years who weighs about 60 pounds. But who still can run and play as other children do. He should be between 45 and 47 inches tall.

Joe Cobb, the original fat boy of the two reel-Roach Comedies, did not get too fat, but he grew too tall, so he was graduated in 1929. Since then, there have been several other fat lads, but none of them, for one reason or another, was made a permanent "gangster".

One further qualification Roach and his aides mentioned: The boy they pick must have the intelligence of one twice his age.

FASCIST HEIMWEHR BATTLE SOCIALISTS IN AUSTRIA

Replying to a Socialist uprising in which hundreds have been killed and many seriously wounded, the government of Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss ordered all its armed forces mobilized to crush the nation-wide rebellion. A detachment of Fascist Heimwehr or home guard, the military Fascist organization, which has been supporting Dollfuss, is shown lined up during a recent inspection at its barracks. While strongly anti-Socialist, the Heimwehr, in recent months, has been concentrating on anti-Nazi drives.

BEEBE DEATH INVESTIGATED

Transient's Evidence is Heard at Port Hope Probe

Port Hope, Ont., Feb. 15.—(CP)—John Pridmore of Belleville, charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of William Beebe, aged Port Hope district farmer, will appear for preliminary hearing in court here today. Beebe was found dead on a highway near here February 6.

A coroner's jury last night found the farmer met his death accidentally and decided there was insufficient evidence to enable it to determine the exact cause of his death.

The jury heard evidence of Henry McGynne of Moncton, a transient, that he had been riding in Pridmore's automobile on the night of Beebe's death and that he had felt the car strike an object on the road. He said he had walked back after Pridmore stopped but had failed to find anything the machine might have hit. Later, he added, Pridmore had a bent fender straightened, and, before he left him, asked him not to mention anything about the incident.

McGynne read subsequently of Beebe's death and gave Toronto police the license number of Pridmore's car, which he said he had noticed, while he was examining the bent fender.

London, Feb. 15 (AP)—Sir John Simon, Secretary for Foreign Affairs, indicated to the House of Commons today that Great Britain would continue to pursue its hands-off policy in connection with the present internal troubles in Austria.

"In view of the grave news from Austria of the possibility of a development that endangered the peace of Europe would he use every means in his power to secure an early meeting of the League of Nations."

Sir John replied:

"The course of the most distressing events in Austria in the past two days is being closely watched by his Majesty's government.

"The House is aware that the Austrian government, in connection with her international position, has decided to appeal to the League of Nations."

"As regards her internal situation, I am sure the House will appreciate that one country cannot claim to interfere in the internal affairs of another."

SLEIGH LOAD OF HAY UPSETS ON CITY STREET

Old Timers Recall Many Such Scenes in Early Days

Old timers and old time sights seem to be coming into their own of late in this community. It is a common sight to see about the streets an ancient winter garb, long since discarded, owing to the recent cold snap, but, it remained for an insignificant load of hay to establish an old time record these long years forgotten, late yesterday afternoon at the corner of Pinnacle and Bridge Sts. when a load of hay upset, stopping all traffic.

Like in days of yore the seemingly top heavy load of hay nonchalantly toppled over to the left as the sleigh was being drawn by a team of horses in a southerly direction, blocking traffic both ways. Police were called, interested and awed citizens stared in amazement, while the driver of the load went about to systematically right the hay onto the sleigh. Two local citizens, who well remembered the days when horses and sleighs were quite common in this community, turned in their manual efforts to render what assistance they could in re-establishing the hay to its original resting place on the sleigh. After holding up traffic and causing no end of public interest the load was finally righted and taken to the weigh scales, its original destination.

HON. STEVENS NAMED HEAD

Committee of House to Investigate Price Spreads

Ottawa, Feb. 15.—(CP)—Hon. H. H. Stevens was named chairman today of the Special House Committee on price spreads, methods of distribution, mass buying and general problems affecting Canadian industry. It may be that an assistant counsel, chosen by the Liberals, will be appointed, together with accountants. In any event, the committee must secure the permission of the House as a whole before making any appointment.

Before adjourning until Tuesday, two sub-committees were appointed, the first to study data in the Bureau of Statistics and other Government departments, the second on the procedure to be followed.

Bright Children Should Not be Urged Says Famous Cleveland Surgeon

Windsor, Ont., Feb. 15 (CP) — Very bright children are in serious danger when they are urged on in their studies and sports Essex County Medical Association members were told in an address by Dr. George Crile, internationally famous Cleveland surgeon.

"I think" he said last night, "teachers and parents should hold down such pupils. Their brains are like aeroplane engines drawing tractors."

He cited the case of a boy who was youngest in his class at a great eastern United States preparatory school. He broke school records for marks in all subjects and was on the football, baseball, swimming and debating teams.

"I first saw him as a patient when he was 16 years old," Dr. Crile said. "He had never had any difficulty studying but then was afflicted with headaches. He had exophthalmic goitre, he heart was enlarged, his kidneys affected — he was done for. The only thing that could be recommended was to give him a quiet life. But he could not be reclaimed. He was a tragedy."

CONTROL OF SALE OF BEER UNDER GOV'T

Premier Henry Assures 300 Delegates No Cause For Alarm

IS OUTSPOKEN

Says Liquor Question is Linked With The Administration

Toronto, Feb. 15—(CP)—"If something is done to extend the sale of beer and wine, it will not be done as formerly. It will be under the control of the Liquor Control Board in a very definite form," emphatically declared Premier Geo. S. Henry, today in addressing nearly 300 members of the Ontario Prohibition Union who petitioned the Premier and members of the cabinet against any change in the present Act toward wider distribution of beer and wine.

Admitting that he was unduly alarmed before the resent Act came into force in 1927, as to what the consequences might be, the Premier added further to the deputation "I recommend to you further changes, particularly in the way of distribution of beer and wine in hotels."

Premier's Candor

The Premier was most emphatic in his observation that a change would be made, and firmly, using the word "candor" expressed himself for the change. He struck back at a member of the deputation who interrupted him in his observation that the Liquor Control Act is effecting control.

"There are some here who would no agree with anything that any government could do for them," he declared warmly. "You are so unreasonable in your attitude you miss the point entirely."

In opening, the Premier replied to the three speakers, Roscoe Rodd, President, Dr. Chas. T. Scott, H. T. Foster and Mrs. W. R. Lang that while they said they were a representative body, "with all kindness and with candor as well, I must point out to you that the representations you have made here today, and you have made for years past have always been done as representing the view of the people of the province."

In Politics

He recounted how the act was brought into force by an overwhelming vote, and he insisted the liquor question could not be kept out of politics, although the deputation urged that the question be submitted to the people without being coupled in an election contest.

"The liquor question cannot be divorced from the administration in charge," he insisted. "The administration of law cannot be divorced from the government or the party in power."

Control had been effectively carried on under the act and while he respected the views of the deputation he felt they were largely founded on the feeling of alarm. "You have been listening to all kinds of suggestions from various interests. The government has no interest in any organization such as the Moderation League except throught a vote that was taken in different places in the province and sent to me. I have had no deputation from the breweries asking me to do anything."

ACTION SETTLED OUT OF COURT

After deliberating the better part of yesterday in the County Court held before His Honor Judge MacLean, the parties concerned in a damage action settled the matter amicably out of court late yesterday afternoon in favour of the plaintiff. The action arose out of differences in a heating account that arose between the estate of the late H. F. Ketcheson, plaintiff, and Robert Templeton of this city. Settlement for $450.00 and costs of the proceedings were awarded the plaintiffs. C. A. Cameron appeared for the plaintiff while R. J. E. Graham represented Mr. Templeton.

BRIGADE PRAISED FOR PROMPTNESS

Fire Chief William Lynch today was in receipt of a message of thanks from the family of Mr. Fred Smith, 10 Geddes street, for their promptness in responding to an early morning fire at that address today, and the efficiency they displayed in quenching the rebellious blaze before considerable damage had been done. "We escaped with a comparatively light loss," stated Mrs. Smith this morning, "and it is all due to the splendid co-operation of our Belleville fire department."

COLLECTIONS SHOW SMALL DECREASE

Dominion Income Tax collections for the first 10 months of the Government's fiscal year, show a decrease from the corresponding period of the previous year of $1,851,813.53, according to figures released Wednesday by the Commissioner of Income Tax, Ottawa. Returns as at January 31st last, for 1933-1934 ten-months period show total collections of $57,157,958.81 as compared with $59,009,774.14 in the like months of 1932-1933.

The Belleville district, however, shows an increase of $22,566.82 during the period reviewed. Collections here, for those months of 1933-1934 amounted to $386,779.01 while in 1932-1933 they were $364,212.19.

BRIGHT SUNLIGHT FLOODS THE CITY

Bright sunlight flooded the city and district today and brought relief to city dwellers from the zero temperatures, that have gripped the district for weeks. Overcoats were left unbuttoned, and crowds again flocked the downtown shopping district as the mercury commenced a rapid upward climb. By noon it had reached the highest point of 32 above, with the lowest mark being recorded at 19 above. Temperatures were almost the same as those recorded one year ago.

TELEPHONE LINES STRUNG TO ISLAND

Telephone lines were expected to be strung today on Zwick's Island following the installation of poles made this week. The chief difficulty encountered on the work of linking two hundred relief workers on the island by telephone with the city hall has been placing the poles in the frozen ground, hardened by frost to a depth of nearly four feet. Good progress on the work has been reported.

18 TRANSIENTS AT POLICE STATION

Eighteen transients, the largest number to be afforded a warm night's lodging at the police station thus far this month, presented themselves before the sergeant's desk last evening and slumbered under a roof away from the cold stormy blasts. No arrests were made by the police during the past 24 hours, although the department investigated a break-in, that was reported on the east hill. Nothing came out of the matter, however.

CHANGE OF NAME NOT DESIRED

The veterans of the Canadian National Railway met at a regular meeting in the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers' Hall on Pine Street last evening and passed the following motion unanimously: "That the name of Zwick's Island remain as it has been known for the past many years."

ROADS SLIPPERY TO TORONTO

Several residents of the city, who journeyed to Toronto, last evening, to attend the benefit hockey game for Ace Bailey, stated this morning, that travel on the highways was anything but pleasurable. Slippery roads and packed snow held their cars down to a minimum speed with an average of between 15 and 20 miles an hour possible. Between Port Hope and Belleville the condition of the road was said to have been particularly bad. The trip from Toronto to this city took an average of five and one half hours to complete.

WARDEN ATTENDS COMMITTEE MEETING

Warden Geo. Jordan of Hastings County was in the city today to attend the regular Finance Committee meeting at Shire Hall. He stated that travel throughout the northern section of the county was difficult by motor car owing to the high drifts and slippery condition of the road surface, particularly through the section of Marlbank in Hungerford Township, where he resides. The meeting of the committee today will be of routine nature.

HAY IS SOON SOLD ON LOCAL MARKET

Feed Going to Be Scarce Article this Spring

Two sturdy, farm-fed horses, flecked with streaks of lather from the effort of hauling their huge load of hay on the sleigh from the 2nd Concession of Tyendinaga, pulled down Front street this morning, and swung off into the Market Square, where they took the first breather of the trip. Steam arose from their panting sides as their owner, Mr. Fred Gaines, slid down from the top of the load and prepared to hunt up a buyer. It was first quality hay, stored by him since last fall, when prices were low, even if the article was not plentiful. Last year you could have bought the load at $10 a ton.

"Today it's $15", stated Mr. Gaines. "And I won't be long in selling it. You just watch and see. The farmer who has hay now is lucky."

Mr. Gaines was right. Ten minutes after the champing horses had pulled to a halt, three buyers were gathered around the sleigh.

"Sold," said Mr. Gaines after a moment or two of bickering, with one man "Where'll I deliver it.'

Hay is scarcer than it's been in years, state local produce men.

MUST PAY TAX BY MARCH 1

20 Young Men Appear For Non Payment of Poll Tax And Remanded

March the first was set as the final day of reckoning for all poll tax delinquents by His Worship Magistrate Mikel in Thursday morning's police court after twenty young men had been before His Worship and pleaded guilty to the non-payment of this city tax.

When faced with the problem of inability to pay on the part of the accused youths owing to unemployment His Worship said: "I can't revoke the poll tax as it comes under a city bylaw and must be paid; had you wanted the tax argued you should have taken it before the Court Revision."

"They're treating this too much as a joke, Your Worship," added Chief Kidd in referring to the nonchalant manner in which the delinquents appeared.

His Worship again pointed out to the twenty young men summoned the many privileges afforded them by the city, in police protection, fire protection, up-to-date streets, parks and other advantages not available in years past. "Of course there could be none of these if all taxes were not paid and fortunately none are exempt," pointed out His Worship. "Young men of the present generation think too much of a good time, playing hockey, baseball or going to movies; why, when I was a young fellow the boys had to cut the wood, draw the water and do odd chores, that would seem a hardship today, and you men complain regarding the payment of a poll tax," said His Worship when he issued a final warning, that the tax would have to be paid on March 1st, 1934, or the matter would be dealt with by a jail sentence.

Twenty delinquents in all faced the charges with three paying their tax and two others being dismissed. One youth presented a certificate from the militia, which incidentally exempts a young man from poll tax providing he is a member in good standing and attends the various drills, etc. of the militia during the current year.

COMMUNICATION WITH ISLAND IS CUT OFF

Passage of Messages, Usual Source Cannot be Continued

Their only contact with the world a small battery radio receiving set, residents of the Main Duck Islands in Lake Ontario, off the southern tip of Prince Edward County, are now marooned in a sea of ice which prohibits ever the passage of messages to and from the island to mainland. In former years when winters were normal and the swirling currents of Lake Ontario which wash the islands did not freeze, contact was possible by placing letters on a large raft which was then set adrift from the mainland to drift to the island. Owing to the ice this year this method is impossible. It is believed that no communication with the island will be possible until late spring.

DEPLETION OF WOOD YARDS IS NOTICEABLE

Severity of Winter is Held Responsible for Situation

The severity of the present winter, almost unprecedented by low temperatures and continued cold weather, and the growing popularity of wood as a fuel has created a mild wood famine in this district report dealers of the city. Several of the smaller dealers have found their yards almost depleted, owing to the abnormal sales during the past month or so, and now face difficulty in getting enough to supply their customers. This in spite of the fact, that many wood lot owners have worked steadily all winter supplying dealers.

"There's plenty of green wood to be had," pointed out Mr. R. J. Moore, dealer, "but customers don't want the green wood, they want dry hardwood, and that's scarce. The constant demand, that has existed almost since winter set in has used up nearly all the available stocks, and little seasoned wood remains," he pointed out.

SALMON, TROUT EGGS SENT TO HATCHERY

For Years Hatchery Has Been Devoted to This Branch

Although thousands of land-locked salmon, and Kamloops trout eggs will be received at the government fish hatchery of Glenora for culture, it is not expected that such new varieties will be received at local Dominion Fish Hatchery, it is stated. The local hatchery for years has been devoted to the culture of white fish and lake trout almost exclusively. Hundreds of thousands of these eggs are the main culture at present here.

Shipments of the land-locked salmon eggs which will be received at the Glenora Hatchery are being made from Vermont, U.S.A., while the Kamloops trout eggs will be sent from Quebec.

CAPT. HARPER IS MANAGER

Is Tendered Banquet at Royal York as He Leaves For Galt

Mr. W. T. A. MacFadyen, head of superintendents of Ontario Branches, Bank of Montreal, gave a dinner at the Royal York Hotel last night in honor of Captain Allan D. Harper, M.C., who has been appointed manager of the Bank of Montreal Branch at Galt. Captain Harper is taking the place of the late N. D. MacFadyen, deceased.

Captain Harper is well known in Belleville because of his long associations with the local branch of the Bank of Montreal. During the war he went overseas as an officer and was badly wounded. Returning to Canada he resumed his position in the Bank in Belleville and later was moved to Toronto to the superintendents' office. On his departure from Belleville Captain Harper was tendered a banquet by citizens.

The late Neil Donald MacFadyen of Galt, who died on January 13th, after two days' illness from septic sore throat, was at one time a manager of the Merchants' Bank at Belleville, prior to the merger with the Bank of Montreal.

MASONS HEAR FINE ADDRESS

Wor. Bro. R. D. Adams Speaks on First Aid in All Branches

At the regular meeting of Eureka Lodge, A.F. & A.M. held last evening in Masonic Hall, an interesting and illuminating address on the history of the Grand Lodge of Canada in Ontario was ably given an interested audience by Wor. Bro. Newton Thompson.

Following the address Very Wor. Bro. Richard McCrudden who has recently passed the anniversary of his 70th birthday was presented with a veteran's Jewel, suitably inscribed. Although taken by surprise, an appropriate reply was given by Very Wor. Bro. McCrudden as he accepted the gift on behalf of the lodge.

Presided over by Wor. Bro. Kenneth Edgecombe, toastmaster, the banquet was carried off to perfection, interspersed with several vocal selections by Mr. Jack Andrews and Mr. Ritchie Arnott, with Wor. Bro. Bert Houston accompanying on the piano.

Members of the lodge left the hall with a new intelligence on the proper and most approved manner of resusciation and first aid work. An interesting address on first aid was given by Wor. Bro. R. D. Adams speaker of the evening. Bro. Adams, well qualified on the subject and drawing from his experience of years of that work with the Canadian National Railways, outlined in simple language the proper methods of rendering first aid to the stricken. He gave a brief history of first aid and applied the principles of the important work in graphic manner throughout the address. Methods of restoration from drowning or by gas poisoning or electrical shock were given with the accompanying most approved methods of treatment for dangerous bleeding or cuts and wounds. The emergency treatment of fractures was also given a special chapter in the address.

He was cordially thanked for the graphic and welcome talk on behalf of the lodge by Wor. Bro. Newton Thompson.

GAS IGNITED IN BIG DRUMS

Garage Partly Destroyed And Also Part of Truck

Two blazing drums of gasoline, which ignited in some unknown manner in the back of a large truck parked in the garage owned by Mr. Fred Smith, Geddes street, at 6.30 o'clock this morning, destroyed one third of the structure before firemen could haul the blazing machine into the open, and threatened other nearby buildings and the home with the leaping flames before the fire could be extinguished. Fifty pounds of foamite, a special preparation for gas and oil fires were used in the effort. Two hydrant leads were also necessary before the burning woodwork of the garage was extinguished. Some loss was also occasioned the truck on which the blazing drums were loaded.

Firemen have set up a new record so far this week for number of alarms received. At 4.30 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, some damage was caused the contents of the St. Charles Motor Company's upholstery department on upper Front Street, when a blaze broke out. One chair was reported destroyed. At 8.30 o'clock the same evening a call for overheated pipes in the wood yard office of Mr. Harry Smith, South Church street, was answered. A previous run on Wednesday afternoon was made to a residence at 82 North Front street where stove pipes again were blamed.

WOULD-BE ROBBER VISITS 3 HOMES

Householder Out-wits Intruder When Challenged to Open Door

Carrying Place, Feb. 15—Outbluffing a would-be robber in the early hours of last Wednesday morning when he appeared at the door of his home demanding admittance, Mr. Harry McCredden of the Murray Canal neighborhood seized a revolver and frightened the man away. Mr. McCredden who lives alone in his home near the railroad close to the Canal station had been reading until very late, when about two o'clock he states that he heard steps otside his door, then a heavy knock. He called out asking who was there but received no reply. Picking up a revolver which he kept near-by, Mr. McCredden then moved to the door and without opening it asked what was wanted. A man's voice outside answered what seemed to be the words: "Open up, or I'll shoot!" "Then I'll shoot first," countered Mr. McCredden, and almost immediately the prowler was heard moving away. When in a moment or two he opened the door, no one could be seen, although the tracks were plainly visible and led along the railroad track.

Other residents of the same community report similar happenings on the same evening. Mr. Dennis Brooks and family were alarmed when the same thing happened at their home earlier in the evening. However when the door was not opened, the man went away without attempting to enter.

Mr. Reuben Ellis states that at about 8.30 in the evening he answered a knock at his door, and thinking he recognized the voice of an acquaintance, allowed the man to enter. The stranger was a thick set man of middle age and seemed rather the worse for liquor. In answer to questioning he said that he wished only to get warm and that he had come from Trenton. When he left a short time later he followed the railroad which lies only a few yards from Mr. Ellis' home.

The general idea seems to be that this man may have been some transient a little off the main line. Under the influence of liquor he might have had some idea of perpetrating a hold-up; but fortunately he seemed to lack the vicious tendencies of the average gunman. At any rate it is hoped there will be no more of these unwelcome visits.

A large steam roller used in connection with repair work on the Murray Canal and located in the workshop near the unused Smithfield bridge, as it has been called, burst at a nearly hour on Sunday morning, slightly damaging the interior of the shop and of course putting itself entirely out of commission. The boiler has not been in the best of condition for some time, canal employees state, and it is perhaps all for the best that the mishap occurred when it did, for had it happened during working hours it is probable that some serious injuries might have resulted. It was necessary to work all day on Sunday to repair as well as possible the damage, and Bill Hanthorn, who handles most of the blacksmith work needed done, with L. Green and several others were busily employed clearing away.

Mr. and Mrs. Ross Carnrite and Miss Edith Carnrite spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Wannamaker.

A rather small crowd attended the dance presented in the Parish Hall on Friday evening last, but those who did attend seemed to enjoy themselves all the more. Music for round and square dancing was presented by a four-piece orchestra of violin, piano, banjo and harmonica. Bad roads and frosty weather no doubt were responsible for the poor attendance. The dance was sponsored by Mr. Stuart Chase.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Irwin of Smithfield were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Dusenbury.

Miss Helen MacDougall is spending a few days in Belleville at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Vandervoort. Many friends of Mrs. James Doig of Belleville, formerly Miss Jennie Vandervoort, will be sorry to learn that she has been very critically ill with influenza, but at time of writing her condition is much improved.

Miss Gladys Hanthorn is enjoying an extended holiday at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Hanthorn.

Could Not Rest For Sore Back

But Dodd's Kidney Pills Soon Brought Complete Relief

Mr. Warner Says Six Boxes of Dodd's Made Him Feel Fine.

Toronto, Ont., Feb. 15 (Special)—"My back was so bad, my spine so sore I could not rest," writes Mr. C. E. Warner, of 280 Withrow Avenue, Toronto. "My head ached all the time. I was troubled with my eyes. I bought three boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills and they helped me so much I bought three more boxes, and now I feel fine."

Backache is Nature's warning of faulty kidney action. Never neglect it. If you fail to heed the sign that your kidneys are out of order you are taking great chances. Backache if not corrected, is often followed by some far more serious form of kidney trouble. Do not hesitate. At the first sign of kidney trouble, such as Backache, turn unhesitatingly to Dodd's Kidney Pills, which for half a century have been recognized as the best treatment for an aching back.

TO HAVE NEW SUB-STATION

New Highway And Bridge Make Move Necessary

Marmora—A tentative agreement has been entered into between Marmora Village Council and the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission for a new site for a sub-station for Marmora village. Owing to the construction of the new highway and bridge, it has been found to be necessary to move the sub-station from its present site, Matthews Street.

Pearce street has been selected for the new site. This street is 100 feet wide and 40 feet of its centre will furnish the foundation of the new building and create a roadway on each side. The building will resemble the Hydro station at Kellaf's Bridge, near Bannockburn, with a heavy wire fence enclosing it. A cement building will have the transformers and outside there will be a cement floor. It is expected that work will start on the sub-station as soon as the legal form can be completed and the weather moderated.

GREAT MEN

It is a tribute to a man when a holiday is kept in his memory as in the cases of Washington and Lincoln. It was natural that Washington's Birthday should be kept not only because of the outstanding character of the man but also because of the peculiar political development which is associated with his name.

Lincoln's was a somewhat different case, though Lincoln like Washington came in a crisis. Lincoln in spite of the cleavage of thought which gave rise to the Civil War and the difference of attitude of the north and south following the war and after Lincoln's death, was yet one of the outstanding personalities, one of the most lovable men of all the ages. It is the humanity of the man which has counted most, humanity triumphing over social status and political and armed barriers.

Not in every age is born a Lincoln. Though myths have long clustered about his name, the very fact that he attracts these traditions to himself is the truest sign of a transcending man.

A few weeks ago the present president of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt was the recipient of a nation's felicitations on his birthday and the celebration of that occasion was of the kind which approaches nationwide acceptance of Roosevelt as the only man of the hour. Roosevelt has personality. Will his appeal to the public continue to grow until long after he has left the earthly scene?

DEAD-STOP AT R. R. CROSSINGS FAVORED

The Province of Quebec Safety League has come out strongly in favor of standardized highway regulations throughout Canada and even over the entire continent. Lt. Col. Arthur Gaboury, Secretary General of the Quebec Leagee in a statement to the press endorses a recent address of the automobile registrar of Ontario, Mr. Bickell, and pays particular attention:

"In elaborating our standardized system of traffic regulations, it will naturally be most important to simplify, all arbitrary or conventional regulations, and reduce their number to a minimum. But we cannot do away with any of the common sense regulations. And among these common sense regulations I think that we must place the dead-stop at railway crossings, which has been made a law in the Province of Quebec. I know that there are few who will deny that the dead-stop at grade crossings is a common sense regulation. But so far I have not heard nor read a single sound argument against it.

"The dead-stop at railway crossings is merely an application of the dead-stop at boulevard intersections, which is now universally adopted. Why do we think it elementary for motorists to stop dead at boulevards? Because the traffic on these arteries is more rapid, — because it is assumed that the large boulevard traffic should have a right of way. — because, without coming to a dead-stop, it is impossible to know with certainty whether the road is clear. But do not these same reasons apply with even greater force to the railroad crossings? Is not the danger here many times greater? Is not the railway's right of way more indisputable? Is it not even more difficult in this case to find out, without coming to a dead-stop, whether the road is clear?

"I am frankly puzzled by the passionate opposition of certain motorists to this sanest of traffic regulations. And I can explain it only by the general cussedness and orneriness of human nature. In the case of boulevard intersections, there is never a word of protest. But as soon as we mention dead-stop at railway crossings, we have a storm of peevish boos. The only motive seems to be the old ingrained distrust and hostility towards large companies. Railways are large companies, and it seems the jealously guarded privilege of every rugged individual not to give in to them. I really believe that—if the railways were ordinary public thoroughfares, the dead-stop regulations at their crossings would be accepted as sensibly and as easily as the dead stop at boulevards.

"As a matter of fact, although the Quebec Law has not been in force long, our grade-crossing accidents have been reduced. But that reduction does not tell the whole story. It is evident that this reduction would be greater, if the other provinces adopted a similar law and cooperated with us in this respect. For this law is essentially habit-forming."

"We cannot of course eliminate the railways themselves nor can we—because of the expense—build the thousands of tunnels and bridges that the railway crossings would require in order to become absolutely fool-proof. But, what we can do is reduce the danger to a minimum, by training the motorist to stop so that he may be in a position to really look and listen! As long as we neglect to adopt the dead-stop regulation, we are not doing all that can be done to stop accidents at grade-crossings."

SIDELIGHTS

THE SINGLE AIM
By Aline Michaelis

How godlike is that man in whom
One purpose reigns supreme,
That man who lets no circumstance
Turn him from deed or dream!

Attained or unattained, his goal
Is still his victory,
For that high purpose which he guards
Molds him to majesty.

He is the rock about whose foot
Unheeded currents swirl,
And past whose lofty, unvexed heights
Wild winds of being whirl.

No little frets or stings of life
Can touch or stain his days,
Who goes with eyes on one great light
Whose glory floods his ways.

How godlike is that man whose heart
One splendid purpose holds,
Increasing power year by year
Within his breast unfolds!

"LOVE LETTERS OF HENRY VIII," is the title of a volume just published in London. Anne Boleyn is the recipient and the world's great lover pours forth his heart to Anne in poetry and prose, exposing a love that will not die—it was Anne who had to die, lost her head, in fact, because of a lover.

"CRYING ABE," one of the most picturesque of crooks, died recently in Sing Sing prison at the age of forty-nine, from a heart attack, while serving the fourth year of a life sentence under the Baumes law, which makes lifers out of oft convicted criminals, regardless of the latest offence. Abraham Fishbein, "Crying Abe," was a master pickpocket, and when caught did a masterly job of crying and telling a tale of woe sufficient to melt the hardest heart under a blue coat and brass buttons, or the sedate judge on the bench. He was arrested twenty-five times and served eleven sentences in various prisons between New York and San Francisco. As has been said Abe was a master pickpocket and gloried in it. He was a pants worker and scorned the easier dips into coats and vests. He even worked at his art in the winter when overcoats and wraps made trouser pockets almost inaccessible. Prior to his last conviction he visited police headquarters and turning on the tears in the pickpocket division told John Law that he was through, going straight, no more crime for him. Three hours later he was arrested for working the crowd on an elevated railway platform. He took a purse from the father of a policeman, a victim of several years previous, who recognized him and had him pinched. Relying on his visit to police headquarters where he had convinced them that he was going straight Crying Abe became a little careless — result arrest, conviction, and life sentence.

"EXOTIC POMP MARKS BEAUX-ARTS BALL," read a headline over a five-column report in a New York newspaper of one of Gotham's most spectacular social events of the season held recently in the grand ballroom suite of the Waldorf-Astoria. Three thousand were in attendance representative of society and the artistic world. Called an Oriental phantasy the theme found inspiration in the Middle Ages with Marco Polo the guiding spirit of the occasion. This motif gave wide scope for decorations and costumes of which the smart set took full advantage. Light, color, beauty and laughter filled the evening—but a few blocks away in this same bright and merry Manhattan there was another scene, in violent contrast, a long line of ragged, shivering human derelicts —the bread line. Waiting in the cold for their turn to get a loaf of bread—if they were too far down the line the supply might be exhausted before it came their turn. What a puzzling panorama of laughter and tears this old world is, and who will devise a system which will relieve the rich man of his gout and the poor man of his poverty?

LOST, STRAYED OR STOLEN, Loch Ness has lost its mystery monster, to the great loss of business by the innkeepers of that part of Scotland. But why should tourists go to Loch Ness to see a sea monster when they can stay in London and by looking through enough glasses see pink elephants, or even prehistoric monsters like those recreated and shown at the Chicago World's Fair. A monster sea serpent has been sighted in the Caribbean sea and this may be the wanderer from Loch Ness, which or who, disgusted at the lack of emotion engendered by its presence in Scotland, decided to electrify some other sections of the globe where people had more emotional natures.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL
"FROM HEADQUARTERS" AND JACKIE COOPER

One of the strangest and most baffling of murder mysteries will be presented on the screen of the Capitol Theatre today when the Warner Bros. picture "From Headquarters," is shown. In fact it is a double murder case for a second killing, presumably to cover up the first crime, takes place in police headquarters itself.

The startling disclosures that come about through the police investigation include a blackmail plot and secret love affairs of a millionaire Broadway playboy. Two methods of investigation are followed, one the modern scientific way of unearthing criminals as practiced by George Brent in the leading role, and the other the blundering system followed by the old school police who rely on the third degree to wring confessions from their victims. The later method is followed by Eugene Pallette.

There is a romance entangled in the plot under the strange circumstances of Brent, as the police officer, investigating the girl he loves, a part played by Margaret Lindsay, who is supposed to have been the enamorata of the murdered man and is suspected of his murder.

Besides containing an unusual number of thrills and surprises, the picture gives a panoramic view of the inner workings of a police department in search for criminals, with all the scientific apparatus now used in the detection of crime. The screen play is realistic and authentic, having been written by two former police reporters.

Appears on the Same Program

Jackie Cooper is the star of a brand new kind of "Western" picture "Lone Cowboy," suggested by Will James' famous book, which is now showing at the Capitol Theatre.

It's a story, written and directed by Paul Sloane, of a wide-eyed, eager kid from the tenements of Chicago, who wanders over the wild, expansive plains of Nevada with a cold-eyed killer.

In addition to Jackie, the Paramount picture has a supporting cast headed by Lila Lee, Addison Richards, John Wray and Gavin Gordon. The screen play was written by Agnes Brand Leahy and Bobby Vernon.

Jackie Cooper plays the role of Scooter O'Neal, a Chicago kid who has always dreamed of living in the Wild West, among the cowboys, Indians and broncos of storybooks. His dream is fulfilled, but the boy arrives under the most inauspicious circumstances, and his thrilling adventures with the hardened killer, bring the picture to an exciting conclusion.

Matinee daily at 2.30. Last complete show 8.40. Always satisfying entertainment at the Caltol.

AT THE BELLE
"GALLANT LADY"

"Gallant Lady" the 20th Century Picture starring Ann Harding which opens at the Belle Theatre today, presents one of the most poignantly dramatic and appealing stories which has come to the screen this season.

Noted for her understanding portrayal of feminine character, in this picture this capable star has a unique opportunity to exercise to the fullest her ability to rise to emotional heights.

The story deals with a young woman, mother of a child, who is forced to assign the child for adoption immediately after its birth, agreeing never to see it again.

As the years pass she becomes a phenomenally successful business woman and at the height of her fame accidently meets again the child whom she had counted lost to her.

The story brings her to the point where she is forced to choose between being reunited with her child under the penalty of remaining silent, regarding her true identity, and playing fair with the man she loves and running the risk of wrecking the boy's future.

The play is climaxed in a tensely dramatic scene which gives full play to Miss Harding's histrionic capabilities and 20th Century Pictures have surrounded Miss Harding with an exceptionally able supporting cast. This array of talent includes such names as Clive Brook, who achieved such notable success in "Cavalcade," Otto Kruger, famed Broadway star, who scored recently at the Belle in "The Conquering Sex", Tullio Carminati who scored so remarkably in "Music in the Air" as a result of which he was called to Hollywood to make the present film, and Janet Beecher, who is making her screen debut in this film.

Marie Dressler Comedy

The screen's best loved comedy pair, Marie Dressler and Polly Moran are appearing on the same program in the uproarious comedy classic "Dangerous Females," a clever Vaudefilm and Paramount Pictorial with its intimate views of interesting people and events complete an excellent screen program.

"Treasure" Gifts

Tonight is "Treasure" night at the Belle, and sharp at 9 p.m. ten beautiful gifts will be given away to patrons.

U. S. CIVIL WORKS HAS GONE "BROKE"

Washington, Feb. 14 (AP)—The United States Civil Works Administration is broke, and unless Congress does something about it the 4,000,000 workers may not get their pay envelopes Saturday.

The Senate and House of Representatives are deadlocked over details of the bill that would provide the payroll money—and more. It is the $950,000,000 CWA-Relief Bill.

Two things may happen if the bill is not enacted quickly: 1. The 4,000,000 CWA employees may spend the weekend without their pay. 2. They may find themselves out of jobs, technically at least.

There is a third alternative, though CWA officials decline to discuss it. The CWA may try to borrow money from some other government fund to meet the payroll.

The chief hope of the CWA, however, is that Senate and House may work out an agreement which will speed passage of the bill before Saturday.

GLAND ACTION AFFECTED BY MANY THINGS

When Adrenal Glands Overworked The Blood Pressure is Low

At the last annual meeting of the clinical congress of the American College of Surgeons, Dr. Geo. W. Crile of Cleveland laid great stress upon the importance of the Tyroid as well as of the Adrenal glands, remarking that the former is a kind of "power house" for the body while the latter is the "power control."

This assertion, of course, was the deduction he and his co-workers had made from actual scientific laboratory investigations coupled with observations on patients.

Dr. Crile went on to say that the stress, strain and speed of modern times drives the adrenals too hard and that these, in turn, influence the thyroid to overactivity, the result being that more power is supplied to the body than it really needs, or eventually can endure, without damage to itself.

The thyroid is the gland situated in front of the neck at its base. When enlarged it is called a 'goitre.' The thyroid secretes a most powerful chemical substance known as "thyroxin." This is not poured into the blood or lymph streams by means of a special canal—as is the case with the majority of glands in the body—but the lymph, as it passes through the tissues of the gland, takes up the thyroxin.

Too much thyroxin means overstimulation. Such overstimulation produces nervousness, a highly keyed-up state of the emotions and the like. When it is excessive it even affects the eyes, being then called "exophthalmic goitre."

Strange as it may seem, however, it does not follow of necessity that the thyroid gland is oversecreting simply because it is enlarged. The enlargement may be due solely to an increase of the connective tissue framework supporting the delicate gland substance. On the other hand a thyroid may not be preceptibly enlarged, and yet be over-secreting, because even a comparatively slight increase of the gland substance may produce marked nerve manifestations.

The adrenal glands are two in number. Each one is embedded in fat and is situated on the top of a kidney. Roughly speaking, an adrenal is about the size of the tip of a little finger but it is a most powerful gland.

The adrenal glands secrete "adrenalin." This, as in the case of thyroxin, is taken up by the lymph stream as it passed through the gland structure. When the adrenals have been over-worked, so to speak, blood pressure is low.

What influences the thyroid and adrenal glands is the mind. Worry, for instance, can produce overactivity of the glands. Too much ambition, too strenuous a life even if it be one of pleasure-seeking, overindulgence of any kind — all have a bad influence on the glands.

The cure for gland disturbances is twofold. First the cause for gland overstimulation must be removed from the thinking processes. Mental analysis and common sense hygiene are indicated. Secondly, glands may be administered by mouth in tablet or capsule form—these being taken from sheep or hogs—in an attempt to feed the body and nervous system the glands needed, thus allowing the individual's own glands to rest and rehabilitate themselves. In marked cases of gland disturbance operative interference may be desirable.

DR. BISCH'S DAILY DIET HINT

Liver juice is nutritious and may be given for anemia. To prepare this liver is scraped and seared slightly in a pan. This process should take even less than a minute. The seared liver is then placed inside several folds of gauze, or thin porous linen, and squeezed. This should be served cold and in not too large amounts to prevent dislike. Extract of liver can also be obtained in powder form which some patients prefer to the juice.

SUN LIFE CO. IS IMPOSING 1933 RECORD

Notable Achievements of Company in Adverse Years

Behind the imposing figures which mark the annual reports of our great life insurance companies lie significant facts which may escape the notice of the casual reader. None of our great institutions are more cosmopolitan in character than those concerned with insuring people's lives. Their business extends to a wide class of people. It is broadly based, the great majority of insured being those of limited income and of widely diversified occupations. A large part of the premiums which they pay goes back promptly into investments equally diversified, both occupationally and territorially, and serves to stimulate business and provide employment. One cannot conceive of a curtailment of the functions of these companies that would not profoundly and adversely affect the whole social structure.

A good illustration of this is revealed in the sixty-third report of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada printed on another page. Here is an organization that, last year, paid out $100,000,000 in benefits of various kinds to its policyholders and their dependents. Thousands received such payments last year from this Company, neither as doles nor charity but as a right. Other life insurance companies made similar payments in varying degree. In these times when the most burning question of the day is how to preserve our economic equilibrium, often accomplished only by giving from those who have to those who have not, the fact just cited is a luminous example of how these insurance companies have anticipated the belated efforts of the state and have provided a systematic, safe and scientific way whereby a man may provide, at little unconvenience, during his productive period, and without forfeiting his self-respect, for the lean years ahead.

There are often features in the report well worthy of note, among them the huge sum of two and three-quarter billions of dollars of assurances now in force and which will be payable to the insured in this generation. The increase in assets of over $55,000,000 and of insurances in force of over $300,000,000 during the last four trying years, is another notable achievement. The foundations of our great life insurance companies, plainly, have been laid so soundly and securely that they are impervious even to the strain of a depression, which not all institutions have been able to withstand.

AUSTRIAN NAZIS CAUSE OF PERILOUS SITUATION IN EUROPE

All the armed forces of Austria have been mobilized to crush a nation-wide Socialist uprising. The mobilization order came after the calling of a general strike by Socialist leaders and a clash at Linz in which at least 16 persons were killed in a battle between police, troops and Socialists. Artillery pieces are reported to have opened fire on the fighting Socialists, who have barricaded themselves in a stronghold on the edge of the Danube. The above view was made recently in Linz as the members of the National Socialist party (Austrian Nazis) gathered for a rally.

John Street Church Help Entertain at Luncheon

Mrs. Douglas Bews Delivers Striking Address on World Conditions

One hundred and fifty guests attended a Valentine luncheon given in the Church hall by John Street Church Help Society and heard with absorbed interest a searching address on world conditions and a plan for their betterment, given by Mrs. Douglas Bews. The long tables were charmingly arranegd with lovely Valentine favours and a delicious menu was served. Mrs. G. Ferguson, the President introduced Mrs. Bews to the audience.

The advancement of man's power over his environment said the speaker, the gradual way in which time and space and working conditions are coming under his control have demonstrated particularly in recent years the fact that ability to organize human relationships has failed to keep pace with this control over physical environment.

Mrs. Bews quoted the words of Professor C. E. Joad of London, who said "Man is a lop-sided creature whose scientific cleverness is far ahead of his social wisdom and political capacity." To escape destruction to which this very lop-sidedness may lead one must study the very definite laws that govern social relationships. Seeking some integrating principle which will enable one to co-ordinate and build one finds that it is necessary to live together as brothers and to recognize the doctrine of a divine purpose in the universe, the separate existence of the soul.

It is to the first apostle of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man to whom all must turn and Mrs. Bews directed her hearers to Christ's teaching of the supreme worth of personality and the value of the individual in God's sight. Here is the integrating principle for this day and its chaos, a principle which can give intellectual and spiritual satisfaction; which can be applied to individual and social ills.

If one really believes that every one is of supreme importance to God and that God wishes all to have a full and abundant life how can one support an industrial system which denies the great mass of industrial workers the time, money and energy to develop the God-given personality; how can one countenance social standards based on certain people being more important or desirable; educational systems only for the wealthy; a penal system which seems to have no idea of developing or re-shaping warped personalities, or international policies that maintain one nation to be enjoying God's particular attention?

"Jesus came to tell us the good news that we as individuals are of supreme worth to God but He also said we must tell the good news to all the world. I think it most impractical to speak the good news with our lips but with our hands withhold the very means of its realization", said Mrs Bews.

The task of Christian women should be to work for the abolition of all conditions which stunt or destroy human personality, poverty, disease, undernourishment, poor housing; to support a public policy which seeks to extend educational facilities to all; to align with all forces to fight militarism in all its aspects for militarism takes no account of the individual nor of personality.

To accept the doctrine of Jesus Christ we must live as though we believed it and act upon it.

Mrs. Robert Hall expressed the appreciation of the audience for the enlightening address.

Ann Harding and Clive Brook in "Gallant Lady" now at the Belle.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

WHEN will the local hockey players learn that games cannot be won in the penalty box? Uncalled for penalties, especially in the last period, surely cost the locals last night's hockey game.

Perhaps the least said about the two goals that drifted by Rube Buskard in the first period the better. No person in the arena felt worse than Rube did and he more than made up for his mistakes in the last two frames with sensational saves, while some of his teammates were resting up in the penalty box.

Not trying to detract from the superb efforts of Don Morien, the Maroons' stellar goalkeeper, it has to be said, that the local sharpshooters surely gave him a busy evening. Morien stopped fully three times as many shots as did Buskard. Inability to score when in position again cost the Dolterys another hockey game. After all is said and done those two Ingram boys are a tough pair of defencemen to pass and the only times the locals bulged the twine was after they had shot the puck past them and then staged a ganging act around the Maroon net. It worked twice, why not capitalize on the plays, that prove the most prolific?

It must be remembered, that the locals usually play their best hockey on the road so perhaps Friday night's result may see the final score on the round reversed. The going proved quite heavy last night with both clubs checking back like fiends. It was a case of experience blanketing speed. Roy Covert was the only local to play up to standard, although Carl Morgan went well, when the locals were shorthanded at times. "Pete" occasionally turned on his speed-skating act but always ended in a corner without much damage being the result. Weir looked better last night.

The locals are not a beaten team yet. They have not tasted defeat in the Hydro Town for two seasons now, so let's hope that history repeats on Friday night. There apparently was altogether too much smoking in the Arena last night as one could scarcely see from one end of the building to the other during the last period. A blanket of smoke seemed to hang over the ice.

Coach Hugo Otopalik of Iowa State, who trains wrestlers, has a sign painted in the gymnasium—on the ceiling. It displays the following words: "If you can read this you're a flop—keep on fighting."

With nine big goals tucked away in the bag Eddie Thomas' Juniors journey to Norwood tonight where they meet the Hastings kids in what should be the final game of the local Junior O. H. A. group. Skipper Thomas tried to sign Don Ridley before the first Hastings game but the local junior puckster refused to join the ranks of the local junior O. H. A. ranks as it would injure his Central League standing. Apparently this North Hastings Central loop does not want to help junior hockey along as they have apparently turned thumbs down on Junior O. H. A. material. When organized the Central League boasted a similar rating as the intermediate O. H. A. so why the discrimination regarding potential junior players? By Ridley turning out with the local juniors he would be afforded some little extra practice as well as being able to participate in more hockey games. On the surface it looks as though the Central loop has isolated itself and placed a restriction on its players to bar them from participation in other hockey organizations.

The Toronto Maple Leafs proved to the hockey world their superiority last evening, when they handed the pick of the N. H. L. a 7 to 3 drubbing before one of the largest hockey gatherings ever to witness a game in Canada. Hockey fans from all over the Dominion were present to pay homage to a great little puckster, Irvin "Ace" Bailey, in whose honor the game was staged. Nearly 15,000 fans jammed their way into the Maple Leaf Gardens to witness the spectacle.

Last evening proved most drastic for local sport clubs as the Deacon A. C. basketball team were counted out of further competition when they faded badly in the last half of an E.O.A.B.A. fixture to be eliminated by the Queen's Juniors by a 11 to 10 score. Lack of condition is accredited the locals' downfall. Although they were themselves out of the running Ralph Morden's "Y" Intermediates pushed the Queen's Intermediates out of the picture by defeating them 31 to 18 in a twin bill at the Collegiate. All that's left now is interscholastic basketball.

DEACON A. C. ELIMINATED

Queen's Staged Last Half Rally to Nose Out Junior Cagers

Fading badly in the last half the Deacon A.C. junior cagers were eliminated by the Queen's juniors basketball team by the score of 11 to 10 last evening, while the local "Y" intermediates eliminated the Queen's intermediates when they defeated the "students" 31 to 18 in a twin bill of E.O.A.B.A. basketball played at the local Collegiate before a large following of patrons last evening.

Leading the Queen's juniors at half time the local juniors showed sadly the lack of condition when they literally wilted before the powerful attack laid down by the visitors. Facing certain elimination in defeat, however, the local kids staged a last minute rally, that all but brought them victory. Lack of finish around the basket spoiled all chances of the local kids in tying up the group.

The junior line-up:—

Deacon A. C. — Martin 2, A. Faulkner 5, Cole 2, Ostrom 1, Countryman, Tobe, MacFarlane, Cowain and Henry.

DR. SEYMOUR DIES OF INJURY

the Association one of outstanding value.

"I had the privilege of sitting with him on the committee to arrange for the Week of Prayer in January last. The commendable spirit in which that effort was carried to so helpful a conclusion was due in no small measure to his advice and suggestion.

"In his passing St. Andrew's Church loses an eloquent preacher and devoted pastor, and the Ministry of Belleville a true servant of God whose soul was so filled with the great realities as to leave no room for pettiness or suspicion."

George O. Tice, Mayor and Member of St. Andrew's Congregation

"This morning I was stunned when acquainted with news of the death of the pastor of my church. I was out of the city last evening and did not return to Belleville till an early hour this morning. With deepest personal grief, the knowledge came to me of the sudden and tragic passing of the Rev. Dr. J. A. Seymour, who had been mine and my family's minister since he had assumed the pastorate of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church.

"An accomplished and travelled gentleman, a man of temperate thought and wide vision, as well as one who had a congenial humanitarian outlook on life, an understanding teacher of Christ's doctrines, an eloquent and forceful preacher, and an administrator of noteworthy ability, the late Dr. Seymour filled the ministry of our church with a zeal and capability that will live in the memory of the members of his congregation, that will endure until they too are called to join the hosts in the great beyond. Not alone did he endear himself to members of his own church, but his lovable Christian character and charitable disposition made him known and beloved by those of other denominations.

"Belleville has, in his removal, lost all too soon, a worthy and upright citizen.

"In tendering the sympathy of my fellow-citizens of Belleville, of all creeds and sects, and from all walks of this community's activities, to those so suddenly called on to bear the grief of the passing on of their loved one, I beg also to add most sincerely, that of Mrs. Tice and myself in our loss of a lovable, personal friend and the loss of our honored and beloved pastor."

Universal Grief

Messages of condolence and sympathy poured in today from sister congregations in Belleville and from all parts of the province as the kirk session of St. Andrew's Church, and the board of managers gathered in sorrow, Mr. W. J. Campbell, clerk of the session presiding. Plans for funeral and burial are not determined until the return from Toronto of Mrs. Seymour some time late this afternoon. The session and the managers may meet again at eight o'clock tonight, in the church to make what arrangements fall to their duty, the funeral itself being under the direction of the Presbytery of Kingston of which Rev. S. M. Scott of Picton, is moderator.

At this morning's meeting it was tacitly understood that the church will probably be closed on Sunday and all next week in mourning. Rev. Harold Reid of this city, who has been closely associated with Dr. Seymour during the past two years will look after the pastoral work, temporarily, at the invitation of the session.

The deepest sympathy is expressed on all sides for the widow and son, Stanley Seymour, student in medicine at McGill University, Montreal.

NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

TORONTO STOCKS

TORONTO, Feb. 15.—(CP)— An upward trend prevailed in the first two hours of today's session on the Toronto Exchange Industrial section. All interlisted issues moved ahead in sympathy with a rising phase on the New York Board, Nickel, Ford A and the Distillery issues especially revealing buoyancy.

International Nickel at 23.25 was up 30 cents and Smelters gained 1-2 to 138. Ford and Brazilian added 1-4 each and C.P.R. 3-8. Walker's common was the board leader for volume and the price moved up to 45 5-8 for a gain of 1 3-8. Distillers Seagrams gained 1-4 to 21 and Industrial Alcohol was unchanged at 16 1-4.

Distillery Stocks provided the feature in the early part of today's session, the group moving up on active trading. Walker's common touched 48, up nearly four points but receded about a point from the top. Distillers and Industrial Alcohol gained 1-2 to a full point each.

Interlisted leaders all firmed, encouraged by the rally on the New York Board. International Nickel advanced to $23.50 for a gain of 55 cents and Smelters was up 1-2.

WALL STREET FINANCIAL

New York, Feb. 15 (AP)— The stock market again put a foot forward today but, with the feeling that eyes of the United States government were still upon it, discretion continued to be the watchword.

With the exception of the Aircrafts, which further reflected the airmail controversy, most groups advanced fractionally to around 2 points. Bonds moved up moderately.

New highs for the past year or more were reached by shares of Montgomery Ward, American Can and some others with advances of a point or more. The rails regained popularity with Santa Fe, N.Y. Central, Southern Pacific and Union Pacific getting up 1 to 2.

Some modest advances were recorded among Canadian stocks. International Nickel and Canadian Pacific gained fractionally. Dome and McIntyre were steady. On the Curb Lake Shore met light offerings but Hiram Walker got up more than a point. Dominion Government 4s were steady. The Canadian dollar was unchanged at 99.12 1-2 cents.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Feb. 15 (CP) — Silver stocks showed the main action again today in the mining section of the Toronto Stock Exchange and gains were boarded throughout the group. Some of the secondary gold issues met with some profit-taking, losing a little ground while senior gold issues were quiet and mainly unchanged.

Premier, White Eagle, Pend Oreille and Eldorado were the volume leaders in the silvers. Premier advanced 12 cents to 1.40, White Eagle a cent to 39, Pen Oreille 8 to 1.16 and Eldorado was unchanged at 3.85.

Base metal issues were up, Noranda 50 cents to 35.75, Base Metals Corporation 2 to 1.80, Hudson Bay 10 to 10.10, Falconbridge 5 to 5.30, Sherritt 6 to 1.19, Sudbury Basin 9 to 1.59 and Waite-Amulet 5 to 1.40.

Profit-taking in the secondary gold group on the recent rise was evident but the senior gold shares firmed in the early afternoon, aided by continuance of the rally on the New York Board. Dome, Lake Shore and McIntyre registered gains up to 50 cents.

Silver stocks opened the day strong with substantial gains in Premier, Castle, Bear Exploration and Pend Oreille while Nipissing, Mining Corporation and Eldorado were steady but profit-taking gave the group an unsteady appearance in the third hour.

Livestock

Toronto, Feb. 15 (CP)—Receipts on the Toronto Livestock market this morning were 90 cattle, 30 calves, 30 hogs, 610 sheep and lambs. The small supply of cattle sold steady at $4.75 to $5.75 for handyweight butcher cattle and at $5.00 to $6.50 for medium to good fed calves.

The calf division was steady at $6.00 to $10.00 cwt. according to quality. No hog market was established in early trading. Western lambs composed the bulk of the supply. No lamb sales were made and no sheep were offered.

One Goal Lead is Secured by Maroons of Campbellford Over Dohertys for Group Title

Score 3-2 With Two of Counters Being of Soft Variety

MANY PENALTIES

Two Locals in Penalty Box When Winning Goal Scored

"One down and one to go."

That's how the Belleville D. A. C. stand when capitalizing to the fullest measure on the misplays of the local intermediates, the Campbellford Maroons took home a one goal lead for Friday night's return game when they downed the Belleville D.A.C. intermediates by a 3 to 2 score in the first final play-off game in the local O.H.A. group before 1,200 fans at the Belleville Arena last evening.

After scoring two of the softest goals of the season in the initial frame Maroons capably protected their advantage until the locals again presented them with a last-minute opportunity, to count the winning goal, by committing unnecessary infractions of the rules and leaving their team mates short-handed only to have "Buster" Whitton put the visitors "on easy street" with a sure-fire goal, when he carried F. Ingram's pass right into the local goal to score. The first two goals scored by the Maroons were undoubtedly the easiest counters ever earned in the local group, both dribbling past Buskard on long shots from outside the local blue line.

Inability to locate the net when in scoring position also eliminated all chances of the locals in winning as they continually missed the open net or banged the rubber directly into Morton's waiting pads. Roy Covert was the only local to play up to standard, while Carl Morgan followed in line. Alex Weir looked the best of the rear-guard with Ethier and Rigby playing spotty hockey. Jimmie McGuire was the best of the alternates, while Harry Morgan over-shadowed his efforts with absolutely too many trips to the penalty box.

Don Morton, Maroon net custodian, was undoubtedly the star of the game as he stood alone between Belleville and victory with his many miraculous saves, when the locals applied the pressure. The Ingram brothers, Fred and Harry carried the bulk of the Maroon's play with Whitton and Hendy looking the best of the forwards. H. Ingram's crashing of Alex Weir into the boards was most uncalled for and suitably dealt with by Referee Thompson, who handled a hard game well. The ice was fast and in excellent condition for hockey.

THE PLAY

Hostilities opened fast with both teams purely on the offensive and play ranged the length of the Arena. Five minutes after the puck was faced Hendy eased up to the Belleville blue line and hoisted a long dribbler, that bounced over Buskard's stick to open the scoring. The visitors were carrying the play to some extent but neither team could get into scoring position until Davis broke through and waltzed in on Buskard to have the local goalie rise to the occasion. On a solo effort to the local blue line Harry Ingram lifted a long shot, that sifted through Buskard's pads and put the Maroons two up. The period ended with Belleville rushing and assuming the offensive but Morton stood superbly between them and the scoring sheet.

The locals opened the middle period purely on the offensive and carried the play well into the Maroon's territory and were rewarded for their efforts, when Alex Weir banged home a loose puck after Covert and Pete Morgan had individually tested Morton without results. The locals were all over the visitors this frame but were continually thwarted in scoring attempts by the superb work of Morton. Harry Ingram drew a three minute penalty for unnecessarily crashing Alex Weir into the boards and the frame ended with Morton starring in the Maroons' nets, while the locals peppered him with rubber without bulging the twine.

The visitors opened the final chucker purely on the defensive only to have Covert rifle Weir's rebound past Morton for the equaliser from close in. The Dohertys then assumed the offensive but continual penalties slowed activities considerably. The Ingram brothers combined to the local goal mouth only to have Buskard save. Harry Morgan and Bush tangled, drawing a minor penalty each. Subsequent penalties to Ethier and Harry Morgan left the locals short-handed and Whitton put the game on ice, when he scored on a combination play with Fred Ingram, Buskard, Whitton and the puck all winding up in the local net. From then on the winners were purely on the defensive, protecting their one goal advantage for the return game. Last period penalties proved costly to the local cause.

The line-ups:

Campbellford—goal, Morton; defence Harry Ingram and Fred Ingram; centre Whitton; wings, Bush and Hendy; subs, Davis, McWilliams, Shannon and McArthur.

Belleville—Goal, Buskard; defence Rigby and Ethier; centre, Covert; wings, Pete Morgan, Carl Morgan; subs, Connors, Harry Morgan, Weir and McGuire.

Referee—C. E. Thompson.

Benefit Game for "Ace" Bailey Grosses More Than $20,000

Eddie Shore Shakes Bailey's Hand And Crowd Approves Heartily

By ELMER DULMAGE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Toronto, Feb. 15—(CP)—Boisterously, magnificently and for good cause, professional hockey's first benefit game had been born to the sport today with every attending device of ballyhoo and what-not. It had served its immediate purpose by grossing $20,909 for a star player, who will never play again—Ace Bailey.

More than 14,000 persons paid that amount last night to see Toronto Maple Leafs, National Hockey League, champions, defeat an all-star team chosen from the other eight teams in the circuit by 7-3. One of the largest hockey crowds ever assembled here, this gathering was confronted with most of the great figures of the sport—Morenz, Bill Cook, Shore, Joliat, Gardiner, Stewart, Clancy, Johnson, the Conachers.

It witnessed the most colorful show hockey has yet staged. Perhaps, because of the circumstances, hockey will never produce another benefit or all-star game quite as emotionally successfully or as showily staged. That is because Ace Bailey himself was there. And Eddie Shore was there. And they shook hands and grinned at each other—or rather the Ace grinned.

Eddie Shore Nervous

White-faced and visibly nervous in the all-star dressing room before the game, Shore skated into a rousing, spontaneous welcome with Bailey. Doubtful about the reception he would receive, the big Bruin defenceman whose accidental charge into Bailey last December critically injured the Toronto player met a Toronto audience that fairly shrieked forgiveness.

"Come on Eddie" it encouraged every time Shore started a rush. It was a happy, thrilled crowd that nothing could have perturbed. Even when a shot of Happy Day's in the second period struck the goalpost and bounded back—and was called a goal—the multitudes merely laughed heartily. They had come to see the Ace and Eddie and the all-stars, and goals scarcely counted at all.

In the pre-game festivities, during which the players were presented with medals by Leo Dandurand, managing director of Montreal Canadiens and with wind-breakers by Col. Harry McGee, a Toronto club official, there were cheers for Bailey and as many for Shore: cheers even for Nels Stewart, Ching Johnson and Lionel Conacher, who, like the better "villains" of wrestling, have been roundly jeered in the past.

The benefit is likely to become an annual affair with an all-star team being chosen to play in alternate years, the leading team of either division. Conny Smythe, Maple Leaf managing director, has presented the Ace Bailey Trophy with that object in view.

The Plymouth Six . . . Canada's Lowest-Priced Car with Individual Wheel Springing.

YOU'VE HAD a chance to see two of the three leading low-priced cars. Now see the only lowest-priced car with Individual Wheel Springing—PLUS the three other features that are vital to real car value today!

Plymouth is Canada's lowest-priced car with Individual Front Wheel Springing. This feature is on all models—even the lowest-priced.

And note this: Plymouth's individual springing is the strongest and simplest type known. It's the same kind as that used on much higher-priced cars!

There are no bumps when you ride in Plymouth. No jolts—no jounces—no back-seat bucking. You get an even ride over the roughest road.

And you pay no price penalty to get it! Some models are $60 lower (F. O. B.) than any other car with this feature.

ALL-WEATHER VENTILATION on De Luxe Models. The whole window can be dropped. The windshield raises by turning a crank.

INDIVIDUAL SPRINGING. This simple, rugged device enables each wheel to take its own bumps. It smooths out the rough roads.

A Complete Ride Story

But Plymouth gives you more than one feature to insure smooth, easy riding. Every Plymouth has patented Floating Power engine mountings to put an end to engine vibration.

These mountings are much more than just pieces of rubber under the engine. They suspend the motor in balance—letting it absorb its own vibration.

You can rest and relax—because with both Floating Power and Individual Springing, Plymouth gives you the smoothest ride in the lowest-price field.

Give a Thought to SAFETY

Everyone wants protection—so look at Plymouth's brakes—and Plymouth's safety-steel body.

You're safer in a Plymouth—because you ride with steel under you and around you. Plymouth bodies are built of steel reinforced with steel—then welded into one permanent piece.

That means real protection. It means no joints to rot, pull loose or squeak. It means longer life with less need for "service" because of body troubles.

And the brakes. They're all-hydraulic. No bolts, rods, cotter pins. Sure, smooth, equal action on all four wheels—because hydraulic brakes are self-equalizing.

Biggest in Size—More Power

Naturally you want the biggest car for your money. Plymouth is that—for the De Luxe Plymouth has 114-inch wheelbase.

But the important thing is—Plymouth is the only low-priced car that gives you all of these important features. In fact—no other lowest-priced car offers you more than one of them.

Go into all these points at your first opportunity. Prove that Plymouth is the best engineered car in the lowest-price field. Take a ride in it today!

EIGHT EXAMPLES OF QUALITY YOU WON'T FIND IN OTHER LOWEST-PRICED CARS

1. Rigid-X Box Section frame. Much stronger and more rigid than conventional types. Really one frame within another. It makes the whole car more solid.
2. T-Slot Pistons. A sure mark of engineering care. They mean a better fit between piston and cylinder, with better compression.
3. Four Rings per Piston. The usual number is three. By providing an extra ring, Plymouth maintains a better compression seal and prevents power loss.
4. Engine Oil Filter. Better lubrication—and longer life from your lubricant.
5. All-Quiet Transmission. Plymouth is quiet in low, second, high and reverse. Gears shift easily without clashing. Particularly appreciated by women drivers.
6. Four Main Crankshaft Bearings. Instead of the usual three, Plymouth supports the crankshaft on four over-size bearings. It means smoother operation.
7. Independent Hand Brake. Really an extra braking system, operating independently of the regular foot brakes. Not merely a parking brake; an extra safety feature in case of extreme emergencies.
8. Thirty Frictionless Bearings. Ball and roller bearings in a car are like jewels in a watch. Plymouth has more than 30—more than you will find in any other lowest-priced car. Sure proof of quality.

IT'S THE BEST ENGINEERED CAR IN THE LOWEST-PRICE FIELD!

HOLD FATHER-SON SERVICES

Rev. G. W. River Delivers Sermon at Trinity Church

MADOC—The annual Father and Son services were celebrated in Trinity United Church on Sunday, Feb. 11th, the Reverend G. W. Rivers conducting. In the morning Mr. Rivers selected as his subject, "Fathers and Sons" and took as his text the 12th verse of the 3rd chapter of Proverbs: "For when the Lord loveth He correcteth even as a father the son in whom he delighteth." The sermon was very instructive and inspiring. Mr. Ernest Bedford sang "My Task" and Mr. C. I. Ross, "In the Garden". A men's choir comprising fathers and sons rendered appropriate music.

In the evening the pastor chose for the subject, "Wanted—a Man" using as a text the 5th verse of the 1st chapter of Jeremiah, "Seek, if ye can find a man". A perfect man should be truthful, pure, hate evil, have freedom to think, live to serve and grow better every day taking as a model, Christ. The men's choir sang two anthems, first "Come Ye that loveth the Lord", with Mr. Horace Reddick taking the baritone solo, and "Homeward Bound" with Mr. C. I. Ross singing the tenor solo.

The regular meeting of the Silver Links Mission Band of Cooper was held on Saturday February 10th at the home of Miss Jean Andrews. The roll was called and was well responded to by a memory verse, "A friend loveth at all times.

The Scripture lesson was read by Phyllis Parks from Mark 2: 1-12. A Bible story, "The Four Friends", was given by Doris Fox. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved and some business discussed. It was decided to start a poster on a window shade made up of clippings on products Canada shares with China and one of products China shares with Canada. A reading "A Valentine Carol" was given by Fern Rollins. An exercise was given by some small boys and girls. This was followed by the song "I Would be True". A reading by the leader, Mrs. A. Bird, entitled "New Dreams for Old", was very much appreciated. A talk and a radio broadcast on China by Mrs. A. Wyatt entertained the members.

The meeting was closed with a hymn "I am so Glad" and a prayer by Doris Fox. A dainty lunch was then served by the hostess. The March meeting will be held at the home of Miss Alice Diamond.

Trinity Y.P.S.

The Young People's Society of Trinity United Church met on Monday evening, February 12th, with the Vice-President, Mrs. Wesley Hulin in charge. Mrs. Hulin led in prayer. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

The missionary program was in charge of Mrs. Hulin due to the absence of Miss Eileen Kelly, the missionary convener. The Scripture lesson was read by Mrs. F. Phillips. Bryden Lowery led in prayer. This was followed by a guitar selection by Mr. Percy Phillips and daughter, Betty with an encore both of which were very much enjoyed. The topic "Would Christ Draw the Colour Line?" was given by Miss Violet Sargent. A delightful piano solo was rendered by Mrs. Leslie Broad.

A very interesting address was given by Rev. G. W. Rivers on "His Work Among the Indians". This was his first charge and he ministered to three congregations of white people and two of Indians. He had some very humorous experiences to relate as well as some pathetic stories. The Mizpah Benediction closed the meeting.

GENERAL STRIKE BY SOCIALISTS STARTS CIVIL WAR IN AUSTRIA

Protesting the setting up of a Fascist state by Chancellor Dollfuss, Austrian Socialists ordered a general strike which has resulted in civil war and bloodshed. Hundreds have been killed and thousands injured in the clashes between the three parties, the Fascist Heimwehr, the Austrian Nazis and the Socialists. Artillery and machine guns have been employed by the Heimwehr in repulsing attacks and driving out Socialists. Martial law has been declared by Dollfuss and soldiers are instructed to shoot to kill any person found bearing arms. Above is shown a recent Socialist protest demonstration in Vienna. Note the youthfulness of the members in the parade. Meanwhile, both England and France have issued unofficial ultimatums to Germany to keep her hands off Austria.

Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada

THE report of the Company for 1933 is one of consistent and constructive progress. Its achievements enhance the impressive record of public service it has rendered during the sixty-three years of its existence.

In 1933, as in the preceding three years, people generally experienced exceptional anxiety, the result of incomes being either impaired or entirely cut off. At such a time the unfailing aid and security of life insurance proved of very great value.

In this service the Sun Life Company bore a worthy share. During the year it paid out (exclusive of policy loans) nearly $100,000,000 to policyholders and beneficiaries. Similarly, during the four years of depression it has paid out over $380,000,000.

Notwithstanding these substantial payments, the Company, during the same four-year period, increased its assets by $55,000,000—its insurances in force by over $307,000,000.

Sixty-third Annual Report—1933

penthouse love

BY
alma sioux scarberry

Rafferty saved the day. She waited for him to take her bags and followed. Inside she discovered it was an apartment hotel. The chauffeur spoke to the uniformed attendant who had opened the door for them.

"Mrs. Temple would like to go up to her apartment." The attendant touched his cap stiffly.

"The private elevator in the rear to your left, madame."

Rafferty handed a bellboy the bags and disappeared. The elevator took Charity to the top floor and the boy opened the door into what seemed like a huge hall.

A door swung open immediately and a butler impeccable in livery and wooden in face, bowed to Charity. "I am Walker, madame."

Charity didn't know exactly what to say or do. As she hesitated a maid appeared and, inclining her head, said, "I am Sylvia, madame. Mr. Temple says I am to serve you."

"Thank you," Charity gulped. It came to her with sickening realization that she knew nothing about servants. Not even how to make use of them.

"Shall I lead the way for madame?" Sylvia asked helpfully.

"Yes, do," Charity managed, then, "to my room first, please."

Sylvia, a tall blonde Swedish girl, was disappointed. She had seen Doug Temple several times in the two days since he had taken the penthouse and hired her along with it. And she had expected to serve a beautiful lady with a wardrobe of clothes, which would give her something to brag about. But it was evident from the blue suit and blue turban worn by Mrs. Temple upon her arrival that serving her would be no such gay adventure.

The maid led Charity through another hall, a small one off the large hall, and into a large room.

"This, madame," she informed Charity with a wide smile and only the slightest trace of an accent, "is the sitting room that goes with your suite."

Charity looked about in bewilderment. "How charming," she said then, noting that it was in walnut with blue satiny upholstery and blue drapes at the windows. In the corner was a grand piano.

Sylvia then led her through the living room and into a boudoir in blue and gold. It was stunningly beautiful. Off the bedroom was a large bathroom with sunken tub. Charity thought to herself that it was almost long enough to swim a few strokes in. But the crowning surprise came when Sylvia walked across the boudoir where a long row of windows opened to the floor and threw one of them open.

"Madame has a beautiful view from her balcony."

Charity gasped. For there, like a landscape painting, was Central Park—and beyond the fascinatingly tall buildings that make of New York's skyline a never to be forgotten picture.

So that was what people meant when they said "penthouse"! It meant living on top of the world—with New York City at your feet. Then Charity surveyed the balcony. She began to walk and discovered she could go all around the roof. It was like a garden. Potted trees blooming plants, flowers beginning to trail over trellises. Sylvia followed Charity silently. Suddenly Charity stopped short and looked troubled.

"How many other apartments are there up here?" she asked.

"None, madame." Sylvia looked puzzled.

"Other tenants use the—roof—of course?" Charity asked, with a little flush of confusion.

"Oh, no, madame," Sylvia assured her, inwardly surprised that Mrs. Temple did not know her penthouses better than that. "This is your own private roof. No one else from the hotel is allowed up here."

Charity felt vastly relieved. "How many rooms have we?"

Sylvia studied a moment.

"Three in your suite, madame—a bedroom, living room, gymnasium and bath in your husband's suite. Ballroom, living room, billiard room —" she was silent a moment counting. "Eighteen, nineteen— —about twenty, madame."

When they went back into the boudoir Sylvia began efficiently to unpack Charity's bags. "Would madame like one of her gowns pressed before dinner?"

Charity jumped. She had bought only two evening gowns. And it would of course be necessary to dress every night for dinner. She flushed suddenly, embarrassed.

"I only have two evening gowns with me. I'll wear the light blue one. Yes, press it please."

Sylvia hung the clothes in one of the closets. When she came to the toilet articles she picked them up in absolute unbelief. A comb, a brush, a powder puff, a toothbrush, and a can of rice powder! That couldn't be all! So she asked puzzled, "Has madame, perhaps, forgot her creams and toilet things?"

Charity choked and walked over to the balcony to hide her confusion. "I—I'm out of all sorts of things. I must go shopping tomorrow."

It was Sylvia's turn to be confused. Her large angular face reddened. She was afraid she had been rude. But madame had been most kind about it.

Charity was in her bath when Sylvia came back with the dress. The maid tapped on the door. "Madame, Mr. Temple is waiting for you in the library. Dinner is served at eight. It is now seven-forty-five."

"Thank you," Charity called, her heart beating quickly. "Tell Mr. Temple I'll be in very shortly."

Charity finished her dressing in a fever of excitement. She hoped and prayed Doug would not be home for dinner. They hadn't dined together since their marriage. She had scarcely spoken a dozen words to him since their quarrel. Mrs. Muggins had conveyed all the necessary messages—shocked no end that the young Temples had broken up, apparently on their honeymoon.

Doug was reading an evening paper in the library when Charity forced her shaking limbs to carry her through the door. She was trembling inside, too, but she greeted him with no outward show of turmoil:

"Good evening."

Doug glanced up casually, nodded and went back to his paper. Charity felt like picking up something and throwing it at him. Why was it he could make her so angry. She had never known what it was to be thoroughly angered in her life until the first day she met him—in Simmons' office. In a little while Doug put his paper aside.

"I thought we'd better dine together tonight," he said. "For appearances' sake. Servants talk, you know."

"I thought that might be it," Charity's lip curled ever so slightly. "But does it really matter what one's servants think of me? I'd much rather do or not do certain things because I respect myself."

"Preaching again " Doug asked, smiling. "Why don't you get a little blue bonnet and a tambourine and go in for the brotherly love stuff in the right way—on a street corner."

"Charity begins at home," Charity smiled back too sweetly, and picked up a magazine. The dinner gong saved Doug from having to think up an answer.

"So," he nodded knowingly, "you're going to try to tell me what to do and what not to do. You go your way—and I'll go mine. I don't care if you go out with every man in New York."

They sat at a long candled table and ate in silence. Charity was so frightened her appetite entirely left her, with all the formality There were dishes she'd never heard of before—much less seen. Doug did not seem to notice when she took a big helping of sauce that should have gone on her asparagus, thinking it was some kind of mashed vegetable.

Over her demi-tasse Charity sighed with relief. Thank Heaven, that was over. But her relief wasn't for long, for suddenly Walker appeared in the dining room door to say formally:

"Pardon, sir, there is a Miss Vandergriff here with a party of friends——"

Doug started. But he said calmly enough, "Make them comfortable and tell them we'll be with them in a moment."

Charity seemed struck dumb. Doug looked across at her helplessly. I didn't know anything about this. You must believe me. But we've got to see it through. Act as if everything were all right?"

Charity saw no reason why she should do him a favor. But she got up slowly.

CHAPTER SEVEN

At the living-room door Doug took Charity's arm and sent a pleading look into her white set face, saying. "We've got to see this through. Buck up!"

Charity roused all her courage. They stepped into the doorway and in a second were surrounded by a laughing, cheering mob. Charity heard through the pounding of her heart:

"Here comes the bride, here comes the bride.
Here comes the bride, with the GLOOM by her side.'

A slip of a blonde girl was sitting at the piano singing in a high falsetto. Soon every one but Doug and Charity had joined in. Bedlam broke loose when the song was over. The girl at the piano ran to Charity and threw her arms around her neck.

"So this is the bride! I'm Yanner Vandergriff, darlin'—an old friend of Doug's. Kiss the bride, boys! It's bad luck if you don't!"

Charity, in a daze, felt herself being surrounded by men. She stood like an automaton while they kissed her—some on the lips, others on the cheek. There must have been at least twenty in the party. When Charity recovered sufficiently, she saw that Doug was receiving the same reception from the girls.

When the bedlam was quieted a little, Charity realized that she was sitting on a couch with Doug beside her. He had slipped his arm through hers and pasted a foolish smile on his face.

"Here, here," he begged, "give the poor bride a chance to get her breath. And the groom, too—if you don't mind. Whew!"

Yanner threw herself down beside Charity with a sweet little smile.

"My dear,—we just had to give you a housewarming. It wouldn't be sociable not to."

"It was great of you boys and girls to drop in," Doug said enthusiastically. "How about a little drink?"

That was the signal for a cheer. Doug summoned Walker. As they seemed to be entirely interested in giving their orders for refreshments. Charity had a little time to get a grip on her senses. So far she hadn't spoken a word.

Yanner Vandergriff, a petite vision in a long white trailing evening gown, which gave her the look of a doll on her bridal day, still sat beside Charity. No one missed the contrast. Charity in her unbecoming blue evening gown—the wrong color for her white skin—looked like an old maid school teacher with her child pupil.

Yanner's hair was bobbed close to her head and hung in tiny ringlets about her tanned face. Her eyes were blue as stars. Charity had kept her long, thick hair waved back from her face since her marriage and it aged her years.

Charity, as her wits began to function, looked over the crowd. One girl seemed lovelier and more sophisticatedly attractive than another. Their gowns were revelations to Charity, who had never been interested in her wardrobe—and had never worn an evening gown until her marriage. The men were of all ages. But none of them was as handsome as Doug.

TARZAN AT THE EARTH'S CORE

(Metropolitan Newspaper Service) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

H-94

Gridley taking one of the warrior's spears tied Lajo's head-cloth to it and signalled the dirigible. "O-220 ahoy! This is the war fleet of Pellucidar's Emperor, commanded by Ja of Aronoc. Lord Greystoke, ten Waziri and Jason Gridley aboard." A moment later a gun boomed from the rear turret of the O-220, the first international salute that ever echoed under the eternal sun of the inner world. When its significance was explained to Ja, he returned the salute.

Now the dirigible dropped within speaking distance of the flagship. At Tarzan's suggestion a sling was lowered. The ape-man and Jason, Thoar and Jana and the Waziri were hoisted aboard. Before leaving, Tarzan requested Ja to proceed toward Korsar. The dirigible would keep in touch with the fleet, meanwhile perfecting plans for the rescue of the Emperor from the enemy dungeons. It was a happy reunion for the men of the expedition, marred only by the absence of their still missing first lieutenant.

Thoar and Jana were filled with boundless amazement at the giant dirigible. Being the only woman aboard, Jana was accorded all the formalities of civilization. After presenting the Captain to her, Tarzan, turning to the man of Zoram said: "And this is Thoar, the brother of The Red Flower." As Gridley heard that, he almost lost his composure. "Her BROTHER!" They had all known it. Why had he been so stupid as not to have understood! Suddenly the whole inner world looked brighter to him. Jana might not love him, but Thoar was not her mate.

Slowly above the waters of the Korsar Az moved the O-220, dropping occasionally within speaking distance of the fleet. When the distant city of Korsar was sighted, a sling was again lowered and Ja hoisted aboard. Rescue plans were discussed. He was returned to his ship and then Lajo, the Korsar with his two companions were brought up. Tarzan himself purposely conducted the three prisoners through the giant craft and as things were explained to him, Lajo was filled with awe and consternation.

Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Williams were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Young of Foxboro.

The St. Andrew's Guild held their annual Valentine party and social evening on Monday evening and what a jolly time was had. The Guild president, Mrs. H. Disbrowe acted as leader and the opening number was the singing of a number of humorous love songs from the screen in keeping with the Valentine spirit. A trio, "My Valentine" by little Miss Mary Tulloch, Jean Dafoe and Shirley Ormiston was given accompanied at the piano by Miss Jean Moffatt. Miss Phyllis Mitchell gave a talk on "Why we keep Valentine Day" which was followed by the male quartette composed of Messrs. Ernest Cain, William Dermody, George Tulloch and Rev. J. A. Koffend rendering "Massa's in The Cold, Cold Ground" with a patter chorus. So heartily were they encored that they were called back to do a character song with action, "The Animal Fair". Mrs. H. Disbrowe gave a most entertaining and humorous reading, "Castor Oil". The next number was a two part song given by Misses Mary Tulloch, Iva Chambers, Jean Dafoe, Shirley Ormiston, Marguerite Rosebush, Helen Ward and Ines Elgie, entitled "I'm Saint Valentine".

The play presented by some of the youthful members of the Guild was the next feature. The title of the play was "When the Wrong Valentine Went Right", and the cast was composed of Lenora Ward (Mary), Harold Baker (Bob, Mary's brother), Marguerite Rosebush (Mrs. Carey), Shirley Ormiston (Betty Millan), Don McIntosh (Little Rastus), Jimmie Ward (Mike, the coal driver). The play taught a lesson showing that the real Valentine thought should be for our true friends, and not our false ones who may perhaps be a more potent factor in the community.

A programme of games was then conducted under the supervision of Miss J. Moffat. Following a dainty lunch, the gathering dispersed.

In the illness of Rev. E. W. Rowland, pastor, Mr. Morgan Rowland, very capably assumed charge of the morning services at St. Paul's Church.

The evening services were very special in that they were in charge of the Young People's Society. President Harry Hulin supervised the devotions and two splendid speakers were heard. Mr. Fred Joblin took for his discourse "We Are Able" based on the text, the 22nd verse of Chapter 20 of St. Matthew. Mr. Harry Lovebond the second speaker, gave an interesting treatise of the book written by Rev. Stanley Russel of Deer Park Church, Toronto, entitled "The Church in the Modern World". Tracing briefly the early history of the church, he showed how although early Roman forms, vestments and ceremonies had fallen into disuse, on the other hand the faith had not fallen into oblivion but had been perpetuated throughout the ages. The value of the church to the world in general and to the man, was dealt with as was the fact that no stress was laid on one particular creed or dogma. The young people's choir rendered a number of anthems.

RIOTERS MOWED DOWN IN STREETS BY AUSTRIAN MACHINE GUNS

Scenes such as this are once again being enacted in Vienna and other cities in Austria, as the general strike, now in progress, actually becomes a revolt against the Dollfuss regime. The Socialists called the strike as a gesture of defiance against Dollfuss, and outside of the capital the strikers have had their way. In the capital Dollfuss is rallying his loyal forces to defend the capital. More than 500 are reported killed by the fighting in all parts of the country. The ABOVE scene, from a recent disorder, shows the home guards defending a public building with machine guns.

OPEN VERDICT RETURNED IN DEATH OF D. GUNTER

Contradictory Evidence is Offered at Trenton Inquest

Trenton, Feb. 15—(Special)—"We the jury, empanelled to inquire into the death of Dorwin Samuel Gunter, find, that the said Dorwin Samuel Gunter came to his death at the Belleville General Hospital at Belleville on the fifth day of February, A.D. 1934 as the result of injuries received on the twenty-sixth day of January A.D. 1934 on Stanley Street in the Town of Trenton in the County of Hastings, when a sleigh upon which he was riding came in contact with a freight car forming part of a north bound mixed Canadian National Railway train."

This was the open verdict returned last evening at the inquest to enquire into the death of D. Samuel Gunter before Coroner Dr. E. A. McQuade. The coroner's jury comprised Ernest Allison, foreman, Wm. House, A. A. Farrar, Edward Weir, A. Blakely, J. Grainger, J. Hennessey and Wm. Hutton. Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C. of Belleville conducted the investigation.

Dr. J. A. Faulkner of Belleville was the first witness called. He described the condition of Gunter on his arrival at the Belleville Hospital and explained the cause of death.

Constable Gordon Huffman produced a sketch of the scene of the accident which he made after his investigation.

Mrs. Rose Patrick, who lives near the scene of the accident was then called.

Saw Horses Balk

She testified that she saw the sleigh with the two men on it going south on the east side of the track. She saw the horses balk and start backing up as the train passed, blocking her view.

The crown attorney asked if a bell was sounding or if the whistle blew or steam blowing off and Mrs. Patrick answered in the negative. She went to the scene of the accident and stated that the injured men were taken into Mr. Labelle's residence nearby. The crown asked the witness if she noticed a ditch near the scene. Mrs. Patrick explained its route from the switch up along the track and then across the roadway. This was put there for drainage purposes from the switch.

George Gunter, sixteen year old son of the deceased was called. He told of riding on the rear of the sleigh with Fox and his father on the front. The sleigh was loaded with wood that he and his father had cut. When the sleigh turned on Stanley St. the boy got off and walked but he couldn't say why he did so. Mr. Donnan told him, that it was lucky that he did. He said the team were young but not balky.

Says He Heard No Whistle

He heard no whistle or bell and said the train was approaching at a good rate. He said the sleigh runners slid into the ditch beside the tracks as the train passed and the third car struck the sleigh. The lad did not notice the horses run away but only ran to his father, who was rolling near the track, at this point the lad broke down and cried. Crown Attorney Donnan halted proceedings for awhile and the boy continued. There were no pieces of wood on his father but he said he may have been struck by some Thornton C. Wilson, engineer, said the accident occurred at 4.25 p.m. This track had been used for twenty-two years as he remembered. He noticed the team about 100 or 150 feet away and was proceeding north at about 10 m.p.h. The road was icy and it was quite cold. He watched the team till it passed the locomotive cab window about four feet from the train. He heard the crash and applied the brake stopping in about twenty-five feet. He rushed from the cab to a nearby house and phoned the police to summon aid. He saw the victims lying on the road and later taken to the Labelle home. He said the bell had been ringing since he left the downtown station until he stopped the train.

Geo. L. Johnston of Trenton, conductor on the train said he noticed nothing unusual until the train stopped. He got off and walked up the train on the opposite side to the accident and saw the victims apparently badly hurt. The team had gone.

Ernest Fox, nephew of the deceased produced a signed statement from the dead man but Crown Attorney Donnan said it had no bearing at the inquest.

The jury then left and returned a few moments later with their verdict.

Hockey Statistics

The local Intermediates are finished. They played ten league games, six in the schedule and two each with Cobourg and Belleville in the play-offs.

Norm Johnson, centre player, led the scorers with six goals and two assists with Frank Bohan and Roy Smith getting the same number of points. From the points gathered it can be plainly seen that the locals lacked the scoring punch needed for a successful team.

Joe Gould minded the net for nine games with thirty goals being scored against him and Ken Chambers, one game with three against. The team scored twenty-four goals for the season.

Hockey Team Banquetted

After Monday night's Trenton-Belleville hockey match, Manager George LaBrash invited the team, Coach Benny Bowen and President Harry Smith of the Trenton Hockey Club to his home for a real feed. And what a feed it turned out to be. The tables had been daintily arranged in advance by Mrs. LaBrash.

After the gang arrived the food swiftly disappeared.

Harry Smith proposed a toast to Mr. LaBrash and the boys all joined in singing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

George replied ably telling the boys how he had appreciated the playing of every player and hoped they would be together for another year. He had thoroughly enjoyed managing the team and was proud of their showing.

Harry Smith moved a vote of thanks to Mrs. LaBrash and the ladies who so kindly assisted to making the evening a success. Coach Benny Bowen was asked to say a few words but replied that he had said enough to the boys all season.

Mrs. George Rosenplot Mrs. Joe Gould, Mrs. Norman Johnson and Mrs. Jas. F. Day served the boys to perfection. At midnight the guests departed leaving a long trail of dishes and a hand shake for Mr. and Mrs. LaBrash for their generosity and lovely evening.

Called French Strike

Leon Jouhaux of France, secretary general of the Socialist Confederation, who directed the twenty-four-hour nation-wide general strike in the republic. According to a statement issued by him, Jouhaux claims that the strike "assumes an importance never before attained". The movement was a consequence of last week's riots.

Pile Sufferers

Can You Answer These Questions?

Do you know why external remedies do not give quick and permanent relief?

Why cutting does not remove the cause?

Do you know the cause of Piles is internal?

That there is congestion of blood in the lower bowel — the veins flabby, the parts almost dead?

Do you know that there is a harmless internal remedy for itching, bleeding or protruding piles discovered by Dr. Leonhardt and known as HEM-ROID that is guaranteed?

HEM-ROID banishes piles by removing the cause. It stimulates the circulation in the lower bowel — drives out the thick impure blood, heals and restores the affected parts.

Dr. Leonhardt's HEM-ROID has an almost unbelievable record of success right in this city. So why waste time on external remedies or worry about an operation when J. S. McKeown invites every Pile sufferer to try HEM-ROID with guarantee of money-back if it does not end their Piles no matter how stubborn the case

Freight Pick-Up, Delivery in Eastern Ontario is Likely

Railways Consider Plan For Towns East of Toronto

Montreal, Feb. 14.—Further extension of the freight pick-up and delivery service which has been operated by the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific in Western Ontario since 1933, March, is a possibility in the near future, according to information obtained at the office of the interested railways. Today the service offers to shippers in a large number of Ontario cities and towns the advantage of collection and store door delivery of freight shipped in less than carload lots without additional cost.

Enquiry at the offices of the railways here elicited the information that the question of extending the area in which this service will be given is now receiving consideration and it is expected that the railways will be in a position shortly to make a definite announcement as to the area east of Toronto in which this service will be made available. The service was inaugurated in the Western Ontario territory on March 6 of last year and met with an immediate response from shippers in that district, the pickup and delivery facilities, plus the economical charges and the speed with which consignments are moved made a wide appeal to shippers and full advantage has been operated, as a result railway officials state, consideration is now being given to its extension to the area east of Toronto.

2 RAILWAYMEN KILLED IN A TRAIN CRASH

C.P.R. Freight Hits Standing Milk Train at St. Hermas, Que.

INVESTIGATION ON

Trainman Rolls Under Wheels And Baggageman Thrown

St. Hermas, Que., Feb. 16 (CP) Two railwaymen were killed when a Canadian Pacific Railways freight train crashed into the rear of a milk train at Wilson's milk platform three and a half miles west of here early today.

Trainman J. E. Latour rolled under the wheels of the freight locomotive as it struck the rear of the milk train and was instantly killed. Baggageman H. Guitard received fatal injures when he was thrown from the open door of a baggage car on the milk train.

The Calumet milk train was picking up milk cans at the Wilson loading platform. The freight which leaves Montreal at midnight daily for Ottawa, suddenly loomed out of the darkness and crashed into the rear of the stationary train.

Latour was on the locomotive of the freight train and attempted to leap to safety. He slipped as he jumped and rolled under the wheels which passed over his body. The shock of the impact caused Guitard to sprawl off the doorsill of the baggage car. He struck his head in falling and was fatally injured, dying a short time later.

Canadian Pacific Railway officials began an immediate investigation into the cause of the accident.

The major request was to have an amendment to the Health Act providing that indigent patients cannot be admitted to the hospital without permission of the Medical Officer of Health. This may be provided for.

The deputation also discussed the advisability of giving Medical Officers of Health power to approve indigent patients' discharge, but opposition arose from this request. Length of residence of indigent patients was also discussed, an extension of the three months' residence rule being asked. Consideration was promised by Dr. Robb to the requests.

Fearing Gun, Thugs Appear to Slip And Then Pinion Carriers

Hamilton, Feb. 16—(CP)—Within the space of a minute, two bank messengers were overpowered and the $1,500 payrool of the International Silver Company was stolen this morning. The two messengers, T. M. Gillies and C. H. Colbeck were carrying the valise containing the cash from the Bank of Commerce branch at King and Wellington Streets to the Silver Company plant at Cannon Street, a few blocks north

As the two young men reached the corner of Wilson Street two strangers went to pass them on the sidewalk. One of the messengers was armed, and the bandits evidently knew, that he was carrying a gun, for as they went to go by, the thugs appeared to slip and fall against the messengers. In the sudden sprawl which resulted, the armed messenger was pinioned and the satchel snatched from the other. The two thieves then took to their heels and leaped into a car parked around the corner.

The incident was witnessed by Mrs. Alex Neilson, who was looking out the window at the time. Thinking that it was a street brawl, she phoned police. The station duty man urged her to take down the number of the car, which she did. It proved to be one owned by Porter Manton, orchestra leader, which was stolen from a street in the west end last night.

Police are scouring the city for the car, but as yet have not traced it.

GENE OR JEAN

Crandall Admits Having Posed at Times as Man, Woman

Springfield, Ont., Feb. 16.—Provincial Officer D. C. Shervill of St. Thomas today arrested Jean or Gene P. Crandall, on a charge of vagrancy and he is being brought to the city for a hearing.

Crandall is the young farm hand who stirred the countryside around Springfield yesterday with an amazing story that he wasn't a man at all but a woman masquerading in men's clothing and that he had just fallen heir to $69,000 fortune left by his grandmother, Madame Dickinson in Chicago. The youth is said to have admitted to police, who say their prisoner is a man, that the receipt of the telegram about the big estate was all pre-arranged, just intended as a joke on Simon Charlton, Malahide township farmer, with whom he had hired out in St. Thomas three weeks ago.

Crandall admits having posed during his life time both as a man and a woman.

Telegram Phoned.

Police believe Crandall phoned the fictitious telegram from an exchange in Springfield to a neighbor of Charlton's and then it was conveyed to the Charlton house, where there is no telephone.

Meanwhile police of London recalled the arrest of Sanford Ross, the name under which Crandall was known to his employer, on a charge of vagrancy here on January 3. He gave his age as 27 and said he came from the Thedford district. He was [illegible] charge.

On that occasion the prisoner was discovered to be wearing women's underclothing; his finger nails were tinted and his hair had apparently been waved.

The arrest of Crandall also led Identification Officer Walter Harpur to check records of a case in Vancouver some months ago in which a clergyman was said to have been criticized for performing a marriage ceremony before two parties, both of whom were later claimed to be men. One of the parties at that time gave the name of Sanford Ross.

Police definitely disposed of the woman angle by declaring that during incarceration in various jails the prisoner had been examined by three doctors all of whom reported him a normal male person.

NATIONS EYE MID-EUROPE

Acts of Sabotage Planned By Socialists Against Home Guard

(By the Canadian Press)

Wholesale fighting was at an end in strife-torn Austria today but the tenacious Socialists began a campaign of guerilla warfare against the Fascist Home Guard, backbone of government support.

Reports were circulated that Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss, 'gamecock' of Europeon politics, had been the subject of an assassination attempt, along with Vice Chancellor Emil Fey and Prince Ernest Von Starhemberg, Home Guard leaders The rumors were unverified.

Socialist leaders called for acts of sabotage.

Other European nations, meanwhile, closely scanned the Austrian situation, which they considered fraught with danger to European tranquility, especially should the Nazis gain control.

To avoid this, France and Czechoslovakia decided to give the Dollfuss government non-military aid.

Reports were current in Rome that Italy might demand an investigation by the League of Nations of published charges that Czecho-Slovakia supported the Socialist uprising by shipping arms and ammunition in Austria.

Million a Day Saving Premier Has Proposed

Paris, Feb. 16—(AP)—Premier Doumergue suggested today that $1,000,000 daily expense should be eliminated from the government by a re-organization of the French Transportation System.

He told the National Economic Council:

"Let the railroads, truck services and canal boats, each according to its special attitude, co-operate to give the best service at the least cost. That would be a great step toward economic peace."

SHOOTS SELF, SCOOPS RIVAL

Danish Newspaperman Ends Life For Last Edition

Copenhagen, Denmark, Feb. 16.—O. A. [illegible] was a newspaper man.

His life was ruled by the clock. His newspaper, the Aarhusposten, went on the streets at noon every day and news had to be written, set into type, and printed before that hour.

Today the Aarhusposten had a scoop—the exclusive story of [illegible] suicide at 5 a.m., just in time to make the edition.

The story of his death was written by [illegible] himself in a note to a fellow reporter.

"I have shot myself.

"I am no joy nor of sufficient use of anybody in these hard times when it is difficult to earn a decent living honestly.

"It is now six o'clock, my old paper there getting the news of my suicide exclusively."

47 DEGREES DROP IN 24 HOURS

A 47 degree drop in temperature in this district within twelve hours from three o'clock Thursday afternoon to three o'clock Friday morning sent shivering residents again about the task of firing banked furnaces, resulted in further freeze-ups in services in an already chilled city, and caused Johnny Bear and Jimmy Woodchuck in their cosy dens to chuckle over their foresightedness in returning to their dens to hibernate until the cold weather is really over. At three o'clock on Thursday afternoon a high mark of 15 above zero was recorded; at three o'clock Friday morning thermometers had plummeted under the pressure of the Arctic blasts to a low point of 15 below. Again, asked residents, where are those last fall weather prophets?

DOUMERGUE CHARGES HITLER WITH RE-ARMING GERMANY

Armed With Big Stick of Popular Support Goes to Work

(Stuart Moroney)
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

PARIS, Feb. 16.—(AP)—Premier Gaston Doumergue, armed with the big stick of popular support in France, showed a firm hand in Europe at large today.

His new Ministry, with its eyes fixed closely on Austria's troubles openly charged Chancellor Adolf Hitler with having rearmed Germany.

Hence, said a note to Berlin drafted as one of the Cabinet's first acts, Further Franco-German talks on arms are useless.

Today the 71-year-old Premier worked to define a foreign policy which "will give us the necessary authority to play a useful role in the League of Nations and International Conferences"

The German rearmament charge, hurled in reply to a Hitler memorandum in regard to further discussions on disarmament, was revealed, while cheers of the Chamber of Deputies still resounded in the ears of the Cabinet last night.

In the Doumergue Government's first encounter with Parliament, it won the almost unprecedented support of all but 163 of the 595 deputies.

This, it was recalled today, was a higher margin than was accorded the beloved Raymond Poincare "The Saviour of the France" in 1926.

The troubled European situation did not claim all of Premier Doumergue's attention today.

He plunged vigorously into a continuance of the Bayonne Banking Scandal investigation. The Chamber was urged to appoint a committee to begin work at once.

Then, with a rapid vote on budget proposals promised under a ruling to bar debate, he urged that the complete programme be acted upon before the end of the month.

STUFFED BOY IN ICE HOLE

Reprimanded Child And Knocked Him Unconscious

Rockford, Ill., Feb. 16 (AP)—Charles Backus, a middle-aged vegetable peddler, stood near the ice-covered river here, pointed to a hole in the ice, and told police:

"I put it there. I was scared."

The "it" was the body of his eight-year-old son, Charles Jr., who had been missing eight days. The father had persisted in denying knowledge of his son's whereabouts. Last night, after long questioning, he said to Joseph Rank of the State Highway Patrol:

"All right, I'll show you where it is."

Then followed the trip to the river where the peddler pointed out the air hole into which, he told police, he had stuffed the boy's body.

There was no trace of the body, however, and the river was to be dynamited today in an effort to bring it to the surface.

Backus told police he had reprimanded his son when the boy came home from school a week ago Wednesday. The boy appeared ill, the peddler said.

Police quoted Backus as saying:

"I struck him and he became unconscious. We (presumably meaning members of the family) carried him onto a bed and rubbed him, and I thought he died of poisoned candy. I took his body and loaded it on a truck and went to the foot of Clifford Street and found an ice air hole. I stuffed the body into that."

Woman Wields Pail Hot Water Five Constables Beat Retreat

Tilbury, Ont. Feb. 16 — One determined woman plus a goodly supply of boiling water water thwarted the efforts of five constables to shift a mother and five children back to Tilbury East Township.

Mrs. Norman Carson and family moved into town recently and according to Mrs. Carson, town authorities feared they might become town charges so wanted to move them back.

When officers arrived she took her stand declaring "touch one stick of furniture and I will throw this hot water at you" and the "attacking party" withdrew. The woman says her husband is working in Raleigh township and there is no fear of the family becoming indigent.

Pilot Bombarded from Space by Meteor Escapes Death by Clever Manipulation

Little Rock, Ark., Feb. 16.—(AP)—The strange experience of being bombarded from space by a meteor was described by Pilot Hiram Sheridan on his arrival here with the eastbound night American Airways mail plane from Fort Worth, Texas.

Sheridan said just before he reached Texarkana last night he saw the meteor break into flame as it struck the earth's atmosphere and describe a huge arc, coming directly at the plane.

"I watched it for a minute or two," the pilot said, "and realized that it was coming straight at me. I changed my course and put on speed, but it looked like it would strike the plane in spite of all I could do.

"When it appeared something was sure to happen, I banked sharply to the right and at about the same moment the meteor burned out and disappeared."

Sheridan said he was unable to say just how far the meteor missed the plane, but said he thought it "barely missed."

RUMORS ABOUT MINE RE-OPENING

There are persistent rumors about the city that the Cordova Mines are to be re-opened shortly. Letters from district received here recently stated that shift foremen had been notified to report at the mines on the fifteenth instant.

RAIL BLOCKADE NEAR AGINCOURT

A slight blockade on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway near Agincourt, this morning was reported by the local office of the line today in answer to a query regarding a supposed train wreck. Officials at the local office stated that the accident was a slight one. A box car truck on a freight train was said to have jumped the tracks.

500 HUNDRED CALLS RECEIVED BY DEPT.

In the neighborhood of five hundred telephone calls from residents all through the city have been received at the office of the city water works department since the start of the cold weather, it was revealed by a check today. A large majority of these calls were tackled by the emergency crews with the electrical thawing machine. This week machine and men have been particularly busy in spite of the rise in temperatures. Hydrants on the other hand have almost escaped the biting frost. Regular morning check-up made by the department shows that only in isolated cases have the fire plugs frozen. Other cities have reported wholesale freeze-ups of their hydrants with consequent fire danger.

SAY TORCH IS CAUSE OF FIRE

A home-made torch being used in a residence at 282½ Coleman street to thaw frozen water pipes in the cellar gave firemen a run to that address shortly after eight o'clock this morning when flames from the burning torch ignited the ceiling, and threatened for a time to spread rapidly through the house. A quick response by the local department kept damage to a minimum.

An earlier alarm to a residence near the old lime kiln on the Cannifton Road outside the city at 7:30 this morning was responded to by equipment of No. 2 firehall. No damage was caused. A blazing chimney was responsible for the alarm.

OLD THIEVING CROW BRINGS MILKMEN WOE

East Hill Bird Far Wiser Than Most [illegible]

A tame wise old black crow is domiciled in an east hill residence. This bird is an early riser as are all birds and he makes his rounds to a number of homes for the purpose of getting a drink. His mode of operation, while not altogether congenial, is nevertheless ingenious. We are creditably informed that the crow pecks at the milk bottle cap and after removing it will satisfy for the time being his thirst, then he will visit another home and continue the operation.

Labrique was apprehended in Belleville by the local police this morning after having spent the night in a house on Coleman Street, accompanied by a young girl under the age of 18 years. The girl was also taken into custody pending an investigation by the police as to the authenticity of their story.

It is alleged by the police, that accompanied by the young girl Labrique "hitch-hiked" from Montreal to Belleville yesterday, later procuring a night's lodging in a Coleman Street residence. The pair were apprehended by the police and are being held pending an investigation regarding the activities before leaving Quebec. Labrique was finger printed at the police station this morning, his finger prints being sent to Ottawa for identification. THIRTY-TWO INCHES ICE CUT AT BANCROFT

Former Woodstock Man Tells Of Thick Ice in North

News items often circulate through unusual channels. A former Woodstock resident, Harry W. Krantz who formerly conducted a tinsmith shop on Dundas Street, Woodstock, and who is now engaged in the same business in Bancroft, this county, read in the Woodstock Sentinel-Review that ice nine inches thick was being cut around Tillsonburg.

"That's not so thick," writes Mr. Krantz from Bancroft to his old home town paper in Woodstock. "Here in Bancroft we're been cutting it from thirty to thirty-two inches thick."

"Our temperatures most of this winter have been from 38 to 45 below zero, and it is still very cold in Hastings County."

Ice in the Bay of Quinte here, stated commercial dealers today is an average thickness of twenty-four inches.

EXCHANGE IDEA GROWS POLAND SEEKS TRADE

Idea of Belleville Crusaders In Line With World Movement

Trading goods internationally was given its impetus by the Belleville group, and judging from the British press, the Central Ontario Commerce Crusaders have entered the international game.

"Through established channels of trade," said Mr. W. E. Schuster, originator of the Crusaders, "we seek wider markets and sea-borne trade in and out for the Province of Ontario. The spade work has been accomplished and Belleville is conspicuous for catching the idea first and driving it with great force and ingenuity of thought.

"Wales and Ontario are now buckled up in a two-way trade plan, magnitude of which is tremendous."

Poland Seeks Exchange

Ottawa, February 16.—Baron Roger Battaglia, representative of the Chambers of Commerce of Poland, arrived in Ottawa today, accompanied by Joseph Marlewski, Polish consul in Montreal. The purpose of his visit to this country is to study the possibility of an exchange of products.

Poland is anxious to increase its trade with Canada, he said, and would like to buy more minerals, pulp, rubber tires and possibly apples from Canada in exchange for textile, machinery, textile fabric and cloths.

JUNIORS PLAY ON SATURDAY

O. H. A. Orders Group Playoff To Start Here On That Date

Shortly after noon today Manager Eddie Thomas announced that the first game of the junior O.H.A. Group No. 1 finals would be played in Belleville, between the local Cubs and the fast Queen's juniors, tomorrow (Saturday) night.

Despite the fact, that Manager Thomas endeavoured to have the game postponed until Monday the heads of the O.H.A. deemed it advisable to capitalize on the present cold weather and order the games played. The return game will be played in Kingston on Monday night with the team garnering the greater number of goals on the round continuing in the Junior O.H.A. playdowns.

The locals won the title honors in section "B" of Group No. 1 in Junior O.H.A. circles with the Queen's kids coming down in front in section "A", defeating such clubs as R.M.C. Kingston Frontenacs and Gananoque. Coach Wally Elmer has gathered together a speedy team of pucksters heralded as one of the best junior's clubs ever to come out of the Kingston seat of knowedge. After a few years of absence from local hockey activities Eddie Thomas recently returned to the helm of the Belleville juniors and has gathered about him a team of speeded youngsters, who rely solely on the combination drilled into them by Skipper Thomas. They recently romped home to a clean cut two game victory over the Hastings' juniors in their junior group play-offs, winning by the large margin of 23 to 8 on the round.

This announcement cancels all other previous statements regarding Manager Thomas endeavoring to have the game postponed until Monday night. In order to give the citizens at large an opportunity to see the local juniors in junior O.H.A. playdown competition the game versus Queen's on Saturday night will not commence until after 9.00 p.m. with a neutral referee being appointed. Manager Thomas will use the same line-up against the "students" that carried their locals to victory in their group.

SOUNDING OPERATIONS CONTINUE IN BAY

Surveyors Working From Trenton to Belleville

Continuing their sounding operations on which they have been engaged since the formation of the heavy ice on the Bay of Quinte, government employees are working from the Trenton harbor along the bay, taking soundings of the ship channels between this city and Trenton this week. The results of this work are being carefully noted and will be turned into the department at Ottawa where a study will be made of the situation prior to expected dredging in the Bay of Quinte next summer. Belleville harbor was carefully sounded several weeks ago.

SNOW PLOWS CLEAR LINES

Plows Also Used on Highways And Rural Roads

Nearly all roads in this immediate district are reported today by governmental snowplow men to be in fairly good condition for travel, although in other districts wholesale blockages are revealed in the latest report of the Ontario Motor League.

Brighton to Campbellford, previously blocked by heavy drifts, was said by a snow plow crew today to be open all the way.

On No. 7 highway it is impassable from the Frontenac County line to Perth; from Marmora to Peterborough and from Actinolite to Kaladar.

Carleton Place to Ottawa is blocked.

Prescott to Ottawa is passable, but quite heavy.

Gananoque to Seeley's Bay is blocked.

Trenton to Stirling is heavy but passable.

Nearly all concession roads in the northern townships of Hastings County are reported in varying degrees of impassability, although the main roads are fairly free of the heavy drifts.

For the first time in many years a snow plow was seen on the Canadian National Railway lines this week on the stretch between this city and Lindsay. Other rural lines were still being cleared this week by plows of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific lines.

Duets were given by Mrs. H. Farnham and Mrs. C. Wessels, and Rev. W. R. and Mrs. Merrick. Solo by Mr. Don Williams and a fine instrumental by Mr. Ted Watts. The appreciation of the congregation was conveyed to the pastor and his wife for the work of the year.

At the close of the program the pastor thanked all workers for their untiring labors in the interests of the church, also those who had made possible the very pleasant social fellowships by their contributions to the program and supper. The evening's proceedings were then brought to a close by singing 'Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow" and the Benediction.

The C.G.I.T. girls had a fine display of articles for sale in aid of their Missionary funds and sales were most satisfactory.

Canadiens Can Make Playoffs Providing Morenz Holds Form Displayed Against the Rangers

Scored Two Goals And Assisted in Another Defeating N. Y. 5-2

TWO TIE GAMES

Chicago Hawks Hold Position by Winning From Ottawa 5-2

(By A. E. Pulford, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

Canadien hopes rode high today on the wings of a comeback they hardly expected from veteran Howie Morenz, whose brilliance beckoned habitants to the hockey heights in other years.

Twenty-four hours ago the Montrealers wondered whether a National Hockey League playoff berth was possible for them. Now they are sure.

For Morenz, out of the game for a month with an ankle injury, staged a return to form in Montreal last night, that was so brilliant, so like Morenz, they were sure it couldn't be the sort of flash players in their way out sometimes show.

The Stratford thunderbolt had fans, who have been watching his colorful career since 1923 on their feet cheering through much of the time he was on the ice.

Confident he is once again the player who chiselled the name of Morenz in hockey's hall of fame, they roared their applause as he scored two goals and assisted in another.

Habitants defeated New York Rangers 5-2 and partly shook off the threat against their tenure of third place in the Canadian division-New York Americans have made. But that was only incidental to Leo Dandurand and his team. Morenz is back in form now and wins won't be so hard to get.

Position Helped

Canadiens' position was helped too by the 4-4 tie Montreal Maroons and Bruins played in Boston and the 1-1 draw of Detroit and Americans in New York. These results and the 5-2 beating Chicago gave Ottawa left Detroit on top in the American section with Rangers a point back and Chicago trailing by another.

With Morenz playing his best game of the season, the rest of the Habitants caught the contagion with the result the team was in rare form against Rangers. Wildor Larochelle and Morenz combined to score the first goal and Pit Lepine made it 2-0 before the first period was over.

Paul Raymond, just up from Windsor, got his first big league goal for Canucks early in the second before Rangers could get into the scoring column twice through Vic Ripley and Butch Keeling.

In the final session Aurel Joliat and Morenz, the oldest partnership in hockey, put Canadiens two up and the old master centre got his second goal before the game ended.

A four goal splurge in the second period brought Maroons back from what looked like sure defeat in the Boston game.

Marty Barry, who got two goals and two assists, had scored twice in the opening session within 75 seconds and Bruins held the lead until the middle frame was half over.

Then Baldy Northcott started Maroons' comeback and before the period was over Jimmy Ward, Russell Blinco and Dave Trottier had bent the twine behind Tiny Thompson. Dit Clapper scored for Boston in the same period and tied up the score in the third.

Desse got another early in the second before Lionel Conacher and Paul Thompson, who got three assists as well as his goal, put the game away.

The Detroit-American game was a poorly played affair with few thrills. It was their third tie encounter in five games this season. Wings won the other two games.

Both goals came in the first period, Johnny Sorrell getting Detroit's and Rabbit McVeigh Americans.

FIVE-POINT LEAD ENJOYED

Detroit, Feb. 16.—(CP)—Detroit Olympics nestled deeper into first place in the International Hockey League today with a five-point margin over their nearest rivals, Syracuse Stars. By a 5-1 score Olympics last night collected two more points when they trounced Syracuse in a game that produced some fast and rough hockey.

"Rusty" Hughes, burly Syracuse defense star, went to the cooler in the first period with a major penalty for swinging at "Bud" Cook, Detroit centre ace. Cook received a minor for his part in the stick-swinging melee.

CENTRE LOOP HOCKEY

Stirling, February 16.—(Special)—In the Tuesday evening double-header of the Centre League staged in the Stirling arena, Zion Hill registered an easy win over Bethel, when they took the latter into camp for a 3-1 win and Evergreen tied Cannifton 3 all in a close combat. The tie game was disallowed however on the ground that Evergreen was playing men on the team who, according to the league rules did not live in the Evergreen territory.

The first game of the double bill saw Zion Hill take the lead over Bethel in the first frame. Although Bethel tried hard and held the Zion Hill scions to one goal in the second period, the scoring attempts of their forward line proved quite futile and the count at the end of the period stood 3-1. The final canto was a scoreless affair and although Zion Hill had the best of the play as in the previous frames, no more tallies were recorded. Penalties for the game went to Denyes and Cranston in the first, Cranston in the second and Townsend and Cranston (2) in the third period.

Lineups:

Zion Hill—Seeley, goal; R. Sills and K. Denyes, defense; R. Caverley centre; Townsend and Parks, wings; subs, Hayes, Hall and Ketcheson.

Bethel—Sills, goal; Cranston and Hudgins, defense; R. Dickey, centre; E. Dickey and J. Fargey, wings; subs, Breugh, Kennedy, Cronkwright.

The Evergreen-Cannifton game was a real exhibition of hockey, the first frame ending with a 1-1 score. The second period was scoreless and in the final stanza, each notched two counters to tie the score 3-3. It was too bad that Evergreen had to resort to using players not officially recognized by the league as they put up a splendid fight against the fast Cannifton crowd. Penalties went to M. McGee and C. McGee.

Lineups:

Cannifton — Sharpe, goal; McQuigge and Bleekman, defense; Johnson, centre; Empson and Jarrell, wings; subs, Jarrell, Carmichael and Williams.

Evergreen—W. Rodgers, goal; C. McGee and Scott, defense; D. Rodgers, centre; M. McGee and P. Gibson, wings; subs, W. McMullen.

Referee—Earl Wallace.

We see that the Deacon A. C. cagers' chapeaus are now resting on their ears.

Speaking of basketball a twin bill of the cage game is on the books for this evening when the Picton junior and senior cagers invade the citadel of the local collegiate. The Laughlin-coached seniors are well out in front of their group but the juniors must come down in front this evening to finish in the money. With O.A.B.A. basketball all washed up locally the collegiate cagers should now come into their own and supply entertainment for the fans. The majority of the roster of the local collegiate senior team are seasoned players and should, if they profit by the mistakes of the local junior E.O.A.B.A. aggregation, be well up in the C.O.S.S.A. race this season. Incidentally the B.C.I.V.S. girls 'senior squad are endeavouring to arrange exhibition games to whip them into condition before the provincial play-downs next month.

Maybe the easy manner in which the Belleville intermediates coasted home to victory in the Trenton series did the locals no end of good when they played the Maroons. The entire local roster seemed to be off color and gave a rather weird exhibition throughout, but, Mr. Fan, don't be at all surprised if the Dohertys come down in front tonight to not only win, but take the round. With but a single goal lead to their credit, the Maroons cannot afford to play a kitty-bar-the-door game as one slip and the locals would be up even with them. It's a dead letter cinch the locals as a team cannot give a much worse exhibition of the game than they displayed on Wednesday, while the Maroons could not improve to any great extent. Another old adage went wrong on Wednesday in that old chestnut—"any team you can tie, you can beat."

Again Eddie Thomas' juniors gave an excellent display of combination when they downed the Hastings kids 10 to 4 at Norwood last evening to win section "B" of Group No. 1, junior O.H.A., and take the round by a 23 to 8 count. The kids are firm believers of "in union there is strength" as their combination plays are daily improving, as can be observed by the large scores they are hanging up.

* * *

In today's O.H.A. bulletin Wally Elmer's Queen's juniors are scheduled to play here in the group finals on Saturday night with the return game in Kingston Monday. Early today Skipper Thomas was in communication with Secretary W. A. Hewitt endeavoring to have the game postponed until Monday as a Saturday stand is "not so hot" in Belleville.

Yesterday the annual meeting of the Ontario Federation of Anglers was held in Toronto with J. E. Shortt and J. H. Legate of the local angler's association, representing the Belleville and district game fishermen. Many new suggestions and by-laws towards the uplifting of the sport were passed. Undoubtedly the local organization will soon call their annual meeting, when a report of yesterday's meeting will be submitted by Mr. Shortt and Mr. Legate.

After a few seasons of industrial hockey the Toronto Cities Service Oil Company are seriously contemplating entering the baseball field of sport. Recently the "oilmen" announced their intentions of entering a team into the newly organized Ulster Stadium loop. To date the Ulster loop has four clubs assured with three others clamoring to get into the fold.

While on the subject of baseball we might mention the fact that no O.B.A.A. transfers have been published naming amateur ballsters having applied for a transfer to Belleville. Any new players having moved into Belleville since last summer should soon make application for their personal transfer to Belleville. Incidentally we understand that an unknown diamond star recently took up his residence in Belleville. Dame Rumor says he's supposed to be a third sacker.

* * *

A mighty strong team could be made up of American League players who cost their clubs but little. Such an outfit could line up with Whitehill, Van Atta, Allen, Crowder, Marberry, Stewart, Bridges, Lyons and Sorrell as pitchers, L. Sewell and Dickey as catchers, Foxx, Gehringer, Cronin, Higgins, Gehrig, Melillo, McNair and Dykes, infielders, Chapman, Stone, Reynolds, Goslin, Manush, Vosmik, and Fred Walker as outfielders. On the other hand, the high-priced team would be composed of Grove, Earnshaw, Al Thomas and Weaver, pitchers; Cochrane and Ferrell, catchers; Alexander, Cissell, Lary, Crosetti, Kuhel and Kamm, infielders; Ruth, Simmons, Averill, Roy Johnson, Schulte, Combs and Porter, outfielders.

Belleville Juniors Win Game in Hastings 10-4, Round 23-8

Locals Will Now Meet Queen's Juniors For Group Title

"Sectional group champions."

That's what the Belleville juniors became after downing the Hastings kids by a 10 to 4 score at Norwood last evening thus winning the "B" section of group No. 1, junior O.H.A. competition by the score of 23 to 8, having taken a nine goal lead to the northern village. The local Cubs now meet the fast Queen's juniors, winners of group No. 1, section "A", for the group title with home and home games and goals to count on the round.

The local kids completely outclassed their Hastings rivals last night playing a systematic style of combination, that left their rivals bewildered at times. Don Lee led the local scorers with three goals and two assists to his credit with Freddie McGuire following in line to bag three counters. "Cy" Barriage was seen at an advantage coasting about at centre to make plays, while High also played well. Both Bob Greer and "Stew" McElrath played stellar hockey going both ways, with the former scoring two beautiful goals on solo efforts. Sinfield turned in his usual steady game.

Losers Fade Fast

For the losers Puffer, Rogers, Voyer and Fenton all scored with Godin making the plays at centre ice. The home club were completely baffled by the superb combination plays set up by the locals and faded fast once the Thomas-led aggregation started to score. At the end of the initial frame the score stood 4 to 0 for Belleville while at the end of the middle frame the locals were leading 7 to 3 with Belleville out-scoring Hastings 3 to 1 in the final period to make the ultimate score 10 to 4 in Belleville's favor.

The local Cubs were drawn to meet the Queen's kids in Belleville on Saturday night of this week with the return game being played at Kingston on Monday night. Manager Eddie Thomas was in communication with the O.H.A. relating to having the series open here next Monday. No definite information had been received at noon.

The line-ups:

Belleville—Goal Sinfield; defence Greer and McElrath; centre, Barriage; wings Harvey and McGuire; subs, L'Heureaux, Lee, High and Hammett.

Hastings—Goal Tharby; defence, McCoy, L. Rogers; centre, Godin; wings Puffer, Fenton; subs, Sargent, N. Rogers, Stewart and Voyer.

Referee—"Mic" Hogan of Hastings.

THE LATE REV. DR. SEYMOUR

The death by accident in Toronto of the Rev. Dr. J. A. Seymour, minister of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Belleville, for five years past, has shocked the entire community and the many organizations with which he was connected through the church and his numerous friends. Outside of his suddenly bereaved widow and his son, the congregation of St. Andrew's feels the blow with peculiar acuteness. Sympathy in the hour of the tragedy which has befallen one who was esteemed and loved and regret that such an untoward event should have occurred were the thoughts uppermost in the minds of the people of Belleville and of elsewhere in the province.

The late Dr. Seymour had a wide experience in the Presbyterian ministry in Australia and his fitness for the high office he held as minister and pastor was evident in the manner in which he carried out the many tasks which devolved upon him. As a preacher he was popular, earnest and thoughtful, while as a pastor he was particularly qualified by his sympathy and devotion to the opportunities which his calling offered to labor among his people. In the wider sphere of the church, that is outside of his own communion, he soon after his coming to Belleville won for himself the appreciation of all classes and creeds. His scholarship was of the highest type, and yet it did not separate him from men and did not lose him friendships. He was a man of marked sincerity and of heroism in utterance of opinions. His last visit to Toronto was for the purpose of taking part in a branch of the work of the church with which he was in heartiest sympathy.

His sudden taking-off again drives home the thought of the uncertainty of life and the importance of that wise admonition which Dr. Seymour himself was and would be the first to preach and urge upon others — so to live one's day as if it were the last so that all would be well. Dr. Seymour, a man of sincerity, candour, heroism and zeal, living a life for others in the Christian ministry, yet fell victim to an accident years before the natural span of life. In the presence of this mystery and the shock of his family the people of St. Andrew's mourn in deepest sorrow his untimely death.

In him Presbyterianism has lost a strong man, his own congregation a beloved pastor, his family a devoted husband and father, his wide circle of friends one whom they loved, and the city a citizen of the highest integrity whose interest was the entire community.

YOUTH AND THIS DAY

An educationist stated the other day that while there are groups of young people who want to be good citizens and learn to serve the community, youth in general is not interested in the fundamental problems of life. One of the problems was the question of authority which is questioned by youth, said Rev. Errol C. Amaron, principal of Stanstead College. Youth was questioning the source of authority and who and what determined what is right and what is wrong.

The principal sees in the problem of unemployment a factor which is making a profound impression on the young, ideals are broken and ambitions frustrated because of lack of opportunity to find an outlet for their hopes and dreams in work, marriages are delayed with inevitable results and with many of the old safeguards removed, the wonder of it all is that youth is so steady and decent.

Mr. Amaron sees incompatibility between profession and practice which puzzles the young who do not make the allowances and concessions their elders do. They cannot understand the man who talks of a "square deal" and drives as "hard a bargain as he can," their sense of justice is injured in unchallenged public wrongs. The young, the principal said, are puzzled because they cannot understand why their experienced elders have made such a deplorable mess of affairs, failing to organize living conditions in the world.

In education he demands more emphasis on the personal equation. Students should be taught to "know themselves" and he suggests a course in literature, the history of civilization, an opportunity for self-expression and the cultivation of a hobby and theoretical and practical training for service. He sees an apathetic youth which must be stirred.

Principal Amaron's views cannot but attract some attention.

Selfish men may possess the earth; it is only the meek who inherit it from the Heavenly Father, free from all defilements and perplexities of unrighteousness. —Woolman.

Meditation is the soul's perspective glass, whereby, in her long removes, she discerneth God, as if He were nearer at hand.—Feltham.

OPEN SESAME

The magic "Open Sesame"
Was hidden a weary while;
But now we find no charm can be
So potent as a smile.

Who deals in words may make strange slips,
At home or in far lands;
Who goes with smiles upon his lips,
The whole world understands!

And if to any door he bring
A blithe and smiling air,
Its bolts will turn, its hinges swing
So he may enter there.

O, magic Sesame of smiles,
You lead to all delights,
To tranquil seas and sun-sweet isles,
Gold days and starry nights!

No secret witchcraft of the past
Is needed to beguile
The fates, since folk have learned at last
The power of a smile!

FLORIDA, GEORGIA, and other southern states are enjoying a great rush of tourist traffic this season, so much so that hotel, or any accommodation, is at a premium. Through express trains from New York and Chicago are running in sections to carry the army fleeing from the frosty north to the sunny southland, while motor car traffic is exceptionally heavy. Earth tremors on the Pacific coast, revolution in Cuba, riots and revolution in European countries are quoted as contributory factors to the tourist rush to Florida and other states on the south Atlantic seaboard. Florida folks certainly can take it after several years of very light business, and the old Southland has returned to its merry care-free self, reinvigorated by the magic touch of all kinds of money, good Canadian dollars and cheap Yankee dollars —they all look alike to the folks down south blessed with the first good tourist harvest in several years.

AN AUTOMATIC DUCK which supplied the fuel to roast itself, incidentally incinerating the rest of the feathered inmates of the poultry house, has achieved Front Page fame, posthumous. Saranac Lake, N.Y., gets credit for this nature yarn, which probably is true, believe it or not. The night was dark and dismal, the thermometer (spirit) said fifty below, but no one believed it, a brisk fire was blazing in the poultry house, in fact the stove was red hot. The stupid duck hugged the fire too close, and its tail feathers ignited, cooking the duck's goose, if such a thing were possible, setting fire to the poultry house with a loss of twenty-nine chickens and one foolish duck that forgot to duck away from a red hot stove.

What He'd Do For $15

A bank in New Jersey ran this advertisement in a local paper:

"Wanted—a clerk. Must be experienced in foreign exchange. Salary $15 a week."

This is one of the replies received:

"Dear Bank—I would respectfuly apply for the position you offer. I am an expert in foreign exchange, in all branches. In addition, I converse fluently in Gum Arabic, Zola, Gorgonzola and Billingsgate. I write short-hand, long-hand, left-hand and right-hand. I can supply my own typewriter if necessary, and I may mention that I typewrite half an hour in ten minutes, the record.

He was a golfer who always played in his oldest clothes. One day he set out for the course, his clubs slung over his shoulder.

Walking down a street he saw a woman leaning over her garden gate, eyeing his approach angrily.

"You're very late," she said, sharply, as he drew level.

"Late?" echoed the astonished golfer.

"Yes, late! You promised to sweep my chimneys at 8, and it's past 9 o'clock now."

MANY CASES OF DEAFNESS DUE NEGLECT

The Organ of Hearing Not to be Trifled With

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D. Ph.D.
Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright 1934 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

The hearing apparatus is a very remarkable affair—as is, indeed, every other organ of the body.

When we contemplate the wonderful workings of the human organism in all its complexity, ramifications, and intercorrelations, we are certain to gain respect for ourselves and, in turn, to increase our watchfulness over our health and well-being.

Too often are we careless, for instance, about the care of our ears. The daily removal of accumulated wax in the external ear should be a simple matter. Yet it is astonishing how many cases of deafness are due to neglect of this kind. Often the accumulated wax becomes, after months and years, as hard as a stone and special instruments are required to remove it.

The auditory or hearing apparatus consists of the external ear, the middle ear, the internal ear and the auditory nerve.

The external ear is made up of a flap of skin and cartilage which we see on the outside of the head. Leading from the outside to the so-called drum-membrance of the ear is the auditory canal. The auditory canal is somewhat curved and is higher in the middle than at its ends. Its lining is not sensitive toward the outer half but is very sensitive along the inner half. Slightly inwards are found certain sweat-glands which secrete a kind of pasty, yellow substance, the wax referred to above. It is held by some that this wax has an odor offensive to insects, thus preventing them from intruding into the ear.

The middle ear—also called the tympanum—is a small, irregular and flat cavity, situated in bone. It is separated from the auditory canal by the drum-membrance. It is likewise separated from the internal ear by a bony wall in which there are two small openings or windows, also covered with membrane. One is called the oval window and the other the round window.

The cavity of the middle ear is so small that it could readily be filled with five or six drops of water. A canal or tube connects the middle ear with the back of the mouth. This is the Eustachian tube. It is through this tube that infections in the mouth may spread to the middle ear and from the middle ear to the little caverns of bone, the mastoid cells, in the temporal bone, producing the familiar mastoid diseases.

Across the drum-membrance, on the inside, are three tiny movable bones, called the "malleus," (because it looks like a hammer) the "incus" (because it resembles an anvil), and the "stapes" (which is like a stirrup).

The malleus is firmly attached to the drum and the stapes to the oval window behind. In between is the incus. Every time sound waves strike the drum-membrance these bones are set in motion and transmit the sound to the oval window leading to the internal ear.

In the internal ear is the end of the auditory nerve, which receives the sound impulses and records them as such in the brain. In the internal ear are also the so-called semi-circular canals. These have to do with our sense of equilibrium, of knowing whether we are standing upright or not.

This brief outline of the hearing mechanism may impress you sufficiently to make you realize that the organ of hearing is not one to be neglected or trifled with.

Little Benny's Note Book

This afternoon I swapped my golf ball for Glasses Magee's Chinese puzzle, being 4 rings all mixed up and you're sippose to get them in a strate line, and after supper Mr. and Mrs. Hewes came to play bridge and I was still trying to make the puzzle come out, pop saying, Let's have a look at that thing. I'll do it for you in a jiffy.

A G, pop, wait a minnit, I've almost git it now, I said, and pop said, That's what they all say, and moreover I have always made it a practice to advise all my children not to tell their father to wait a minnit. Now hand that silly thing over and no more nonsense, he said.

And he started to try to do it himself, being harder than he thawt, and after about 5 minnits ma said, Willyum, we're all sitting down reddy to play and the cards are delt and we're waiting for you, so give that childish thing back to Benny and come on.

Half a moment now, I've got it practically werked out, pop said. And he kept on trying, saying, I used to be able to do these things with one eye shut, and ma saying, Your present actions dont prove it, and the rest of us will have both eyes shut in slumber in another moment, now drop that immeeditly and dont be abserd.

Let's have a little look at it, I'm a whale at those things. I never saw one yet could stump me, Mr. Hews said.

And he got up and took it away from pop just when I was reeching for it and started trying to do it himself, Mrs. Hews saying, Now, Yewstace, what makes you think you have any special license to hold up the procession?

I'll get it in a minnit, Mr. Hews said, and Mrs. Hews said, You'll get it in a minnit all rite if you dont give that child back his toy, how ridickuliss.

I surrender, Mr. Hews said. And he gave it back to me and I went in a corner and made it come out perfeck, pop and Mr. Hews both claiming I couldn't of did it if they hadn't of got it started.

FELLOW ACTORS NOT AWARE OF MENTAL ANGUISH

London, Feb. 16—(AP)—Even fellow actors of Margaret Moffat did not know of the sudden death of her husband, Sewell Collins, theatrical producer, as she acted a part without which the show could not have gone on.

Informed yesterday afternoon while lunching with friends, of her husband's death she decided to "carry on" because, she said, he would have wished it. She is chief laugh-maker of "Wind and the rain" and has no understudy. She kept the news from the rest of the cast fearing their sympathy might mar the performance.

"When people around you are sympathetic it often is difficult to control one's feelings", she said last night.

Collins, who was 57, had been ill earlier in the winter but of late was much better. A doctor, called when he became ill yesterday, found him dead. The cause of death was not announced.

Margaret Moffat was born in Scotland, educated in Toronto. She made her first appearance on the stage at the Savoy Theatre in New York in 1903.

COL. GRAHAM IS DIRECTOR

Belleville Man Represents Eastern Investors in Corporate Investors Ltd.

A compliment to one of Belleville's public spirited citizens was extended to Lt. Col. R. J. E. Graham of the firm of Ponton & Graham, solicitor, by his election as a director of Corporate Investors Limited, of Toronto, to represent investors of Eastern Ontario.

The company with which Col. Graham will now be associated was formed in 1932 by a group of prominent business and professional men in Ontairo for the purpose of providing a medium profitable and sound investment, on British investment trust lines, for themselves and friends, and in the Fall of last year was extended to include participation by the investing public generally.

Centuries of experience in finance in Great Britain has proved conclusively that investment trust operation which has come through successfully sixty years of varying conditions of wars and panics, is the best medium by which the average investor can secure, with a minimum of risk, an investment that is practically assured of increasing value and dividend returns through all periods of changing business conditions.

Colonel Graham, in accepting the honour conferred upon him, stated that he believed that the experience of the average investor in the past has warranted the establishment of a company by which insurance principles can be adapted to investments, and after considerable investigation he found such an institution in Corporate Investors Limited.

Associated with Colonel Graham on the Directorate of Corporate Investors, Limited, are President W. D. Glendinning, Toronto; Gray & Roberts, Chartered Accountants; Vive-Pres., A. E. Gooderham Jr., Toronto., Vive-President, Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company; Secretary, Hugh J. McLaughlin, K.C., Toronto, McLaughlin, Moorhead & Macaulay, Solicitors, Director, Victoria Trust and Savings Company; Treasurer, W. F. Stewart, Toronto, Secretary and Treasurer, Dominion Stores Limited; T. H. Hogg, B.A.Sc., C.E., D. Eng., Toronto, Consulting Engineer, Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission; Major W. D. Wilson, D.S.O., Hamilton, Chairman, Hamilton Civic Research Bureau; Louis C. Breithaupt, Kitchener, Vice-President and General Manager, The Breithaupt Leather Company Limited; Rolph R. At first the shouts of the convicts during the games caused alarm to residents in the vicinity fearful of riots. However they have become accustomed to it now.

50 YEARS A MARTYR TO CONSTIPATION

But Kellogg's ALL-BRAN Brought Welcome Relief

Read this splendid letter from Mrs. Haynes:

"For 50 years I have been a martyr to constipation. Have tried every remedy under the sun.

"One day I read an account of some one who had been relieved by ALL-BRAN, but I thought 'What was the use of me trying anything more when all else had failed?'

"A while after, I read it again. That time I thought I would try it, it would do no harm anyway.

"I began with a small dish of your ALL-BRAN for breakfast, and wonderful to say, I never need to take any physic at all now. How I wish other poor sufferers from constipation could be persuaded to try it."—Mrs. Sarah Haynes (address furnished upon reqeust).

Tests show Kellogg's ALL-BRAN provides "bulk" and vitamin B to aid regular habits. Also iron for the blood.

This "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is much like that in leafy vegetables. It's so much safer than taking patent medicines! Two tablespoonfuls of ALL-BRAN daily are usually sufficient. Severe cases, with each meal. If not relieved this way, see your doctor.

Get this delicious ready-to-eat cereal from your grocer. In the red-and-green package. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

LATE MRS. MICHAEL BYRNES

Another pioneer of the Erinsville district has passed away in the person of Mrs. Anne Byrnes. For almost fifteen years she had been in ill-health, the greater portion of which she spent in bed, but always manifested the greatest resignation. Her husband, Michael Byrnes, predeceased her some seventeen years ago. She lived on the homestead adjoining the village with her son Patrick and for several years was tenderly cared for by her niece, Miss Bridget Doyle. She was formerly Miss Anne Garrett, and is survived by a large family of sons and daughters. LATE JOHN LAIRD

The death of Mr. John Laird a much respected citizen of Napanee, occurred suddenly on Friday morning last. Mr. Laird was apparently in his usual health during the early part of the day, but was taken with an unexpected seizure and passed away in about an hour's time.

Mr. Laird had been a resident of Napanee for more than fifty years, and for forty years was in the employ of the G.T.R. and C.N. Railways. He retired about ten years ago from active service.

He was of English descent and was born nearly 79 years ago, at Bath, Ontario. Almost 58 years ago he married Catharine Phillips, who survives him. The family born to them are Mrs. J. E. Conger, Mrs. Richard Irvine and Wilkie, of Napanee, Harry in Calgary, Miss Nellie of Montreal, Miss Minnie of Toronto and Sidney of Belleville. SPURGEON TROOP

Cobourg, Feb. 16—(Special)—The sudden death of Spurgeon Troop Wednesday night came as a great shock to citizens of this town and sympathy is expressed with his widow, who before her marriage was Miss Downs, and three young sons, all under school age. A heart attack is thought to have been the cause. Mr. Troop was prominent in Masonic circles and was for some years an enthusiastic member of Cobourg Lawn Bowling Club. He was a member of Trinity Church where he was a faithful usher for years and official member. A son of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Troop, he was a life-long resident and held the esteem of citizens generally in a high degree. A brother, Dewitt Troop, and two sisters, Misses Grace and Annie Troop, reside here, and a brother, Captain W. J. Troop at Colborne.

The late Mr. Troop was well known in Belleville where for years past he had visited with the Cobourg lawn-bowlers and curlers.

LATE LUKE GLOVER

BELIEVE OWL KILLS PIGEONS IN HALL TOWER

Scores of homeless pigeons, whose wings once fluttered and beat around the projecting gables of the city hall tower have silently disappeared from their usual haunts within the past few weeks, and a blood-thirsty little owl, that has been making his home in the downtown section of the city during the winter is believed to be the reason.

More than a score of times in the past few weeks the chunky little killer has been seen flitting on silent wings through the darkened belfries of the city hall tower, and with swift, darting swoops pouncing into the corners after his huddled prey. More than a few times he has been seen to reappear in flight again with the limp body of some other bird dangling from the curved beak.

By night the owl haunts the darkened streets of the city, a keen eye on the watch for mice and rats. Noiseless as the night wind he pounces swiftly and surely on the rodents and bearing with him on the upswoop his prey. At dusk he flits from gable to gable around the old city hall and adjoining buildings feasting merrily on the sparrows and pigeons which huddle unsuspectingly in the little corners. At dawn he is back to his home in the dark recesses of an opened eave on a Bridge Street building. When the sun shines he reappears for a morning sunbath and then disappears again later in the day for his nap. Businessmen along the street have become used to the appearance of the big-eyed bird and have watched for his morning appearance in front of his door.

EXPLANATION AS TO ROOMS

An omission in an account of the Belleville Liberal Club at home held in this city on Monday evening was pointed out by Mr. T. V. Scanlan of this city, Grand Knight of Belleville Council Knights of Columbus. It was stated in Tuesday's issue of the Daily Ontario Intelligencer that the Front Street clubrooms of the Knights had been offered the Liberal executive committee to care for the huge overflow in the Liberal quarters. This was denied today by Grand Knight Scanlan.

"Some of the members of the Council may have offered the club rooms, but they had no authority to do so. The hall was afterwards refused when permission was sought by the Liberal Club.", pointed out Mr. Scanlan.

Executive of the Belleville Liberal Club on Monday evening had pointed out the generosity of the Knights of Columbus in offering their rooms, which they said they were unable to use owing to lack of tables and chairs for card players.

Successful Euchre And Bridge Held at St Peter's Parish Hall

Trenton, February 16 (Special)—The most successful and delightful weekly card party of the season was held in St. Peter's School Auditorium on Monday evening by the Golden Jubilee group of the Children of Mary. Forty tables of auction, contract and euchre were in play. The decorative scheme was carried out in the spirit of St. Valentine. The contract bridge was in charge of Mrs. C. W. Fitzpatrick who was also convenor for the evening. The auction bridge was capably handled by Mrs. George Shoniker while Mrs. Amadie Lamore looked after the euchre.

The following were the winners of the evening: Ladies' contract, Mrs. T. Spear; gentlemen's contract, Max Waldorf. Ladies' auction, Mrs. Louis Lamore; gentlemen's auction, Mr. Howard. Ladies' euchre, Miss Mary Johnson; gentlemen's euchre, Ed Allore Sr.

The season's prize for contract was won by Mr. C. Wilfred Fitzpatrick; auction, Miss Olive O'Connor; euchre, Mr. Ed Allore Sr. The door prize was won by Mrs. J. Anderson.

After the cards refreshments were served by the following ladies: Mrs. J. Cole, Miss Winnifred Connelly, Mrs. E. P. McDonald, Mrs. W. Allore, Mrs. Pfeifer and Mrs. Bernice White.

Bay Soundings Being Taken

Three government engineers, under Mr. Trudell, of Ottawa, and about twenty local workmen have been busy for the past two weeks taking soundings of the Trenton harbor and channel up the Bay of Quinte from Nigger Island, a distance of over four miles.

Every fifty feet along the route the soundings are taken every twenty-five feet with a width of from three to five hundred feet. The deepest part reached has been thirteen feet but most generally the depth is under this amount.

The local workmen are cutting the holes in the ice with axes as deep as possible with others using an ice spud to get below the ice which runs as high as twenty-two inches thick.

These depths are recorded for dredging plans which will likely be carried out this coming summer.

Madoc Defeats Local Pucksters

George LaBrash took his hockey players to Madoc last evening for an exhibition game with the northerners winning 8-4. Led by "Buck" Hulin in goal, for the first time this season, and Akey's performance on the front line, the locals never were on top. George renewed many old acquaintances while Norm Johnson was feeling at home as he was Madoc's star performer a few years ago in the old Trent Valley League. "Sunfish" Anderson netted Trenton's first counter. John still packs 'em in after a decade as a hockey player. The locals didn't seem to have the spirit to play and many were nursing the sore spots after the Trenton- Belleville playoffs. A return game is scheduled for Trenton in the near future which will be entirely different.

Madoc—Goal, Hulin; defense, West and Whytock; centre, Henderson; wings, Blue and Akey; alternates, Emery, Alexander and Armstrong.

Referee—J. Watson, Madoc.

LOST HOPE — BUT INDIGESTION ENDED

By English Specialist's Formula

"It seems almost beyond belief," writes a Nottinghamshire man who had suffered for eight years with acute indigestion, "that for a paltry sum I had rid myself of such a terrible and painful complaint."

It was the formula of a London, England, Stomach Specialist, who has been studying and treating stomach ills for many years, that led to this remarkable recovery—a formula that is being used with great success in many English hospitals.

This formula, recently made available to Canadians following the attainment of huge sales in England, is known as Maclean Brand Stomach Powder. Sufferers from Acidity, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Heartburn, Flatulence, Gastritis and stomach troubles generally, will find this powder a great help in ending pain and distress.

Ask your druggist for Maclean Brand Stomach Powder. It is sold in bottles, (powder or tablets), at 75¢, but never loose. To get the genuine, look for the signature, "Alex. C. Maclean." Sole Canadian distributors, Rigo Agencies, Toronto.

ANGLERS SUGGEST ADVISORY BOARD

Problem of Angler and Farmer Could Then Be Solved

Toronto, Feb. 16.—(CP)—The problem of the farmer and the fishermen would be placed in the hands of an advisory board or council if the Ontario Government accepts the suggestino for formation of such a body made by the Ontario Federation of Anglers. Delegates to the Federation's annual convention yesterday spent much time in discussing charges made by farmers when fishermen wished to fish in streams on their properties, restocked by Government spawn.

Delegates declared they had been forced to pay fees on numerous farms during a fishing expedition, making the trip a great expense. It was admitted some fishermen damaged fences and crops but the fact that every farmer charged a fee for the right of wading up a stream on his farm made fishing a costly sport.

ASSISTANCE FOR RELIEF WORK CEASES MAR. 1

37 More Working Days and Island Project Two Thirds Completed

With only 37 work days remaining during which time governmental assistance will be given the city on the relief project, a rough calculation made today by city engineer, Chas. A. Mott disclosed the fact, that excavation work on Zwick's Island under the improvement scheme is just about two thirds completed. Other work which remains to be carried out before the scheme is completed would keep a complete force of workers busily engaged throughout the summer. This work includes final grading, planting of shrubbery under a plan specified by a landscape artist, the gravelling of roads and kindred operations. This latter work, it is pointed out, must be carried on by the city with no help from the Dominion of Provincial governments. Assistance to municipalities, which has been given all winter under the two-thirds ratio will be discontinued after March 1st.

Simple Rules for LOSING FAT

Common sense will do far more for you than any so-called system for taking off unhealthy extra fat. Just live sensibly. You don't need to starve yourself. Eat enough to satisfy the demands of your body, but just be careful not to eat so many sweet, starchy foods, such as potatoes, sweet desserts, fat meats, etc. And, above all, be sure of complete elimination of body wastes.

Don't just take it for granted that there's nothing wrong with your eliminative system because your habits are regular. Regularity deceives thousands who, if they only realized it, could enjoy perfect health and proper weight all the time.

Once or twice each week enjoy a bracing, sparkling glass of Andrews Liver Salt. Andrews will help Nature to effect complete elimination, and so will help your body to throw off unwanted and unhealthful weight.

The occasional sparkling glass of Andrews Liver Salt will purify and invigorate your whole system and ward off the "little ills". It will prevent those days of heavy body [illegible] and periodic attacks of headaches and indigestion. And it will help Nature bring you down to your proper weight.

Try this common-sense way to get rid of [illegible] fat. Eat moderately and take Andrews occasionally. Ask your druggist for Andrews Liver Salt. In tins, 35c and [illegible]. New large bottle, 75c. Sole Agents: John A. Huston Co., Ltd., Toronto. 6

REVIEW of BOOKS

PIRATES OF VENUS, by Edgar Rice Burroughs; Edgar Rice Burroughs, Inc., $2. This new novel from the pen of Edgar Rice Burroughs, we are told, is the first of a new series of stories to be written based on the planet Venus. It is just as thrilling and spellbinding as the author's other works written around the fictional heroes, Tarzan of the Apes, and John Carter of Mars.

PIRATES OF VENUS is the story of Carson Napier, a young and enthusiastic inventor, who decided to visit Mars on a giant rocket torpedo of his own design, but is forced to land on Venus after a perilous flight. He is captured by a strange race, the Vepajans, who inhabit the planet. Napier makes friends with his captors and learns to speak the language of Venus.

After some months on the planet he falls in love with a beautiful girl whom he rescues from a band of Thorists, criminal revolutionists who wage war on the Vepajans. Napier goes on a hunting expedition with a Vepajan named Kamlot. They are kidnapped by Klangan (bird-men), who carry them off to a ship where they are held prisoners by Thorists. Kamlot is very upset to learn that a number of Vepajan women have been kidnapped and taken aboard another Thorist vessel. His chief concern is for a girl named Duare.

Napier engineers a mutiny, and the men take possession of the vessel. They then go in pursuit of the companion ship, the Sovong, and rescue the Vepajan women captives. Napier discovers that Duare is the girl whom he rescued from Thorist kidnappers in Vepaja. He tells Kamlot that he loves Duare and intends to marry her, but is informed that this is impossible as she is the daughter of the Jong of Vepaja.

The Sofal captures another ship, and a high Thorist official named Moosko is taken prisoner. Moosko plots with a Thorist spy named Vilor, and with the aid of the bird-men they kidnap Duare and fly to the shore. Napier is on deck giving orders for the Sofal to go in pursuit of the fugitives when a huge wave sweeps him overboard—the rest, well it would be spoiling a mighty good story were we to tell you.

Whatever your age, sex, or literary taste, you cannot fail to respond to the glamor of this super-thriller.

LETTER FROM INDIA

Another interesting letter has been received from Mrs. F. F. Miller, India.

"Peshawar, January 20th., 1934.

"So far we have escaped the extremely cold weather you have had, or are having in Canada, though it has been quite cold some days, with heavy frost at night. Not a sign of snow here but there is plenty at Srinagar and Gulmarg. Occasionally we have a really warm day and can sit out on the lawn from eleven a.m. until four p.m. with comfort. After that one is glad to come into the drawing room and have tea by the grate fire.

It is ages, I know, since I have written. In fact, I've travelled a long way on the road of good intentions the last few months and it will take me some time to catch up with my correspondence and "thank you" letters.

There has been very little going on here except dinners, teas and luncheons. About a week before Christmas there was an extra large parade of the troops. General Sir Philip Chelwoode, Commander-in-Chief of the army in India, took the salute. It was a wonderfully warm day and we sat out in the open in most comfortable chesterfields to watch it. The march past was held on the road so the whippet tanks and armoured cars were out in full force. It was the first time I'd ever seen either. The General, I believe, was well pleased.

New Year's Parade

The annual New Year's parade took place on the first, of course. Everyone turned out to see that, also We all went to the horse-show, two days before Christmas. Our Christmas Day was very like last year's; all meeting for Chota-Hazerie in the drawing-room at six-thirty, then emptied our stockings (which hung by the chimney with care) had our real presents from the big tree and gave the servants theirs. We had a real Hazerie while still in our kimonas. Then we dressed and went to the Anglican church service at 10:30. Any number of people came between twelve and one to wish us the compliments of the season. In the afternoon we went to a large tea.

Miles and his wife left December 28th for Belgamur, South India, where he is attending the Senior Officers' School for a three months' course he has to take before becoming a Lt.-Colonel in 1935. They motored in the Duchess, taking the chauffeur and leaving Betty, the Ford, here for me, with the orderly to drive. Miles' bearer went by train with the luggage. As they will be there so long they had to take bedding, curtains, chota-Hazerie set and their personal effects for cold and hot weather. They motored as far as Delhi together, Miles going on to Belgamur and his wife visiting friends all along the line. She was the guest of the Maharaja of Idepor and the Begam of Bopah in Bombay. At Allahabad a state elephant was arranged for her to see the famous wells (the bathing pilgrims) early one morning. It was a wonderful sight. It was very hot in Bombay, cooler in Belgamur, but not cool enough at night to need a blanket on one's bed.

I, of course, am in full charge here and I think at the end of three months I'll be quite competent to be head manageress of an hotel or at least a private house with any number of servants (Indians preferred.) All the Mohammedan servants have been on a forty-day fast. They have one meal at 4.00 a.m. and not even a drink of water between that and the next morning at 4.00. All except two are Mohammedans. The Ayah is a Madrassi Hindu and the Khansama a Buddist. There are fourteen servants here now. The fast ended Tuesday night, they having seen the moon that night. All went to their mosque next morning at 8.00 o'clock. As I had visitors it was rather awkard having the Khansama wait on table. He's young and had never done it before and was terribly nervous. The Kitmagar and second man had everything ready before they went and all were back and everything working like clock-work at tiffin time. The Nols' day seems to be like our Christmas and is called "Id". Last night there was general feasting but, as the Mohammedans don't drink anything intoxicating, there were no "hang-overs", next morning. All the same I'm glad the fast is over. Some of them had grown very thin and their brains seem to be torpid while the fast is on.

Capt. and Mrs. Rhys-Pryce were with us the first three weeks after Christmas They are stationed at the Staff College at Quetta, where it is even colder than it is here. He is the son of Gen. Sir Henry Rhys-Pryce, who has just landed a very "cushy" job in Delhi. I did enjoy having the Captain and his wife here. We went to Peshawar City one day, taking the orderly with us to look after the car while we walked around through the bazaars. There's a wonderful native silk show and while we were in it six fakirs appeared from the back. They are holy men and these were very different from others I'd seen; they had plenty of clothes on (if the rags they wore could be called clothes), but their coal-black hair was in a terrible mat on the top of their heads with long thin braids hanging down. Each one carried a metal begging bowl but did not stop to ask for alms— I was thankful. They had villainous faces though I expect they were as meek as lambs. One cannot take in all the streets at one visit Each street has a certain thing to sell—slippers, and shoes, pottery, fancy wooden bowls, native-made silver jewelry, rugs, brassware, fruits, etc—each has its own street or streets. Captain and Mrs. Pryce took several other trips to the Kyber, etc., where I'd been before. One most interesting trip I took with them was to Shabkurder Fort, which is the nearest fort to Gulmal where the fight was last summer. No person is allowed beyond the fort unless on military business, as it is tribal territory. I was quite disappointed as I'd hoped the ban would have been lifted by now. I'd been to the fort before but Commander Wood was not there and we could not go over it. This time we were more fortunate and he took us all over and had a wonderful view of the surrounding country. We were invited to go to the top of a very high, round tower but contented ourselves in seeing it all from the top of a quite high building with a good, flat roof. We had taken tiffin with us from here and ate it on the bank of the Indian River with a very dilapidated ruin of a fort as a background.

I had a large formal dinner for the Rhys-Pryces and for Col. Yule from Rawal-Puidi, who was staying with friends of ours. The Pryces left last Saturday and on the following Tuesday Major and Mrs. Talbot and their small son arrived, and left on Thursday. They are the cousins with whom I travelled from Montreal to Bombay. They've been stationed at Secunderabad and the Major has been transferred to Kasmark. (?) It is a very wild part of the frontier and no wives or children are allowed, so they stay at Bannu at a very nice camp, and are called the "abandoned wives". Mrs. Talbot's parents live in Shediac, N.B., of which many of you have frequently heard. You can imagine how we talked.

For the first time since coming to India we have had merchants from Thibet come to the bungalow with all sorts of odd things to sell: rings of silver or brass, set with different stones, mostly coral or turquoise—these two and carnelians are all found in Thibet, but are not as good as those from some other countries—still they are real and very reasonable. They also have small brass articles, beads of odd shapes, etc. The first one to come was a woman, the first I'd ever seen from Thibet. She was dressed like poorer class in the bazaar, but on her head wore a cap, cloth top, embroidered in gold thread and the brim had sections of dark fur and her black hair standing in bunches between the sections of her cap brim. She was loaded with jewelry, most of which she refused to sell; she told the Ayah her husband had given them to her. Immense earrings of silver and turquoise, a silver and turquoise pendant, at least three inches square, heavy silver bracelets and any number of silver and brass rings. I bought a string of very odd beads from her and an extremely odd brass ring set with turquoise, from a man from Thibet, who came later. They had very odd perfume bottles painted, in some way, inside the bottle and showing very clearly through the glass. Now these have found their way down we will likely have many more come as I'm sure they tell each other where to go.

There are all sorts of rumors going around the cantonment, regarding there being another war on towards next Fall. Nothing definite, but all the officers are planning to take their short leave early in the Spring, and those promised long leave are wondering if it will be stopped. One rumor said no long leave would be granted out of India this year, but no one seems to think that at all likely. However, all may be just rumors, though no one knows from one day till the next what the savage tribes will be up to.

I must stop now as I've reached the limit for air mail and having only enough stamps for single postage—the P.O. being closed tomorrow—and mail going out to-morrow night, I don't want to risk your not getting this letter."

PRESENTATION TO MISS RUTLEDGE

The February meeting of the Bethel W.M.S. Auxiliary was held at the home of Miss Rutledge on Thursday afternoon. The President Mrs. J. H. Foster opened the meeting. A poem "The world for Christ" was read. Scripture lesson was read by Mrs. S. Webb and the Devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. J. H. Foster. Mrs. Herrington gave a short talk on the Missionary Monthly, urging an increase in the subscriptions. A pleasing feature of the afternoon was a presentation to the hostess.

Mrs. Grills read the following address, Mrs. P. Blakely made the presentation.

Miss Annie Rutledge,
Dear Miss Rutledge:

It is with mingled feeling of pleasure and regret that we have assembled at your home today for our February Auxiliary meeting, pleasure because of the privilege of accepting your hospitality and enjoying your companionship in one more meeting; and regret because of the realization that this is probably the last meeting at which you will be with us since your are about to take up your abode in another community.

We realize that your departure will mean so serious a loss to our Auxiliary. For many years you served faithfully as a capable member of the Executive. We shall miss your cheerful assistance in our work, your ready response to requests for musical numbers on our programmes and your willing services in connection with our social activities.

Therefore before we leave today we wish to express to your our deep regrets at your removal from our midst and to leave with you some tangible reminder of your associations with us. So we would ask you to accept this purse with the hope that it may always serve to recall pleasant memories of your W.M.S. associates at Bethel.

We would assure you that you will carry with you our very best wishes for your future and we earnestly trust that a kindly Providence may ever surround you with His richest blessings. While we bid farewell we remember that "There is no separation tho' far apart

'Twixt friend and friend"

Signed on behalf of Bethel Auxiliary Mrs. J. H. Foster, Pres., Mrs. M. Grills, Cor. Sec.
Feb. 8th, 1934.

Miss Rutledge responded in a few well chosen words.

Rev. H. B. Herrington closed with prayer. At the close of the meeting a dainty lunch was served and a collection taken in aid of the flower fund. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered to Miss Rutledge for her kind hospitality.

MISS MAY LEE IS HONORED

Thomasburg.—About thirty members of the congregation of Thomasburg United Church met on Saturday evening, February 10, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Lee in the form of a surprise party in honour of their daughter May, who is the organist of the church. The following address was read by Mrs. Adams, and May was presented with a beautiful Aladdin lamp in recognition of her faithful services for the past number of years.

Melburne Adams.

Miss Lee though taken by surprise made a very suitable reply thanking those present for their kind rememberance and useful gift. The remainder of the evening was spent in a social way. Lunch was served and the party was brought to a close about twelve o'clock.

Owing to the extreme cold weather the party on Thursday evening under the auspices of Roslin Parish A.Y.P.A. was poorly attended but a very enjoyable time was had by those present.

Rev. P. C. Beazer and Mrs. Beazer of Roslin and Mr. and Mrs. E. Carter and Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Morton and Miss Isobel Beatty were guests of Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Prindle on Wednesday evening.

HAPPILY WED FOR 50 YEARS

Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Sullivan Entertained on Joyous Occasion

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Sullivan, well-known residents of this city for the past twenty years, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary at their home on Victoria Avenue on Tuesday entertaining at a reception for their friends and relatives. Over one hundred guests visited their home and letters and telegrams were received from distant friends expressing the congratulations and good wishes for the continued happiness of the bride and groom of fifty years.

Colourful and fragrant Spring flowers, which bore greetings from friends made a charming setting for the social function of the afternoon and evening. The door was opened by little Miss Ruth Morden. Miss F. Sullivan received for her parents, and the guests were invited to tea by Mrs. K. M. Dyson of Toronto, also a daughter. The tea table with its lovely flowers and its huge wedding cake on which was a golden ladder with a miniature bride and groom poised on the top rung was very effectively arranged. Mrs. H. J. Clarke poured tea. Those who assisted in the serving were Mis. G. McGee, Mrs. D. Cowain, Mrs. H. Farrar, Miss Olive Elson and Miss Bessie Ketcheson.

Guests had a happy time chatting with their host and hostess with whom the years have dealt kindly. Mrs. Sullivan is seventy-two years of age and Mr. Sullivan is enjoying perfect health at seventy-five. Born in Thurlow Township, the former is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Edward Collins, while Mr. Sullivan is a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. D. Sullivan also of Thurlow. The happy couple were married in their native township on February 13th, 1884, Rev. Mr. Bell performing the ceremony. Mrs. K. M. Dyson of Toronto and Miss Frances Sullivan are daughters.

Since their coming to Belleville twenty years ago, Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan have been highly esteemed citizens of the community and the hosts of friends, who made of their reception the opportunity for friendly calls testify to their well-deserved popularity.

AS ACE BAILEY GREETED EDDIE SHORE

Fourteen thousand Toronto hockey fans, who paid $20,000 for their seats, rose to their feet at Maple Leaf Gardens, Toronto, and literally rent the air with cheers as Ace Bailey, popular Leaf star, whose hockey career came to an end as a result of injuries received in collision with Eddie Shore, welcomed the Boston star with a handshake, and presented him with mementos of the great occasion. The occasion was the Bailey benefit game between the Toronto Maple Leafs and a picked team of N.H.L. All-Stars—a team such as has never been gathered together. Above shows the most dramatic moment of the game. Would Toronto fans give Shore the well-known "bird", or would they cheer. They showed their sportsmanship by cheering Shore to the echo—and no cheer was ever more welcomed by a player than by Eddie Shore at that moment. At LEFT is Shore, at RIGHT is Bailey, glasses and all.

PRODUCE PRICES IN MONTREAL

Prices steadied at the week's slight reactions on the local egg market yesterday. If anything there was a slightly firmer tone, as receipts were under those of the same day last week, being 1,193 cases and 1,469 cases respectively and there was a good out-of-town inquiry. The general wholesale market for graded shipments in l.c.l. lots were quoted 39c for A-large, 37c for A-medium, and 36c for A-pullets, with some small sales reported 1c higher on the first two grades.

The butter market was steady at unchanged levels, the general market for No. 1 being 27c per lbs., with some Quebecs in l.c.l. lots selling up to 27 1-4, and some westerns reported available at 26 3-4c per lbs. Receipts, 790 boxes.

The cheese market was steady at 10 3-4c to 11c per lb. for No. 1. Receipts 45 boxes. The potato market was quoted $1 to $1.15 per 80-lb bags.

Livestock

Toronto, Feb. 16—(CP)—Receipts on most classes of livestock on the Toronto Livestock Market this week were lighter than the previous week's supply, due to bad roads in some parts of the country, and allowed a good clean up at the close. Prices swung upward with gains ranging from 15 cents on hogs to 50 cents per hundred-weight on veal calves.

The cattle division was active during the week with good clean-ups each day. Prices on steers and butcher cattle gained 25c while butcher cows sold 25c to 35 per cwt. higher than last week's closing level. Milker and springer trade was dull owing to the absence of outside buyers.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 16.—(CP)— Oil stocks were given a whirl in the morning session of the Industrial section Toronto Stock Exchange today and other strong groups were the Metal, Distillery and Utility Shares. Volume was heavy in Smelters, Nickel, Imperial Oil, Walker's Common, Ford A and International Pete.

Consolidated Smelters was taken in more than usual quantities and the price advanced to 142 and was holding at 140 1-2 at noon for a gain of nearly 2 points. Nickel held a gain of a few cents and Brazilian held a small gain at 13 5-8. Ford A made no headway in good turnover, holding at 23 3-4. In the Distillery Group, Walker's common had gain of 3-4 at 47 1-2, Industrial Alcohol 1-4 at 16 3-4 and Distillers Seagram 1-4 at 21 1-4. Brewers and Distillers gained 5 to 2.55.

The Industrial Board staged a strong market today, aided by a buoyant tone on the New York Exchange. Oil, Distillery and Metal Shares were active and higher with exception of International Nickel which recorded no change of importance in the first three hours of trading.

Consolidated Smelters was a market feature, jumping 11 1-2 points to 150 on the heaviest turnover the stock has had in 7 months.

Walker's common, Industrial Alcohol and Distillers Seagram were narrowly higher this afternoon.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Feb. 16—(CP)—Interest centred in the big gold stocks today and prices moved ahead sharply on the mining board of the Toronto Stock Exchange. Gains up to $1.50 were registered in the group. Base Metals were firm also.

Dome and McIntyre took the lead, turning over in heavy volume, the former $37, up 1.15 and the latter at $42, up 1.50. Lake Shore sold at $46 for a gain of 60 cents, Teck was up 5 cents to 5.80, Wright Hargreaves 10 at 7.20, Pioneer 25 cents at 11.75 and Hollinger at 13.70, up 20 cents.

Narrow gains were registered in the gold. Hudson Bay, Sudbury Basin, Sherrit Gordon, Noranda and Base Metals Corporation. Noranda was active at an advance of 25 cents to 35.75.

The mining board moved under a full head of steam today, turning over 1,800,000 shares in the first three hours. Gold stocks of the high-priced group took the lead in the early session and afternoon the silver and base metal shares jumped to the front.

Early gains up to $1.50 were registered for the gold leaders including McIntyre, Dome and Lake Shore while smaller advances were boarded for Teck Hughes, Wright Hargreaves, Pioneer and Hollinger. In the medium-priced group Sylvanite was out in front with an early gain of 8 cents.

WALL STREET FINANCIAL

New York, Feb. 16 (CP)— Wall Street appeared to be a diverse thoroughfare today with most of the traffic moving discreetly ahead in the face of official red light profit-taking signals and cautious detours. Bonds continued to advance.

Improved sentiment was attributed largely to the growing belief that the United States Stock Exchange Control Bill will have some of its teeth drawn before it becomes a watchdog of the trading arena.

Aside from strength in Dome and McIntyre, Canadian stocks generally showed narrow changes. Canadian Pacific and International Nickel were a bit improved. On the Curb Lake Shore added a minor fraction while Hiram Walker got up a point. Canadian Government is edged a trifle higher. The Canadian dollar was 1-16 of a cent lower at 99.06 1-4 cents.

Stocks were not too buoyant and the trading volume was a bit smaller than yesterday. Chrysler, however, made a new high since 1929, with a gain of about a point, and a number of others attained peaks for the past year or more. Armour preferred got up 4 points and the common gained 1. Standard Oils of New Jersey and California, Atlantic refining and Seaboard stepped up a point or more.

SEVEN YEARS FOR ROBBERY

Toronto, Feb. 16—Convicted of three charges of armed robbery and one of assault with intent to rob, John Brown, 18, today was sentenced by Mr. Justice G. F. McFarland to seven years in penitentiary.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL

"From Headquarters"

and

"Jackie Cooper"

George Brent, who plays his second detective story lead in Warner Bros.' picture, "From Headquarters," now at the Capitol Theatre, knows all about detectives from experience.

As a young dispatch carrier for Michael Collins, Irish revolutionary leader, shortly after the World War, Brent had a price put on his head by the British Government and Scotland Yard was put on his trail.

In "From Headquarters," however, he is the pursuer instead of the pursued. He plays the part of a highly intelligent and efficient police officer who solves crime by the most modern scientific methods. The screen play by Robert N. Lee and Peter Milne, based on Lee's story, is a thrilling and baffling mystery of a double murder, one of which is committed under the very noses of the police at headquarters.

Jackie Cooper is starred in Paramount's "Lone Cowboy," the film suggested by Will James' famous book of the same name. In the cast are Lila Lee, Addison Richards, John Wray and Gavin Gordon.

Jackie plays the role of Scooter O'Neal, brought up in Chicago and sent west to a ranch by his father when the latter faces arrest. Scooter is hardly on his way when the father commits suicide.

The boy reaches the ranch and is met by 'Dobe Jones, the "lone cowboy." The man doesn't want the boy, but when he hears of the suicide, he cannot bring himself to send the youngster back to an orphan asylum.

Scooter learns that 'Dobe's wife has run away with Jim Weston and that 'Dobe's aim in life now is to find them and kill Jim. Scooter tries to argue with 'Dobe about this and, in his anger, the man tells the boy of his father's suicide.

The boy's grief endears him to 'Dobe, who promises not to seek his revenge. He finds Jim and Eleanor to tell them that he will not molest them, but Jim, fearing a trap, reaches for his rifle. 'Dobe returns the fire, wounding Scooter, then fires again killing Jim. It is 'Dobe's love for the boy that finally brings him peace and happiness and saves him from the justice that threatens to send him to the gallows.

Saturday only, "The Whispering Shadow."

AT THE BELLE

"Flying Down To Rio"

Novelties....sheer, shimmering, thrilling novelties, are the rule rather than the exception in the gorgeous musical extravaganza, "Flying Down to Rio", and the chap who said "there is nothing new under the sun" is dead wrong. First, the story starts out with handsome Gene Raymond darting about the country in a "flying piano" (it flies too) seeking secluded spots to compose harmony for his band.

Then he takes his outfit, by air, to beautiful Rio de Janiero, where he is scheduled to open up a new hotel with a big musical show.

He falls in love with the owner's daughter, Dolores Del Rio, and a rivalry for her hand is begun between himself and handsome Raul Roulien, a native Brazilian.

They engage in a musical duel, American melodies vieing with native ones for a supremacy, while tango dancers go quite mad with their convolutions. Such music you've never seen....the marimbola upon which the player sits while he plays, the violao, the cavaquinho and the chocalho.

Finally the villains attempt to break up the romance by getting out an injunction preventing Raymond from putting on his show. When this threatens to break the heroine's father, Raymond saves the day by taking his 200 beauties and his band aloft, where they stage the first aerial musical show in the history of the world!

And what a show..girls dancing on the wings of planes, girls doing aerial aquaplaning (a real thriller), ballet girls dancing on nothing but air as they flutter to earth in parachutes, girls being tossed from plane to plane by adagio dancers and many other dizzying, thrilling and entertaining stunts.

Screen Souvenirs with its interesting and amusing events of yesteryear, Mickey Mouse in a clever Kartune "Giant Land" and the popular Belle News will also be presented. The further adventures of "The Three Musketeers" will be exhibited at the Saturday matinee performance.

"Gallant Lady" Tonight

NOTED HUNTER CELEBRATES HIS 71ST BIRTHDAY

David McGarvey, Marmora, Recalls Old Days in North

Marmora (Special)—Celebrating his 71st birthday quietly at his home on Tuesday, David Bellford McGarvey, noted hunter of bygone days, was in reminiscent mood as a party of relatives and friends gathered there in the evening to do him honour.

"As my birthdays used to come around, I often heard my mother remark that 'it was a rough and snowy day when I was born'," was Dave's preface for another of those talks on olden times which he delights in giving. He is the oldest surviving son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Matthew McGarvey who were pioneer settlers in that section of North Marmora known as Shanick.

It was in that homestead which his father, of Irish birth, had built on his cleared land, that Dave first saw the light of day. What schooling he had he travelled for miles to receive. The first pay he ever earned was cutting hay for the late Richard Neal. Asked when he first handled a gun, he remarked, "I couldn't properly hold up a gun when I first started shooting partridge around my home. When I was twelve years of age I got my first deer. It was harvest time and the deer was feeding in the grain field and it was an easy mark for the old shot-gun which I used. At one time I shot four deer with four successive shots within the space of a minute. I came across them east of our home."

"Did you ever shoot a deer that was exceptional in any way?" he was asked.

"Yes, there was one and he was what they called a swamp buck. He was very black, short-legged, and short-bodied, but heavily built. I don't know everything about the animals of the woods but I can claim to understand the nature of a deer; they can be very cunning."

How about the first bear you bagged?" was the next query.

"I was about sixteen at the time I got him practically in the same field where I shot my first deer. He was eating oats and it only took two shots to fix him. I have killed a lot of bears but never kept a record of how many. The one that gave me the most trouble took seven shots, with the sixth I broke his back. I came across him four miles from home and drove him in that direction till he fell exhausted.

"The wolf is the only animal that I have never killed yet." As to the best hunter he ever met he quickly replied, "Sanford Lawrence; he is a real man for the woods." Dave did his first river driving at the age of fifteen, following the life for thirty-six years, until he sustained a broken leg. Later he worked as a carpenter, having learned much of the art from his father who in the land of his birth had been a cooper. His father was also a good shingle-maker. At the time flour was $10.00 a barrel he could earn four dollars a day.

At his birthday party, Dave was the recipient of many useful presents. Cards and dancing were among the delights of the evening and refreshments were served.

The A.Y.P.A. of St. Paul's held a skating party on the rink Tuesday evening and returned to the White Hall for supper and a social hour.

THAT "LIKE THE DICKENS" FEELING IS LIVER

Wake Up Your Liver Bile. Feel Fit. You Needn't use Calomel To Do It.

It's your liver, failing to pour out the vital two pounds of bile, daily, into your bowels, that makes you feel so off-colour.

Lack of bile means poor digestion. Food stays too long in your bowels and decays. Your system is poisoned. You go through the misery of gas, bloating, pain, heartburn. You have a dark brown abominable taste in your mouth and bad breath. Your skin's unhealthy and often your head aches. Your whole system seems out of kilter.

How can you reasonably expect to clear up a condition like this by merely taking salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum, or roughage? These only move the bowels, and that's not enough. You must wake up your liver bile.

Avoid calomel (mercury). Take Carter's Little Liver Pills. They're purely vegetable, gentle, sure and safe. They'll make you feel a hundred per cent better in a very short time.

Don't waste your money on substitutes. Be definite. Ask for Carter's by name—and get them! Look for the name, Carter's, on the red label. 25c, at all druggists. 40

OWLS FLY IN COLDWEATHER

No One Can Give Reason Says Curator of The Zoo

A hungry little owl, whose home for the past month or so has been in the vacant gable of an East Bridge Street business house, and whose bloodthirsty raids into the flocks of the city hall pigeons during the past few weeks has resulted in a noticeable scarcity of the birds, has broken into newsprint frequently lately. But he is not alone in newspaper mention. Other owls have been sighted in the city. An unusual number of them have been abroad. But Belleville is not alone in this. The hungry birds have been unusually plentiful here and in cities south of the border. Lee Crandall, curator of birds at the New York Zoological Park, reports having had many a telephone call from people about an owl—on the fire escape, in the bedroom, in the trees out back, in the cellar, or somewhere else where they shouldn't be. He says there's a reason.

"This," said the curator, "is one of the years, when the owls are flying. Don't ask me why; nobody knows. It just happens some years, and this is one of them. It isn't a migration because the owls stick pretty close to home."

"Some years ago, when we had that cold weather—1926 wasn't it?—we got a lot of snowy owls down here. They came from the Arctic region, and the Bronx is a long way from home."

"This year most of our calls are about barred owls and screech owls. That means they're not coming from the very far north, but still they're not our local owls. The ones around here, you see, already have their pitches. But owls flying over are different. They're likely to drop down anywhere."

ASSAULT-AT-ARMS

Toronto, Feb. 16—(CP)—A close tournament is predicted for tonight and Saturday when the intercollegiate assault-at-arms is held at Hart House, University of Toronto. Full entries have been made from Varsity, McGill and Queens and draws for the preliminary bouts which began tonight will be made this afternoon.

The McGill contingent includes R. Quinn, Pacific coast welterweight champion, and George Maughan, Canadian heavyweight champion on whom coach Bert Light counts for sure points. The Queen's boxing team will include Merv. Peever, holder of the intercollegiate 145-pound class, and Jack Ewe, former McGill fighter, in the 135-pound class.

Grant Baker, who represented Queen's in the 118-pound class last year, and Jim Peters, 175-pounder, also will battle for Queens. The wrestlers mostly will be newcomers with the exception of Ralph Miller, intercollegiate heavyweight champion three years ago, who again will battle in the heavy ranks.

The Varsity boxing team will probably be weakened by the loss of Fearman, light heavyweight, due to illness in his family. "Hod" Stewart, football and sprinting star, is being groomed to replace him. Fred Smith, intercollegiate bantam weight champion, and McCatty, flyweight, are among the best boxing entries coach Dr. Les Black has to offer.

DOUBTS TRUTH OF MESSAGE

Woman Will However go to Chicago to Make Sure

Springfield, Ont., Feb. 16—(CP)—Although Jean Crandall doubts reports she has been left $69,000 by her grandmother she intends going to Chicago tomorrow to collect the money or find out she has been the victim of a hoax.

The handsome dark-eyed girl masqueraded as a hired man until a telegram purporting to come from a Chicago firm of lawyers informed her yesterday that her grandmother "Madame Dickinson" had left her the fortune.

Today 27-year-old Mrs. Crandall, a widow, said information she had received had raised a doubt in her mind that the message was true. Word from Chicago was that no firm of the name signed to the telegram could be located.

Mrs. Crandall, who was born in El Paso, Texas, and has worked on farms in Western Canada and Ontario, said she would leave tomorrow for Chicago. The telegram she received said the will would be probated Feb. 20.

Although she had met her father's mother several times years ago, the "hired man" could not remember her supposed benefactor's christian names. Her father, a Hawaiian, had been dead for some years, she said.

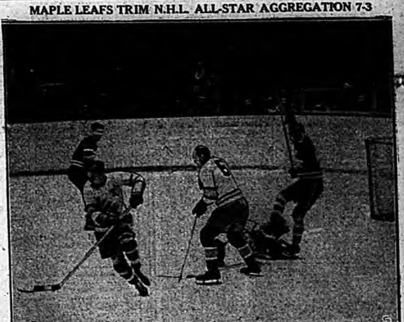
PLANES COLLIDE

Tokyo, Feb. 16—(AP)—Two officers in the Japanese aviation service were killed today when two army planes attached to the Kagamigahara air base collided in mid-air near Nagoya. This was the second serious army aeroplane accident in two days.

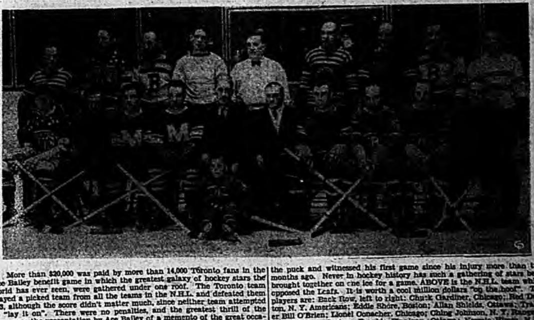
Yesterday two officers and three soldiers were killed when a bombing plane crashed and burned near the Hamamatsu flying field.

MAPLE LEAFS TRIM N.H.L. ALL-STAR AGGREGATION 7-3



Action at the Toronto Leaf-All-Star Bailey benefit game was incidental to the appearance of Ace Bailey and Eddie Shore. However, the Leafs finally won in a penaltyless game in which the players took no chances by using their bodies. The final score was 7-3, and here is shown Andy Blair of the Leafs standing over Chuck Conacher who has fallen—well outside the goal crease—as Harvey Jackson, extreme LEFT let go a hot one. Red Dutton is seen with the puck in the foreground while Ching Johnson is guarding the defence zone. More than 14,000 fans paid $20,000 to see the game.

THE GREATEST GALAXY OF EXPENSIVE HOCKEY STARS EVER GATHERED TOGETHER



More than $20,000 was paid by more than 14,000 Toronto fans in the Ace Bailey benefit game in which the greatest galaxy of hockey stars the world has ever seen, were gathered under one roof. The Toronto team played a picked team from all the teams in the N.H.L. and defeated them 7-3, although the score didn't matter much, since neither team attempted to "lay it on". There were no penalties, and the greatest thrill of the game was the presentation by Ace Bailey of a memento of the great occasion to Eddie Shore, who was suspended for sixteen games for having knocked Bailey to the ice in a game in Boston. Injuries resulting from the fall have, it is reported, ended Ace's hockey career. 14,000 fans rose and cheered Eddie to the echo when he skated out on the ice before the game. The cheer was only exceeded by that given to Ace Bailey, who faced off the puck and witnessed his first game since his injury more than tw months ago. Never in hockey history has such a gathering of stars bee brought together on one ice for a game. ABOVE is the N.H.L. team whic opposed the Leafs. It is worth a cool million dollars "on the hoof". Th players are: Back Row, left to right: Chuck Gardiner, Chicago; Red Dut ton, N. Y. Americans; Eddie Shore, Boston; Allan Shields, Ottawa; Train er Bill O'Brien; Lionel Conacher, Chicago; Ching Johnson, N. Y. Range Nels Stewart, Boston; Frankie Finnigan, Ottawa; Normie Himes, N Americans; Larry Aurie, Detroit; Hooley Smith, Maroons; Jimmy Wa Maroons; Lester Patrick. Leo Dandurand, Canadians; Bill Cook, N. Rangers; Howie Morenz, Canadiens; Aurel Joliat, Canadiens; Herb Lewis, Detroit. Mascot in front is Howie Morenz, Jr.

penthouse love

BY

alma sioux scarberry

He stood out in the room in a class by himself. If he were not such a selfish, spoiled, spendthrift—and things were different—how proud she might be of him.

Charity knew she'd have to find her voice sometime. She couldn't be a mummy all evening. Yanner was amused when Charity turned to her to say haltingly. "It —it was nice of you to bring Dougs friends up to see us. I know he appreciates it."

Yanner smiled sweetly and looked across at Doug who sat beside Charity, looking helplessly ill at ease.

"We couldn't let the poor darling get lonesome—on his honeymoon."

Charity stiffened. All the others seemed to be busy enjoying themselves in other groups. The three [illegible] alone. Charity was not [illegible] of the innuendo in Yanner's words. Her temper came to the rescue again and she was able to say quite calmly:

"Doug—lonesome? He hasn't had a lonely evening since he's been married. In fact, he's been quite active—socially."

Doug was astonished. He opened his mouth to say something and closed it, looking even more miserable. Yanner's eyes narrowed for a moment, but only Charity noticed. Then Yanner's little rose bud mouth smiled again. "How—nice. I'm sure you're glad to see him enjoying himself."

"Oh—indeed, I am." Charity looked her straight in the eye. "I'm not at all jealous of his— friends."

She emphasized the friends in a manner that left nothing to the imagination of Doug or Yanner. Before either of them could reply Charity added:

"I'm a very broad-minded wife—really. My husband's affairs are of no interest whatsoever to me."

Doug made an attempt to laugh. Yanner was furious inside. Charity was quitely making mincemeat of her—and she didn't like it. But after all she had started it, it was probably up to her to finish it. So she gave Charity a now-that-we-understand-each-other smile and said with a poor attempt at humor. "Full of Charity, aren't you, darlin'?"

Before Charity could answer Yanner got up and ran to the piano banged on it for silence. Walker had just arrived with the drinks [illegible] was passing them around. The [illegible] quieted. Yanner pushed her blonde curls back with a Paderewski gesture, while her hands swept over the keys for a moment.

"Ladies and gentlemen— " she lowered her voice in imitation of a radio announcer—"Miss Hepsibah Mariah Sunflower will now sing a little rural number entitled, 'She was only a Farmer's Daughter.'

Yanner was really a fine musician, and she sang comedy numbers like a professional. So the gang settled down hopefully expecting a treat. Doug looked about wildly—tried to signal her to stop. What had gotten into the girl anyway? Charity waited for the worst. She was sure the farmer's daughter business was a dig for her.

Yanner pulled the corsage of orchids from her gown, set it on top of her head in imitation of a freak hat, and began solemnly in a high-pitched country twang:

"She was only a farmer's daughter,
Pure as the morning dew-ew,
Her cheeks, the color of rosies,
No paint had ever knew—ew.
Then one day her father told her,
'They're a-goin' to take the old home,
And sell it, dear daughter, at auction,
Oh—where, oh, where kin we ro-am"

Yanner stopped and put her finger to her lips thoughtfully. It suddenly occurred to Charity that Yanner was improvising for her benefit. No doubt the entire society crowd knew something of the circumstances of the Doug Temple marriage, and that she had been a farmer's daughter.

Everyone waited expectantly for Yanner to go on. In a moment she continued:

"'Oh, don't you worry dear father,
And tell dear ma not to we-ep.
I go me off to the city,
The wolf from the door to ke-ep.'
'Ah, no, dear che-ild, you must ne-er—
Than that you should sell your poor so-ul
For a mess of that there Broadway pot-tage!'"

There was a scream of merriment. Doug's face was the color of a beet, Charity's white with anger that she tried to hide. She must not let them see she saw through Yanner's cheap little trick. After another moment of pretended deep thought Yanner burst again into song:

"The days dragged by like years,
Way down on the old homestead,
The old folks sat in te-ars,
Fearing their daughter was dead.
But one day there came a letter,
And a check fluttered down to the floor.
It read—'Dear Pa, here's a million.
Let me know if you need any more!'

Yanner stopped and shook her head sadly, going into prose in her best bedtime-story manner:

"And so, boys and girls, the poor old farmer and his wife were broken-hearted. The mother took the check and threw it in the bathtub because that was the one place on the farm that was never used 'I'll not touch a penny of that there filthy lucre,' thundered the rugged farmer, his honest, horny hands raised to heaven. 'And, by gosh, don't let that little tramp ever stick her painted face in this here shack ag'in.'

"Christmas came. And the mother sat sadly by the crackling old log fire thinking of her daughter. But she didn't mention her name. There came a knock at the door. The poor old mother tottered over—and there, framed in the doorway, the snow blowing around her fair form, stood the daughter.

"'My dot-ter,' cried the old mother, and threw her arms around the minkcoated figure of her only child. In a flash a shot rang out. Little Buttercup lay dying at her mother's feet. At the feet of the father lay his trusty old shotgun!"

Yanner wiped her eyes and sobbed before she went on. There were titters among the audience. Then Yanner turned to the piano for her grand finale:

"'Oh, speak to me—speak to me—dotter!'
The mother she sobbed and she cr-ied,
And painfully, lips blue with fe-ar
The daughter spoke up ere she died:
'How could you think such of me, father,
When a ring on my hand you can spy?—
I wouldn't do no man wrong, daddy
I lawfully wedded the guy!"

Deafening cheers shook the penthouse when Yanner finished. She got up several times to take bows. Charity turned to find that Doug had disappeared. The party was at such a high pitch, aided by the drinks Walker kept replenishing, that no one seemed to notice the hostess, who walked out with her head high and her lips trembling.

She groped her way through her living room and bedroom to the balcony. There she found a little bench hidden among some palms and sat down. And suddenly the ache in her heart was so great she lay her head over on the bench and began to sob brokenly.

Suddenly she felt a hand on her shoulder and for a moment stiffenedw with fright. It was a man's hand. She raised her head and looked up—her face white as wary in the soft light of the May moon.

CHAPTER EIGHT

Thornton Batchelor started at the agony in Charity's face as she stared up at him in the moonlight. "Here, here," he said gaily as she sat up on the bench in alarm, "weep not, fair lady. A night like this was never meant for such a waste of emotion."

Something in the deep, pleasant voice stilled the wild beating of Charity's heart. He sat down and handed her a large handkerchief from his tux pocket, silently. Charity wiped her eyes. Then she smiled timidly as she said, "I thought I was all alone. I'm sorry."

Thornton Batchelor grinned, showing large white perfect teeth. Even in the moonlight Charity could see that his hair was red and curled all over his head, and that he had a few good-natured freckles too. His tall, athletic figure seemed to fill the bench.

When the young man saw that Charity was getting her bearings he grinned again. "Feel better? Then we'd better get acquainted. Behold before you, Lady Temple, the handsome figure of Dr. Thornton Batchelor, sworn enemy of all human ills. Age thirty-two, height six feet four inches, weight 220 pounds. Born in New York. Lady-killer and all round playboy. Would you like to play post-office"

It was nice to smile again. Then Charity remembered she had come out on the balcony to weep—and her face grew grave. Dr. Batchelor wagged a finger at her.

"Naughty, naughty! Bad little cry baby get castor oil."

"I—I don't cry often, really," Charity apologized. "But there's no need of my trying to deceive you. You wer' in there now when Yanner Vandergriff spoke her little piece for my benefit."

Dr. Batchelor squirmed uncomfortably. "That's Yanner's little way of having fun. She didn't mean any harm.'

"You all know that she was engaged to—my—husband. She got up this party tonight to torture me."

The doctor decided there was no use beating about the bush. Mrs. Temple needed some one to talk with. He grinned again.

"Call me Batch. What shall I call you?"

"Just —Charity".

"All right, Charity." The doctor reached over and took her hand to feel her pulse. "Let's get together on this trouble that seems to be gnawing at your aching breast. Tell Doctor Batchelor all about it."

Charity made no attempt to draw her hand away. It was comforting. She sat for a moment staring into space, then sighed hopelessly.

"I've made a terrible mistake—thats all. Tonight makes me realize it. I've just about wrecked my whole life."

A flicker of amusement touched Batch's brown eyes.

"No woman makes a mistake to marry as much money as you have. There shouldn't be anything in the world you couldn't buy—with your fortune. Every woman in New York envies you. That little display of feline entertainment you say in there tonight was jealousy. Not of the man you married—but of your money. Get wise to yourself!"

It was a long speech. Charity shook her head again.

"Money—can't buy happiness. Nothing could make me believe that."

Batch was warming to his subject. He turned to her almost impatiently. "What is happiness? What do you want of life? What is the most important thing to a woman?"

Charity shrugged.

"I can tell you the most important thing to a woman." Batch smiled knowingly. "It's being able to wind the man she wants around her little finger and keeping him. And any woman can do that if she has any brains at all—and a fair amount of looks."

"I may have the brains," Charity admitted frankly, "but I certainly havent the looks."

"You're fishing now. No woman in the world thinks she is unattractive."

"Oh—but I do," Charity declared so convincingly that Batch almost believed her.

He looked at her closely in the moonlight, and there was nothing about her that he could see to substantiate his next remark. But he declared gallantly, "You're a very lovely lady, Charity Temple. Take it from a man who has been somewhat of an expert in his day."

Charity flushed. Never before in her life had a man told her she was attractive; she felt a delicious thrill of excited pleasure. And Dr. Batchelor was rich, handsome and gallant.

PROSTRATE FOR 36 HOURS

Woman's Bilious Attacks Had Become Chronic

THE "DAILY DOSE" PUT HER RIGHT

"I have suffered all my life," writes a woman, "from bilious attacks in a most severe form, which have prostrated me from 12 to 36 hours. Last year I had two attacks in eight days. Then my husband bought me a bottle of Kruschen Salts. I started taking them in small doses in my morning cup of coffee—I confess faintheartedly, for I had tried practically every known remedy before, with no success. But, to my amazement—and certainly to my peace of mind—I have not had a bilious attack since."—E. D.

You know how badly an engine runs when it gets clogged up. It's the same with your body when your gastric—or digestive—juices fail to flow. Your food, instead of being assimilated by your system, simply collects and stagnates inside you, producing harmful acid poisons. What you need is a tonic—Nature's own tonic—Nature's six mineral salts.

You get all these six salts in Kruschen, and each one of them has an action of its own. The first effect of these salts is to promote the flow of the saliva and so awaken the appetite. The next action occurs in the stomach, where the digestive juices are encouraged to pour out and act upon the food. Again, in the intestinal tract certain of these salts promote a further flow of these vital juices which deal with partly digested food and prepare it finally for absorption into the system.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

A FREE TRIAL OFFER OF KRUSCHEN

TARZAN AT THE EARTH'S CORE

(Metropolitan Newspaper Service) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

While Ja's fleet was still a considerable distance off the coast, the O-220 raced ahead at full speed toward Korsar. The plan was to affect the rescue of David I without bloodshed. As the dirigible glided over the inner world's principal city, its streets and courtyards filled with people staring upward in awe-struck wonder. Three thousand feet above Korsar, the ship stopped and Tarzan sent for the three Korsar prisoners.

With stern face the ape-man addressed Lajo. "I have shown and explained to you all these deadly bombs that could easily blow up The Cid's palace. They could destroy all Korsar. You have seen the fleet coming to rescue the Emperor of Pellucidar. Your whole country is at our mercy. Now I am going to give you a chance to save it, for you shall take a message to The Cid. Will you tell him the truth?" The Korsar trembled, for he did not know what to expect, but he answered: "I will."

"Very well," answered Tarzan. "The message is simple. Tell your ruler we demand the release of Pellucidar's Emperor at once. Explain how we can enforce our will. If he places the Emperor upon a ship and sends him unharmed to our fleet, we will go away without firing a shot. If not, the blood of all his subjects will be upon his head. Do you understand?" "I do," whispered Lajo. Tarzan lead him aft where a bundle was waiting. "It is a parachute," he said, "put your arms through here."

Quickly the parachute was adjusted. Its mechanism was explained to the Korsar, carefully. They led him to a door in the cabin and flung it open. The man hesitated. "Remember," said Tarzan, "your message to The Cid." "Don't forget to jerk the ring," cautioned Jason. Then, pale, but showing no other fear, Lajo, the Korsar jumped off into space. A moment later the watchers saw the white folds of the parachute streaming in the air—saw it open and knew that the message of Tarzan would be delivered to The Cid of Korsar.

THIRD ACCIDENT IN ONE MONTH

J. G. Dusenbury, Carrying Place, Hopes Ill Luck Over

Carrying Place, Feb. 16— Bitter, howling gales, sweeping, swooping clouds of snow, and drifts fence-high, rocklike, have been the portion of residents for a day or two. Apparently under the impression that he must not send so much of cold weather without plenty of snow to season it, Old Man Winter has residents well supplied with both. The bus service has ceased to exist with the blockade of the Carrying Place-Trenton road. The mail arrives belatedly once a day and that by the roundabout way of Rednersville and Belleville; while local mail carriers are having the time of their lives making their deliveries. Mr. J. G. Dusenbury who drives the mail to the Mount Carmel settlement was so unfortunate as to break the axle in his light coupe which he drives on that route, and he had to call on friends to tow him home. Now he is not regretting the broken axle so much, but is wondering if there is any danger of putting his horse out of commission by the same means. Speaking with Mr. Dusenbury today, the correspondent was informed that in order to reach his destination this morning, he drove for several miles over the ice of Weller's Bay and when a clear spot was found once more took the road. "Right out there on the wind-swept surface of the Bay," said Mr. Dusenbury. "I found drift after drift almost waist deep packed so hard that the horse and cutter passed over them without any difficulty. There were a few bare spots, but the drifts were in the majority." Motor cars on the roads are almost as scarce as they were in the gay nineties, and those hapless individuals who do attempt to travel by car are called upon to do plenty of shovelling. The county road to Picton is in very good condition, however, having been plowed out by the county plow late on Tuesday afternoon; but the side roads and the road to Trenton are impassable for cars in places. Spring, when it comes, and if it comes, will find plenty of thawing to do.

While on the subject of the accident which befell Mr. Dusenbury recently, it might be stated that within the last month or so three separate misfortunes have come to him while travelling along the Murray Canal road. Five weeks ago Mr Dusenbury escaped death by the narrowest of margins when his car plunged over the embankment and halted at the very edge of the water. A few days later fire broke out in the engine of his car and he suffered painful burns on one of his hands as he pulled the wiring loose to break the short circuit which had made the trouble. The breaking of the axle in his car at a spot far from the scene of the other two mishaps makes Mr. Dusenbury wonder if there are such things as jinxes.

A jolly shower in honour of the former Miss Alice Cruickshank, now Mrs. Hubbard, and Mr. Hubbard of Bloomfield was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Snyder at Gardenville on Tuesday evening. Blocked roads made car travel out of the question, but several sleigh loads of guests attended, and a splendid evening's entertainment was provided. Music and games served to pass the time until the presentation of the splendid assortment of fine gifts was made to the bride and groom. Splendid pieces of silverware, chinaware, linen, kitchen utensils, and even a beautiful Kenwood blanket were included in the list; and Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard in thanking their friends assured them of their extreme gratitude. After they had extended to one and all a sincere invitation to their new home in Wellington, refreshments were served; and a very pleasant evening was concluded.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Weese, Mrs. Jane Weese and Mr. Norman Weese spent a part of last week end with Mr. and Mrs. George Leeman in Belleville. Mrs. Leeman, before her marriage, Miss Lavina Weese, has recently undergone an operation for appendicitis, but is progressing splendidly at present.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Taylor of Gardenville attended the dance in Trenton on Wednesday evening. In the absence of bus service the trip was made by train.

Valentine day was quietly observed in the local school with usual post office ceremonies being conducted.

Mrs. Jane Weese and Mr. Norman Weese called on Mrs. Charles Ward in Belleville on Sunday last.

Miss Ella Sine has been spending several very pleasant days visiting at the homes of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Knott of Belleville and Mr. and Mrs. Harold Terry of Trenton.

Many a friend of Mrs. Rupert Bonter, who was so unfortunate as to fall breaking her leg at the time of our most recent icy spell, will be glad to hear that she is well on the way to recovery, although of course that will require a long time.

Mrs. Annie MacLoughlin of Brighton spent a week at her summer home here recently.

Mrs. W. E. Weese called on Mrs. (Rev.) Arthur Struther on Monday.

Mr. Frank Harris called on Mr. W. E. Weese on Tuesday evening.

In spite of the cold Mr. Vernon Westfall has been busy recently drawing baled straw and cattle from several rather distant places. Last week two trips were made to Foxboro, and several more to Belleville and beyond. While speaking of straw, it may be mentioned that straw is one thing which is hard to get just at present. Many a farmer is wondering just what to do to secure a supply. One local farmer is even considering selling part of his hay in order to get some of it.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Weese and family and Mr. and Mrs. George Peters of Consecon visited Mrs. I. Hewton and Mrs. J. Hewton in Bloomfield on Sunday afternoon last.

Mr. Oliver Greig is suffering at present with a slight attack of illness and is confined to his home.

Local men employed in Trenton are faced with the alternative of staying at home or of boarding in town while the present traffic tie-up exists. With most, the latter one is most advisable, since work is not always easy to secure.

The regular meeting of the Women's Association was held at the home of Mrs. Henry Nelson in Gardenville on Wednesday afternoon. Due to the unpleasant weather the attendance was far from up to the usual standard; but the dozen members who were there went ahead enthusiastically with their plans for coming activities.

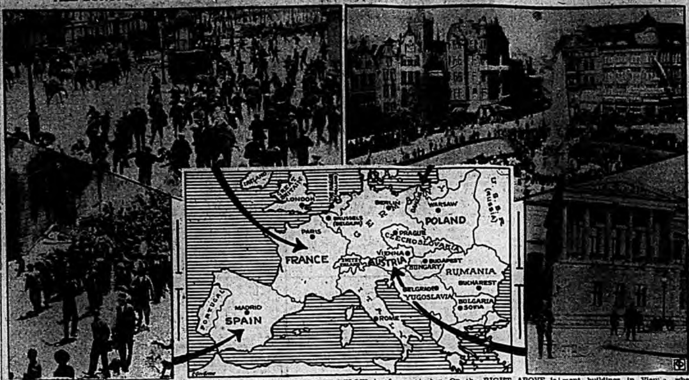
DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

ALL EUROPE SEETHES WITH REVOLT AS UPRISINGS IN MANY COUNTRIES REVIVE THREAT OF WAR



Europe's sore spots, inflamed by bloody uprisings are threatened to throw the entire continent into a state of war as internal religious and political issues forecast disastrous results of international consequences. Political observers point out that incidents preceding the world war were far less significant at the time than the events taking place today. Map ABOVE shows some of the various trouble zones where revolts and disputes over territory are holding a constant threat over the heads of peoples. Photo, LEFT BELOW, is of recent demonstrations against the church in Madrid, where similar outbreaks now are occurring. LEFT ABOVE, is a photo of the rioting in Paris which caused the downfall of one government and is confounding another. On the RIGHT ABOVE is a view of Danzig, the free city in the Polish corridor, where a recent pact has alleviated the tension between Germany and Poland but which still remains a possible danger point. LOWER RIGHT, guarded parliament buildings in Vienna, where Socialist uprisings have brought a heavy toll of human life, and where the Fascist regime has won a blood victory over the Socialists. Now they must contend with the Austrian Nazis.

COURTMARTIAL OF LINDBERGH DEMANDED BY ARMY OFFICER

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, TOP CENTRE, famous aviator, who has been honored and revered by millions because of his epoch New York-to-Paris non-stop flight, has been subjected to a series of critical blasts as a result of his denouncement of the administration's cancelation of airmail contracts. Maj.-Gen. D. E. Dolan, O.C. of the army's second corps area is considering a request made by A. W. McMahon former lieutenant in the naval reserve, that Col. Lindbergh be court-martialed because his telegram was "prejudicial to the good order and discipline of the service." His telegram of criticism, dispatched to President Roosevelt, RIGHT, has been described as having been sent for "publicity purposes" in behalf of air lines of which he is a director, in a White House statement because the text of the wire was made public before it reached the president. Lindbergh's action was attacked by Senators G. W. Norris of Nebraska, BELOW, LEFT; K. D. McKeller of Tennessee, CENTRE, and Representative P. H. Shoemaker, of Minnesota, LEFT.

ESCAPE WITH LIVES AFTER TWO EXPLOSIONS

Firemen Forced to Don Gas Masks To Fight Blaze

Winnipeg, Feb. 16—(CP)—Awakened by two terrific explosions, occupants of 28 suites in the Gordon Block, in the residential part of the city, narrowly escaped with their lives when fire razed the structure here early today.

Trapped by the raging flames several tenants were forced to jump to safety from upstairs windows. None of the tenants was injured. Firemen were forced to don gas masks to fight the flames, so dense was the smoke. Unestimated damage will run into thousands of dollars.

The explosions originated in the boiler room. So great was the force windows in nearby houses were shattered.

MONTREAL, Feb. 15.—(CP) —Provincial police today announced they were detaining a witness for the Coroner's inquest next week into the mysterious poisoning of two infant children of Gregoire Raymond Lachute Mills, Que., found dead after eating chocolates received anonymously through the mails.

DRIVE FORCES INTO SEWERS IN AUSTRIA

Desperate Guerrilla Warfare Being Carried on at Present

LAST STRONGHOLD

No Estimation of Underground Army is Known

By WADE WERNER

Associated Press Foreign Staff

Vienna, Feb. 16—(AP)— Driven underground into the sewers of Vienna, the scattered forces of the fleeing Socialist Republican guard are fighting a desperate guerrilla warfare today, still disputing the authority of the Austrian government.

The secret passages into the roomy sewers, which honeycomb the ground under Vienna, were ways of escape for defeated garrisons of the municipal apartment blocks shelled by government artillery Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

Now the sewers themselves have become a last stronghold for these fighters.

Last night, Socialist riflemen emerged from manholes in the Stadt-Park District—though it was officially stated, that there had been no fighting in Vienna since yesterday noon—and terrified foreign residents, who were kept awake by the clamor and the gunfire as the Socialists skirmished with police.

This morning, all seemed quiet, but the underground army—no one knows exactly how large it is—still was lurking in the sewers.

Machine Gun Fire

The skirmish in Stadt Park broke out before dawn at a point where the River Wien flows out of a tunnel opposite the Kursalon.

Residents of this district told the Associated Press they were awakened by what sounded like machine-gun fire not more than 100 yards from their windows.

More distant explosives to the east, they said, sounded like hand grenades—although others who lost sleep because of the uproar insisted they heard light artillery fire.

The principal entrances to the Vienna sewer are little metal huts resembling kiosks. One enters through a doorway and climbs down a ladder on the street level. Ventilator openings in the middle of the walls are large enough to permit pistol firing by men climbing up from the sewer.

Manhole coverings in the streets also can be lifted and fire can be directed from these.

There are tens of thousands of these manhole openings in Vienna.

FIVE DIE IN PLANE CRASH

Tokyo, Feb. 15 (AP)—Two officers and three soldiers were killed today when a heavy army bombing aeroplane crashed and burned near the flying field of the Seventh Aviation Regiment at Hamamatsu, southwest of Tokyo.

Leads Austrian Nazis

ALFRED FRAUENFELD

The Austrian Nazis are sitting back watchfully for the break in the Dollfus-Socialist battle which will allow them to step into the breach and 'save' the country from further strife, as they put it. Said to be backed by Germany, Alfred Frauenfeld, leader of the Austrian Nazi party, would become likely dictator of Austria in the event of a Nazi coup which it is believed, might result in another European war.

EWICK'S ISLAND

or Ontario Intelligencer:
r Sir:

e read in your paper of the ty spot that is to be Belleville's, ick's Island." I am sure every an will be justly proud of th e island so near the city; but t a shame to have it spoiled by eville's worst spot, the city p, just across the highway, re rats and smoke and odors e forth at all times during the mer months. Is it not possible have this dumping ground moved her out, say across the bay?

Signed Mrs. M. Parsons.

OPOSALS FOR ISLAND PARK

tor of The Ontario Intelligencer:

ear Sir,—Re the suggestion of Bogle regarding the naming of new park, let me say when our bridge was built I suggested ning it the Sagonaska War Vet- ns' Memorial Bridge. Why not so e our park? I notice Senator ah said President Roosevelt was greatest President the U.S. ever . Now this remark is altogether ng. If he had said he was one he greatest that would be O.K. use Washington and Lincoln e just as great in their day and eration. Mr. Bogie suggests a tiful arch over the roadway ring the park with our great on it on horseback, Sir urrie. Mark I do not say tor Borah said, "our greatest eral" because there was another d man, an Indian general just reat namely the great Tecumseh, led our Indian allies in the three les with the U.S. when Uncle nuel was trying to annex us and chief fell in the last battle tally wounded and so valiently the red men fight under his ralship that they saved the day s on each occasion. They left U. S. general dead upon the d on each three occasions. How l the Indians have ever been; y used to call Queen Victoria r "white mother" and although r habitation is the wigwam they nature's aristocrats and ritual- . Do we remember in the Riel ellion when our general stepped ward to shake hands with the In- n chief with his glove on his d. When he extended his hand chief stepped back and drew himself up to his extreme height and with a look of scorn refused to take the hand till the glove was removed. Ye gods! Think of it. Think of our general having to be taught etiquette and good manners and good breeding and ritual by a savage chief. The Indian is nature's nobleman and ritualist if his only habitation is the wigwam. Think of how the red men revered and honored their great chief when they carried him away and buried him in secret where no white man could gaze on his sepulchre with a cold stare of curiosity and to this day his remains lay in Old Mother Earth in her wilderness where no white man will ever discover them. This is how his race, so sensitive, so truly and naturally aristocratic honored and revered their great general whose remains were too sacred to be handled by the best of white men. Therefore I say Sir Arthur Currie was one of our greatest general and Tecumseh another.

So why not put on the beautiful arch leading to Sagonaska Park on one end Sir Arthur on his magnificent charger in his military equipment and on the other end Tecumseh on his magnificent natural thoroughbred with the chief on his back with no saddle but just as nature made them both and the great chief sitting bolt upright with his piercing eyes gazing sraight ahead over the vase domain stretching from sea to sea that he and his ancestors were the chiefs of the tribes. Now I suggest in between these great warriors on the sign be placed Sagonaska Island Park and immediately underneath "The War Veterans' Memorial Arch."

If we do this we will have squared ourselves with our red men who were the original owners of our soil and all will be joyful and happy and our beautiful park will be a joy forever. BUT if we do not do this God's infallible law of compensation will come into force just as surely as tomorrow's sun will rise in the east and our park will sadly disappoint us. Justice is justice and must prevail.

Yours truly,
ANON.

P.S.—Let me ask is not Beautiful Sagonaska Island Park not to be coupled with the beautiful Indian names and legends of our beautiful bay? Starting with Trenton we have the Iroquois Trail, then Sagonaska Island Park, then Massassaga Park, then Deseronto with its great chief Oronhyatekha and his beautiful daughter No-os-ke-leta, then Waupoos and so on.

SUN LIFE CO. MEETING HELD

Mr. J. F. Hinchey Reports Meeting Was Enthusiastic

James Franklin Hinchey, representative of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada in Belleville, returned yesterday from Montreal where he attended the sixty-third annual meeting of his company. He reports a very large attendance of policyholders and stockholders and a very enthusiastic gathering. The report for the year was of an extremely satisfactory character, the assurances in force now totalling $2,770,000,000, with $216,000,000 in new assurances paid for during the year. The excess of income over disbursements was also extremely gratifying, amounting to $24,730,000.

Some conception of the magnitude of the operations of a company such as the Sun Life is illustrated by the amount of money which it pays out to its policyholders and beneficiaries, exclusive of policy loans. Mr. Hinchey reports that this aggregated, during the past year, over a hundred million dollars and, during the four years of depression, eight hundred million dollars; while the assets of the company during the same period were increased by $55,000,000 and insurances in force by over $307,000,000.

The meeting was noteworthy, too, because of a number of changes in the official family of the company. Mr. T. B. Macaulay, who has been president of the company since 1915, announced that, after over sixty years of service he felt he had earned retirement from the more active executive duties. He becomes chairman of the board and is succeeded as president by Mr. Arthur B. Wood, who has been managing director for the past year. Mr. E. A. Macnutt, treasurer of the company, becomes vice-president of the company.

AUSTRALIANS CABLE THEIR CONDOLENCES

Cables From New Zealand

Cables from New Zealand where for a time he "supplied" in a church and from Australia where he had made a notable record as an institution founder were received today by Mrs. Seymour. These messages came from church authorities in those countries and from relatives of Mrs. Seymour.

Mrs. Seymour today received a message from the Rev. J. W. MacNamara, Clerk of the Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, Toronto, bringing the regrets of the Assembly at the sudden call and taking-off of her husband whose place in the church was so prominent. The clerk of assembly said:

Loss is Felt by Church

"The Presbyterian Church in Canada.

"Toronto, February 15, 1934.

"We are greatly shocked and distressed at the report which reached us this morning of the sudden and tragic death of Dr. Seymour which occurred last evening in the city. We realise what a terrible shock it must have been to you and your son and to the congregation.

"Dr. Seymour's sudden taking-away in the very prime of life is a very great loss not only to the congregation of St. Andrew's Church, Belleville but to the whole Presbyterian Church in Canada. By his ability and experience he was qualified to render important service to the whole church.

At last assembly he was appointed to the Board of Administration and shortly afterwards was made a member of the Budget Committee. It was our hope and expectation that because of his wide knowledge and varied experience in different departments of church affairs, gained during his ministry in Australia, he would in coming years render valuable service for the church and the Kingdom of God.

"I wish to convey to you and your son, our sincere sympathy in this great sorrow that has visited you. Our earnest prayers are that you may be comforted, upheld and guided by the Grace and Wisdom of God and of His Son Jesus Christ.

"Yours sincerely,
"J. M. MacNamara,
"Clerk of the Assembly."

It has been practically decided that all events on the calendar of St. Andrew's for next week will be cancelled in memory of the late minister. On Sunday morning, according to present plans there will be a church service but the evening service will not be held, said an official today.

Founder of Churches

His fifty-one years of life, Dr. Seymour crowded with intense activity. Educated in Canada and then graduating as a master of Arts and as Doctor of Systematic Theology at Yale University, he entered the work of the church. In Australia he founded two schools, one for boys and the other for girls under the Presbyterian Church and founded no less than six churches in that country. During his residence in Adelaide, he was convener of the Home Mission Board, and Moderator of the Church and professor of church history in the Theological College at Adelaide, Australia.

Farewell in Australia

Five years ago last June a memorable event took place in South Australia on the departure of Dr. Seymour and his family for Canada. An illuminated address presented to him on that occasion indicates the high position he occupied in the affairs of the Presbyterian Church in that land. The testimonial reads:

To Rev. J. A. Seymour, M.A., S.T.D.
On his leaving South Australia for Canada, June, 1928.

Dear Dr. Seymour:

On the eve of your return to your native land, we, representing the Presbyterian Church in South Australia, feel we must express our deep regret at your departure, and our keen appreciation of the faithful work you have done in this State on behalf of our Church.

For over twelve years you have labored most efficiently and successfully in the congregation of Chalmers Church, Adelaide, where you have built up a strong and flourishing cause. You have the satisfaction of knowing that your Ministry has been highly appreciated by a devoted people, and that you leave all the organizations of the church in perfect order.

You have given a great deal of your time to the work of Home Missions, and have been instrumental in starting many new stations, and have spent much of your energy in their development. The success which has attended your efforts in this direction is lasting testimony of your zeal and foresight.

Your intense interest in educational matters has been shown in the Theological Students in Parkin College; in your position on the Council of St. Andrew's College; and in the formation and establishment of a Scotch College and a Girls' College, both of which institutions in connection with the Presbyterian Church are now grown so strong and prosperous.

In philanthropic affairs you have found time to take an active part, and your influence and sympathy have been very evident.

We would express our esteem for Mrs. Seymour, who by her activity and genial disposition has endeared herself to the whole community. She will be greatly missed from every department of our church life.

We wish you, Mrs. Seymour and your son, all that is best and happiest in the land of your birth and pray that God's blessing may rest on all your future labors for the advancement of His Kingdom.

In the name of the Presbyterian Church of South Australia.

A. C. Weber, Moderator.
W. Floyd Shannon, Clerk.
21st. June, 1928.

MURDERED IN CELL?

Carl Seitz, the Socialist mayor of Vienna, and stormy petrel of Austrian politics, who was arrested February 12, on the order of Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss when fighting raged between the Socialists of the country and Dollfuss' loyal army. It is now reported that Seitz has died mysteriously in his prison cell.

To Forsake Dollfuss?

Prince Ernst van Starhemberg

It is believed that Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, virtual leader of Austria's Heimwehr is planning to join the Austrian Nazis cause as soon as, or before, the rebellion of the Socialists has been put down, providing they are able to put it down. Starhemberg has been leading the assault on the Socialist strongholds.

75,000 ITALIAN TR OOPS ORDERED TO A USTRIAN BORDER

With 75,000 Italian troops on the border of Italy and Austria, and with Czechoslovakia bellowing threats and accusations across Austria to Italy, declaring that the first attempt on the part of any country to send armed aid to Austria means war, the situation in Europe today is reported far more serious than it was at any time prior to the outbreak of war in 1914. The above shows typical Italian troops who are being held in readiness for any emergency on the Austrian border.

RELIEF QUESTIONS FULLY DISCUSSED

London, Ont., Feb. 16—(CP) —Mayors from 22 cities of Ontario today resumed conversations looking towards solution of economic and other problems confronting their administrations, after dealing yesterday with the question of relief of indigents.

The meeting adopted a resolution of Mayor W. G. Bullbrook of North Bay asking the Ontario Government to amend its Order-in-Council governing relief administration so that persons applying for relief would be forced to prove one-year's residence in the municipality from which they seek aid.

The Mayors decided also to ask the Dominion Government to assume 100 percent of the cost of relief, and suggest that the time limit for completion of municipal relief works be extended beyond March 31 and that governments pay the "same amount as the municipalities toward the statutory rate of $1.75 a day for maintenance of indigents in hospitals.

Last night delegates attended a civic dinner at which they heard addresses by Arthur R. Ford, Managing editor of the London Free Press; M. W. Rossie, Man editor of the London Adver Mayor P. J. Nolan of Otta Rev. S. Banks Nelson of Ham

Austrian Fascists Score by Elevating Leaders and Ousting Many Socialists

Ascending of Fascist Influence is Most Pronounced

FIVE HANGED

Guerilla Warfare Continues And Many on Both Sides Wounded

(By Wade Werner, Associated Press Foreign Staff)

Vienna, Feb. 17 (AP)—Austrian Fascists scored big gains in their drive to dominate the government today with the elevation of another leader to a cabinet post and the ousting of thousands of Socialists from public office.

They won, too, in Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss' failure to heed the demand of his own Christian Social party that parliament be reconvened at once.

Emphasizing the ascendancy of the Fascist influence, Undersecretary Neustaedter-Stuermer, member of the Fascist Heimwehr or Home Guard, had been appointed Minister of Social Welfare today.

The cabinet accelerated its general Anti-Socialist campaign by declaring null and void the position and prerogatives of every official elected on that party's ticket.

Amid these significant developments, five more Socialists condemned for insurrectionary activities were hanged in Vienna.

Sentences Commuted

Six others were sentenced to death but their sentences were commuted to prison terms a few hours before they were to have died.

Not even the overworked "hanging courts," however, could halt the guerilla warfare waged against the Fascist Heimwehr by ragged bands of desperate Socialists.

Today several Heimwehr sentries had been wounded in the streets of Vienna by gunfire which blazed from speeding automobiles. Police immediately called for extraordinary precautions. Cars were searched and even pedestrians were watched closely.

In filling the thousands of offices to be vacated by Socialists, the government will seek successors only among loyal supporters— particularly among those who risked their lives in crushing the four-day revolt.

Chancellor Dollfuss is giving particular attention to special honors for those who fought for the government. Vice-Chancellor Emil Fey will be cited for distinguished action. He personally led artillery and machine gun attacks on some of the Socialist apartment strongholds in Vienna's working class district.

CORPORATION SOUGHT AS A SINGLE BODY

Steps Under Way to Form Windsor C.A.S. After Probe

WINDSOR, Ont., Feb. 17.—(CP)—Steps were under way here today to bring about the compete revamping of the Children's Aid Society demanded by the Ontario Government following the investigation into the Shelter and subsequent dismissal of officials of the institution for alleged cruelty to wards in their care.

M. A. Sorsoleil, Deputy Minister of Public Welfare, who conducted the investigation, attended a meeting here last night at which the Windsor and East Windsor Society asked Incorporation as a single body, though the latter organization has not yet definitely decided whether to completely enter the Windsor Body.

Walkerville has decided to form an independent organization and conduct its own affairs with regard to caring for wards of the Society. An immediate application will be made for a charter for the Windsor-East Windsor Group, and officers will then be elected.

HITLER WARNED BY BIG POWERS

Keep Hands Off Troubled Austria is Contained in Note

(By Stuart Moroney)

(Associated Press Foreign Staff)

PARIS, Feb. 17—(AP)—A warning to Chancellor Adolf Hitler of Germany to keep his hands off troubled Austria is reported being drafted today by France, England and Italy.

The joint declaration—which it is understood will be addressed to world at large but intended specifically for Germany—is said to have been agreed upon as a move to show Germany the three powers intended to see that Austria's Independence is respected.

Premier Mussolini of Italy proposed the pronouncement as the latest development of his determined campaign to prevent the Nazis from attempting to seize control in Austria.

In France, Premier Gaston Doumergue had the backing of both houses of Parliament today in any moves the Government might see fit to take along the lines outlined by Mussolini.

In fact, the Chamber of Deputies Foreign Affairs Committee even went so far as to urge the Doumergue Ministry to speed action toward assuring Austria's freedom.

Today with the manifesto expected in well-informed quarters to be released within 48 hours, it was understood that the manner in which it should be published was being discussed among statesmen of Paris, Rome and London.

One of the most frequently voiced French arguments. for the pronouncement advanced in preliminary talks here is that tri-power action would pave theway for Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss to take before the League of Nations his protets against what he terms German efforts to Nazify Austria.

Clarke Gable Escapes "Jam" in Telling Actress Type He Likes

Baltimore, Feb. 17—(AP)— Clark Gable, screen idol of the female fans who like them big and strong. today admitted:

1. He had never met Mae West
2. He "hardly knew" Great Barbo

Interviewers stood aghast. "Don't you work in Hollywood?" asked one

"Sure" said Gable. "It's a funny thing but I've just never run across Miss West."

"Why don't you go over and see her some time?"

"Well for one thing I've never been asked."

"What do you mean you "hardly know' Garbo?"

"Well, I worked with her five weeks. We played some love scenes. She said 'good morning' when we started the day and 'good night' when we finished. She was most kind and considerate but—well, I really don't know her."

As for those Hollywood heroines he did know, Gable was all compliments. "Great. Wonderful. Marvelous," he said.

"Aren't you a bit liberal with your compliments?"

"Live and let live," he answered, grinning.

"What type do you prefer?"

"You don't get me in that jam."

Paris Police Use Bludgeons on Rioters

Fighting was hot in Paris as rioters engaged government troops in battle in the streets of the French capital, in protest of the Daladier government. The above photograph shows the mob, armed with clubs and a variety of weapons, fighting a bristling battle with the uniformed officers.

7 BURNED IN TENEMENT, DOG SAVES OTHERS

Fire Starts in Basement And Quickly Sweeps Upward

New York, Feb. 17 (CP). — Fire starting in the basement of a tenement here early today swept upward so swiftly seven persons were trapped and burned to death. Frantic barking of a little terrier awoke members of one family and prevented the death toll from doubling.

Three bodies found on the fourth floor of the tenement were believed to be those of Mrs. Viovannia Terranola, 52, and her children, Anna 11, and Vincent 12. Another child of Mrs. Terranola, Frances, 15, was severely burned.

Four bodies were found in the third floor apartment of a family named Wechselbaum.

A number of sleepers were awakened by the shouts of Mary Smith, a charwoman, who had smelled smoke while at work in a theatre across the street.

Rescued by Ladders

As tenants awoke they crowded to windows and their frenzied screams added to the noise of the cracking flames. Firemen rescued many by climbing over ice-covered ladders.

Some tenants able to grope their way through the smoke to back windows where the fire escapes are located, made their way to safety.

The house was located on Seventh Street between Second and Third Avenue, a thickly populated section.

The height of the flames shooting from windows and through the roof attracted a large crowd including many motorists who had seen the fire from the three bridges over the East River.

ATTEMPTED MURDER CHARGE IS LAID

Man Alleged Attention Paid by Victim to His Wife

Kirkland Lake, Ont., Feb. 17 (CP)—Alex Horaback, 28-year-old Kirkland Lake resident, is in serious condition from gunshot wounds in hospital today and police are holding William Tychowecki, 46, on an attempted murder charge. Tychowecki who will appear for preliminary hearing Feb. 22, is alleged to have shot Horaback because he objected to attentions paid his wife.

Horaback was shot in the chest and arms and is in a serious condition. Police Chief William Shane and Constable T. Johnson with Dr. M. A. Shipley arrived at the house, owned jointly by the wounded man and the accused, Thursday night to find Horaback bleeding from wounds and Tychowecki in the cellar armed with a shotgun. Tychowecki surrendered when the officers appeared. He is the father of three children.

Police Chief Shane declared Horaback had been shot by a 12-gauge shotgun from which only one shot had been fired. He said Horaback had been shot as he went to the woodshed to get some wood for the fire. The police chief declared when Tychowecki was placed under arrest he declared: "I didn't know what I was doing."

ONLY 3 DAYS ABOVE ZERO THIS MONTH

On only three days so far this month did the weatherman fail to produce below zero weather for shivering, thermometer-scanning residents. The following days listed show the reason for the abnormal quantities of fuel used, the extraordinary number of sales of heavy underwear in local shops, and the reason also why numerous cracks have developed in concrete walks and other concrete work throughout the city during this record breaking month. On the first, the fourth and the twelfth, the mercury failed to descend below zero, but the other days more than made up for the comparative warmth. Temperature readings are as follows:

	Minimum	Maximum

Feb. 2	x9	14
Feb. 3	x15	9
Feb. 4	6	20

ESTATE DROPS 70 MILLIONS DOWN TO $50

Washer And Ironer Alone Left by "King of Coal"

Uniontown, Pa., Feb. 17.—A washing machine worth $15.00 and an electric ironer valued at $35.00 are all that remain of the $70,000,000 estate of a one-time king of coal.

Appraisers reported to the Fayette county court these two items represent all the personal property left unencumbered by Joseph V. Thompson who once ruled a western Pennsylvania empire of bituminous coal.

The appraisal did not include realty holdings, claimed by Thompson creditors who permitted the aging coal king to retain a residence in his 52-room mansion long after he had gone bankrupt. He had built the million dollar show place for "Hunnie" Hawes, his Broadway show-girl wife, at the turn of the century.

The appraisers indicated that Thompson died penniless last fall in spite of hints in his will that valuable articles and documents were hidden in secret places about the mansion.

'Jean' Crandall Faces Sentence on Spreading False News Charge

Claimed Telegram Sent as being Heiress Only Joke

St. Thomas Ont., Feb. 17—(CP)—Dark clouds today rolled over the romantic horizon of Jean Crandall, alias Eugene Dickinson and Gene Crandall, and the Springfield "mystery heiress" who conjured up a story of a $69,000 legacy and a trip to sunny Hawaii faced insted sentence for spreading false news

Dickinson, described two days ago as a dark-skinned widow of Hawaiian descent, confessed, police said, that he perpetrated a hoax, when he claimed to have been left a fortune by a grandmother, who died in Chicago and when he shouted "I'm a girl" and announced he was quitting his job as hired man for Simon Charlton, farmer.

Ontario Provincial Police Constable D. C. Shervill said Dickinson told him he telephoned an imaginary telegram to a neighbor of Charlton and asked that it be delivered to Jean Crandall. It was the message announcing the "good fortune" of the young Texas-born widow he claimed to be. He did it as a joke on Charlton, he said.

Investigation of the story yesterday convinced police it was untrue and the "widow" was arrested and charged with, spreading false news to be convicted later by Magistrate C. F. Maxwell.

Changed Name

Dickinson gave his name as Eugene Dickinson, when the charge was read to him, but changed it later to Gene Crandall when he was being finger-printed in the jail. Jail officials and police said he was wearing women's undergarments and that other similar articles of attire were found in his personal effects.

Search of records revealed Crandall had been arrested at several points in eastern and western Canada and had served sentences both as a man and a woman.

It was a sad blow to Charlton and his wife. They had been invited by the "widow" to fly with her to her Texas home and then voyage to Hawaii where, she said, her father was born.

Dickinson told Dr. D. L. Ewis, jail physician, his home was not Texas but Thedford, by comparison little more than a mashie shot from Springfield.

Dog Team on Antarctic Expedition Saved from Death Plunge by Harness

Bay of Wales, Antarctica, Feb. 14 (delayed) (AP): (via Mackay Radion)—Seven husky dogs pulling a sledge with supplies from the west barrier cache to Little America had only their harness to thank today for saving them from a plunge into a 60-foot ice crevasse on the main trail.

One of the tractors proceeding slowly over supposedly firm surface which had accommodated all the tons of stuff ferried into Little America—a job now almost complete—narrowly missed plunging into the crevasse too.

The trail suddenly crumpled underneath the rear treds, exposing a gash in the ice three feet from lip to lip. The driver went on to Little America to get a warning beacon.

Meanwhile Joe Healey, erstwhile fourth mate of the flagship, come along with a nine-dog team.

"I was coming along, not thinking of anything very much," Joe said. "Suddenly my lead dog disappeared. He dropped right out of sight, and while I was thinking that mystery over, six more went down.

"I grabbed the the gang line and tried to pull the dogs out They were too heavy. Then Pete Demas came back and with his help we pulled them out."

Build Up Armaments Only Step for Britain If Disarmament Fails

British Ministers Very Frank Over Present Situation and Point Out Britain May Have No Recourse but to Examine Arms Level.

NEGOTIATIONS IN PARIS

Stanhope Fears for Unregulated Arms Race With Britain Increasing Her Armaments "A Very Great Deal" at Great Cost.

(By George Hambleton, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LONDON, Feb. 17 (C.P. Cable)—The United Kingdom will have to build up her armaments if present disarmament negotiations, in the tense atmosphere of Europe, are fruitless.

This was made plain today by three British ministers in a frank survey of the prospects as Anthony Eden, Lord Privy Seal, opened negotiations in Paris. Mr. Eden will follow up his Paris talks with conversations in Berlin and Rome, seeking to open the way for resumption of work towards limitation and reduction of armaments.

The warning is not new. Repeatedly, as efforts to get a disarmament convention have been baulked, responsible British statesmen have pointed to the huge actual reductions effected in British arms on land, sea, and in the air since the war, and warned that unless other great powers show a willingness to follow her lead she will have no recourse but to re-examine the level of her armaments.

At Brighton Sir John Simon, Secretary for Foreign Affairs, declared simply, "a breakdown of disarmament negotiations will mean that Britain will have to look at the state of her own armaments, and the world will relapse into unregulated competition."

Costly Competition

At Birmingham, Lord Stanhope, new Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, was emphatic that if no disarmament convention is signed, and a new race in armaments results, Britain will have to increase her armaments "not a little, but a very great deal, at vast cost to the people, and consequently might have to postpone reduction of taxation."

And at Oxford Sir Philip Sassoon, Under-Secretary for Air, declared: "In the present state of Europe we cannot continue with only 400 first-line aircraft, when our nearest neighbor (France) has 997. We cannot continue to be the fifth power on the list (Britain was first at the end of the war).

Air Power Paramount

"Air power is more important to us, scattered as we are, than to any other power in the world. We have carried out unilateral, or independent, disarmament until we have reached the limit of safety. No longer can it be considered safe to count indefinitely on peace continuing.

"In these changed conditions we must insist on parity. But we would like it best if the other nations would come down to our level."

Mr. Eden's tour of the principal capitals follows Britain's latest lead towards a disarmament convention, a lead threatened with nullity by the impasse between France and Germany. Britain recently re-examined the draft convention she submitted at Geneva last year, in the light of subsequent developments, and turned it into a broad compromise which she felt was hopeful of acceptance.

Seeking Agreement

Chief feature of this plan contemplates narrowing the gap between the German demand for a short-service army of 300,000, and the biggest concession hitherto wrung from France, of army of 200,000 for the Reich. Latest development indicate France, convinced Germany has already substantially rearmed, will consent to no further concessions. It is to get around this stumbling block that Mr. Eden, the government's chief emissary in arms talks for a considerable time, is now visiting the continent.

FRANCE, ITALY BRITAIN WILL ISSUE NOTES

Big Powers Will Help Austria if Necessary to Preserve Independence

Rome, Feb. 17 (AP)—An Italian Government spokesman said today that Great Britain, France and Italy will issue official declarations shortly emphatically stating the necessity of Austrian independence and simultaneously re-affirming their intention of doing all they can to help Austria maintain that independence.

Negotiations toward the declarations have been going on for several days among the various Chancelleries to make the points of view of the three powers as similar as possible.

The proposal that the three powers should join in one single declaration was advanced and discussed but later rejected.

It is probable that the declarations will be made simultaneously although individually.

The spokesman said that the Italian statement would support independence without mentioning what form of government Austria should have.

The declarations, will be made partly in response to Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss' invitation to the three nations to state their views with reference to Austria but will, more than that, be a statement to the world in general.

It is believed they will not mention Germany by name but the inference will be plain.

DESERONTO BOY IS COMMITTED

In Friday afternoon's Juvenile Court a Deseronto youth was committed to the Victoria Industrial School by Magistrate Mikel. The youth was given into the custody of Inspector T. D. Ruston, of the Children's Aid Society, and will be later transported to Mimico. No session of the police court was held in Belleville on Saturday.

RELIEF WILL COME FROM ZERO BLASTS

Relief will come to the city and district from the zero blasts which whipped the city last evening and early this morning, with rising temperatures, and a rapid moderation of the weather on Sunday which may even bring rain. But the respite will be short lived, according to the weatherman. Temperatures are again expected to descend on Sunday evening, with decidedly cold weather following. Saturday morning temperatures through this immediate district were fairly consistent, with the lowest registration being recorded at Stirling, which led with a mark of 30 below. Cannifton reported 24 below, and at Campbellford late last night a mark of 26 below had been recorded. An official registration of 24 below for lowest and 2 above during the morning up to noon had been recorded in this city.

BULK OF EGGS SELL AT 35c DOZ.

Again zero weather throughout the district restricted attendance at Belleville's Saturday market; only purveyors of meat and farmers with hay and wood occupied the space of the outside market. The inside market was only of medium size and commodities there were at the same prices as a week ago with the exception of eggs, some vendors asking 36, 37 and 38 cents a dozen, though the bulk were sold at last Saturday's top price of 35 cents a dozen.

LADY BUG SURE SPRING HARBINGER

A tiny, active lady bug ambled in devious fashion across the hardwood top of a desk in one of the departments of the city hall this morning. Officials of the various civic departments gathered around the desk, and with exploring fingers, pencils and straws picked up, they urged the little insect into rapid motion to and fro across the top of the sun lighted desk. While officials watched, the little bug opened his wings from time to time and took little hedge hopping in short flights over and across the pencils and other impediments placed in its path. It was all fun for those who watched but the best part of the performance was the prediction of the city hall 'weather prophet'.

"That's a sure sign of spring—to see a lady bug so early in the season. From now on we'll get warmer weather. Just wait and see."

RELIEF PROJECTS FINISH MAR. 31

The numeral "3" was dropped from a news item concerning relief work in this city, carried in the Friday issue of this newspaper. Although the news story and the subheading carried the information that 37 working days remained in which the governmental assistance would be given the city, the last line of the story stated that this aid would be discontinued on March 1. The item should have read "March 31".

FOUR DAYS WITHOUT FOOD

Grounded Pilot And Passenger Discovered by Trappers

Lac La Ronge, Sask., Feb. 17 (CP)—Carl Yule, unwilling prisoner of the northland for four days without food today offered a silent toast to his flying mates as he anticipated rescue from ice-crusted Snake Lake.

A fur-freighting pilot for the M. and C. Airways Company, Yule disappeared on a flight Feb. 12. A faulty feed line drained his oil tank and he was forced down on a flight from this trading post to Big River, end of steel. There, with Allan Nunn, a passenger, he waited rescue.

Anxiety was felt at Big River when the Saskatoon pilot failed to put in an appearance at the scheduled time and plans were made to start a search. Meanwhile party of trappers "mushing" their huskies across Snake Lake, 50 miles east of here, discovered the grounded plane.

Nunn, Lac La Ronge fur trader, returned here with his rescuers and brought out word that Yule was safe. The plane was not damaged in the forced landing and is ready to take off as soon as a supply of oil is received.

Carrying provisions and precious oil a rescue plane streaked from here at dawn. Repairs will be made to the damaged fuel line and it is believed Yule will return here to pick up his passenger before continuing his flight to Big River.

MINISTER'S BODY IN STATE AT ST. ANDREW'S

Many Congregations Will be Represented at Funeral

Members of the kirk session and the board of managers and a large number of other members of the congregation of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church and other citizens last evening met the train from Toronto bringing the body of the late Rev. Dr. J. A. Seymour, M.A., to this city, and formed a cortege which accompanied the casket to St. Andrew's Church where the body lay in state until this afternoon.

During Saturday morning many of the congregation visited the church to view the body of their late pastor whose ministry was so suddenly closed by accident in Toronto.

Ministers of the Presbyterian Church from all parts of Eastern Ontario and from churches of other communions are in the city to attend the funeral. Rev. Dr. MacNamara, of Toronto, secretary of the General Board of the General Assembly and Rev. Dr. Rochester, representing the Moderator of the General Assembly will be present. The Rev. S. M. Scott of Picton will be in charge of the funeral service.

MADOC H. S. GIVES PLAY

Madoc, Feb. 17.—This well-known comedy in three acts produced with special arrangement with Samuel French, Toronto, by the pupils of the Madoc High School and presented in the Empire Theatre on Thursday evening turned out to be a great success both financially and in the opinion of those who attended. A great deal of credit is due to the pupils who displayed masterly poise and ability in the characterization of their parts. Much more credit is due however to Miss E. MacDiarmid, the director, for the effort and time that she gave in the production of the play. Forced to work with practically an inexperienced cast she moulded together a group of players that would do justice to the directing ability of any instructor.

Besides the excellent acting a very interesting part of the play was the costumes. In acts one and two there are two inserts, one disclosing the American opinion of the British with their monocles and lorgnettes and "ripping, by jove's" and the other, the British opinion of the American with the gentleman in plus fours, and golf socks, gaudy blazer and a straw hat, and the wife with bright, flairy clothes and the younger generation with sweaters, stetsons and all with Wrigley's. In the last act the beautiful evening gowns of the ladies and the debonair appearance of the gentlemen made a very interesting spectacle.

The characters, one and all, were well adapted to their parts but probably the performance of John Bristol as Sir Percy and Gray Rivers as Hiram Draper, senior, are of special mention. These young men having to carry very heavy parts did exceedingly well. The following comprise the cast:

THREE U. S. FLIERS DIE TWO IN STORM CRASH

Salt Lake City, Utah, Feb. 17 (AP)—Three United States army lieutenants were dead today in two separate accidents as army planes prepared to take over operation of the air mail lines of the country.

Second Lieut. John D. Grenier and Second Lieut. Edwin D. White encountered a blinding snowstorm and dense fog that shrouded the high peaks of Utah mountain range last night and crashed to their deaths on a ranch in Weber Canyon, 60 miles east of here.

Second Lieut. James Y. Eastman was burned to death when his plane fell six miles southeast of Jerome, Idaho. He was en route from Salt Lake City to Seattle.

12 SAILORS DROWN AS SIGNAL MISTAKEN

San Sebastian, Spain, Feb. 17 AP—Twelve sailors were drowned and five saved today when two fishing boats collided 120 miles off the coast.

The boats crashed because of a mistake in signals and the men threw themselves overboard.

Other boats in the fishing fleet went to their assistance but only five of the 17 thrown into the water were rescued.

Picton and Prince Edward County

By Our Own Correspondent

Picton, Feb. 17—On Tuesday night two Picton teams, the Fruit Growers and the Bankers played at the Arena, with the score 6 to 2 in favor of the Fruit Growers. Salter, Owens and Jack Welsh starred for the Fruit Growers and Bert Burns and Murney Green for the Bankers. Russell Boyle received the only penalty for grabbing and holding the puck when Davey Young broke his goal stick.

W. A. Jones alone qualified and succeeded to the vacant seat in the town council. Mr. Jones has served many years in the council besides being in active business in the town.

At present there are twenty-one patients in Prince Edward County Hospital, an institution we would find it hard to do without.

Mr. Cecil Bongard of Point Traverse is ill at Mr. W. R. Browne's.

Miss Mary Katz is spending a few days in Toronto in the interests of the Alex Lipson store.

Mrs. Willis Yerex although only partly recovered from an attack of grippe is again at the store owing to the illness of Miss Gladys Starr.

On Valentine's day Mrs. John Mouck entertained at a delightful birthday party in honour of the fourteenth birthday of her daughter Miss Martha Mouck. Twelve of Martha's girl friends spent a pleasant afternoon with games and contests. The tea table was gay with valentine decorations and centred by a lovely birthday cake.

Misses Agnes and Annie Markland entertained at a card party on Wednesday evening at their home on Spring street. Three tables of guests were in play, and a pleasant evening was enjoyed.

Mrs. Roy Turner is suffering from an attack of tonsilitis.

Mr. Pat Dever is just able to be out again after his recent serious illness with pneumonia.

Mrs. Clinton Lansing

The death occurred in Sophiasburg on Wednesday, February 14th, of Edith A. Mills, wife of Clinton Lansing in her sixty-fourth year. The deceased Mrs. Lansing was born in Bloomfield, a daughter of George Mills and his wife Louisa Marshall, and was well known in Picton, where for many years she was telegraph operator in the Express Office. She had resided since her marriage, fifteen years ago, at Woodville. Her husband and two sisters are left to mourn her loss. The funeral service took place at her residence on Saturday, February 17th, at 2 p.m. and interment was made in Glenwood cemetery.

Edward W. Burley

At his home on Bowery Street, there passed to his last rest on Thursday, February 15th, Edward Windham Burley, aged seventy-seven years. Mr. Burley was born in Prince Edward County, a son of Joseph Burley and his wife Christina Powers, and had spent almost his entire life in Alberta where he held the position of Provincial Auditor of Alberta for many years. He had returned to Picton four years ago. Surviving are his widow, two brothers, Oscar Burley of Picton and Harry of Cressey, and one sister, Mrs. E. D. Bull of Bloomfield. The funeral service took place on Saturday afternoon at 2.30 at his late residence with Rev. David Wren conducting the service. Interment was made in Glenwood cemetery.

GIVE PAPERS ON MISSIONS

St Andrew's W.M.S. of Stirling Holds Meeting

Stirling, Feb. 17.—The February meeting of St. Andrew's W.M.S. was held on Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Mae Nolan with the president, Mrs. W. L. Anderson, presiding. After a brief preliminary devotional period, the topic prepared by Mrs. J. A. Koffend and Mrs. Mae Nolan was given. This was taken in four sections, the first being dealt with by Mrs. J. A. Koffend who treated of "Missions", the second by Mrs. A. S. Murdoff who spoke on "God Given Commissions and Promises". The third division given by Mrs. Mae Nolan was "A Modern Believer In Foreign Missions" dealing in particular with a specific case, the famous missionary, Dr. Jessie McBean. Rev. J. A. Koffend taking the fourth and final part, discussed the application of W.M.S. work in their own society and the challenge to mission work today. A trio composed of Mesdames J. A. Koffend, A. S. Murdoff and Roy Eggleton with Mrs. Murdoff at the piano rendered softly and harmoniously "Go Ye Into All the World", a hymn in perfect keeping with the previous missionary discussion. Programs for the year were distributed to the members. A dainty and delectable lunch was served by the hostess at the conclusion of the meeting.

Members of the St. Paul's W.M.S. convened in the church parlors on Wednesday afternoon for the February meeting. Following the devotional period, the minutes were submitted and the reports of the auditors and treasurer were read and sanctioned. Mrs. Cecil Macklin gave a paper "Peace", which had been prepared by Mrs. George Luery, the secretary of that department. Miss Mae Currie with Mrs. Lansing as a substitute was duly elected to attend as the Stirling delegate, the Presbyterial being held in Napanee March 14 and 15. Mrs. R. G. Cheese Factory Patrons Carry Out Provincial Organization

Aims, Objects, Financing Explained in Prospectus Sent Out

HEAD OFFICE HERE

Ontario Cheese Patrons who have been organizing themselves, county by county, during the past two years and who became federated into a Provincial Association last June, became an actual operating Association a few days ago as the result of a Conefrence of the Directors with Colonel, the Honourable Thomas L. Kennedy, Ontario Minister of Agriculture. The policy and programme presented by the Executive was officially presented and full approval of the programme was given by the Minister.

The Ontario Department of Agriculture, through Mr. Barr, Director of Dairying, has agreed to assist the Association financially to get started. By the time the cheese season gets under way it should be self-financing. Mr. S. L. Joss, well-known Central and Eastern Ontario cheese man has been engaged as Secretary-Treasurer of the Association. A representative is later to be sent to the United Kingdom.

FINANCING OF ASSOCIATION

A financial programme for the new Association was presented by R. H. Mayberry, Ingersoll, who enumerated the costs of the programme to be undertaken. A levy of five cents per thousand pounds of milk (or 1-2c per hundred pounds) turned into the cheese factories as a fund out of which to finance the county associations and the Provincial organization was decided upon. Other figures were submitted to show the deduction would average a little over $1.50 per annum per patron deducted in small amounts of a few cents from his milk cheque month by month. Twenty-five per cent. of these funds is retained for County Association purposes, and seventy-five per cent. devoted to the general promotional and sales effort.

"The success of this whole movement," Mr. Mayberry stated in conclusion, "depends upon whether farmers are prepared to take more punishment or are ready to unite for their own benefit."

EXPORTERS WILLING TO CO-OPERATE

The Montreal Export Cheese Trade have announced their willingness to co-operate with the Patrons to bring about any needed reform and to adopt a uniform set of rules and regulations for Cheese Board and Cheese purchase operations. The trade recognizes that anything done to correct the situation is to their advantage.

At a recent conference in Montreal where was represented over 90 per cent. of the handlers of Ontario cheese exported the trade went on record as being willing and anxious to co-operate with the Patrons in their move for reorganization of the marketing system in the cheese industry.

OBJECTS OF NEW ASSOCIATION

The following summarized brief prepared by the Executive sets forth the aims and objects of the new Cheese Factory Patrons' Association and indicates in what direction its energy will be first exerted.

1. To re-organize the present cheese boards with a view to stimulating competition in cheese prices.

2. To develop and increase the domestic markets for cheese as the consumption of cheese in Canada is very low compared with some other countries—only 3 1-2 pounds per capita—while in Great Britain it is three times that.

3. To impress on the Dominion Government the necessity of establishing consumers' grades for cheese in Ontario. Nearly all other agricultural products are retailed on a graded basis and the cheese factory patrons feel they should receive some share of the better prices received for cheese sold on domestic markets.

4. To consider the advisability of the provincial association establishing selling agencies or other commercial organizations to undertake domestic cheese marketing.

5. To make every effort to establish greater confidence in the minds of cheese merchants in Great Britain respecting the fine quality of Ontario cheese, especially the cheese made in the late fall and winter months.

6. To consider the advisability of establishing central grading, weighing, and storage stations in different districts at suitable points with a view to having cheese graded and weighed before it is offered for sale, and sell the cheese on score instead of on grade.

7. It is contended that the cheese patrons associations will be a powerful factor in improving production and in bringing about herd improvement and asragig for centrally located factories to operate the year round to manufacture the farmers' milk into whatever product is the most in demand.

8. To give the county associations assistance in transportation problems, purchasing supplies and reducing operating costs.

9. It will be a great advantage to the industry to maintain a commercial representative in the British market for the general purpose of promoting a better demand, at higher prices, for export cheese. Such a repersentative will keep the patrons and factories advised of market conditions and help in reducing the spread in price fluctuations.

When completely organized the Ontario Cheese Factory Patrons' Association will represent twenty counties where cheesemaking is a most important branch of their farming operations.

Each county will have a representative on the Directorate of the Provncial Association.

PAY CONVICTS IS PROPOSED

Report of Prison Superintendent is Tabled in House

Ottawa, Feb. 17. (CP)—The proposal, that convicts in penitentiaries should be paid wages is dealt with quite extensively in a report of Gen. D. M. Ormond, Superintendent of Penitentiaries, which has been tabled in the House of Commons. Miss Agnes MacPhail (U. F. Grey Southeast) urged payment to prisoners in her speech in the Commons this week.

In his report the superintendent set out that during the year ending March 31 last $2,755,843, being $556.97 per convict, was expended for confinement and maintenance of convicts in penitentiaries only. This cost would be slightly under 1.70 per day "which is probably more than the average earned by free labor during the same period." The proposals advanced for the payment of convicts in most cases have suggested that the cost of keeping them confined be taken from wages, and the balance be either used to support dependents or be given as a lump sum when a convict has completed his term.

BIGGER! FASTER! MORE RUGGED THAN EVER!

Yet New Dodge Still Priced Right Down Among the Lowest Price Cars!

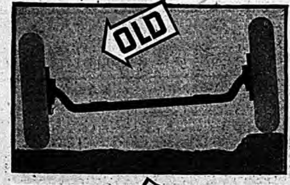
WHEREVER people talk about automobiles, Dodge is sure to get first mention—because it is Canada's most-talked-about car! But wait till you hear motorists rave about these new, bigger Dodge Sixes for 1934!

They have everything that made thousands switch to Dodge last year—style, ruggedness, safety—plus new features and improvements that again make them the biggest dollar-for-dollar values you can buy!

A NEW front-wheel suspension called "Floating-Cushion" Wheels. A NEW ventilating system—improved, perfected—with 7 points of ease and convenience. NEW luxury. NEW appointments. NEW economy.

And in 1934—as in 1933—Dodge asks you to be your own judge of values with the "Show-Down" Plan. It gives you the plain, unvarnished facts about automobiles. Lets you check the Dodge Sixes against the other cars for features . . . economy . . . safety. Ask any Dodge dealer about this startling Plan.

See the new, bigger Dodge Sixes at the Auto Show or at your dealer's. See with your own eyes how much they offer you—how far ahead of the others they are.



DODGE "FLOATING-CUSHION" WHEELS—No matter how bumpy the road may be, Dodge new front-wheel suspension assures smooth, level driving. When the front-wheel of the Dodge strikes a bump, the wheel—independent of the rest of the car—rises and falls with the bump. No jar. No shock. No tilting of the car.

With "Floating-Cushion" Wheels (tested over thousands of miles of rocky, furrowed country), patented Floating Power engine mountings, hydraulic shock absorbers, shock-proof cross-steering, Airwheel tires and long 117-inch wheelbase, Dodge is the only car in its field to offer all these advantages!

NEW DODGE "7-POINT VENTILATION"—An improved and perfected ventilating system. (1) Cowl ventilator. (2) Windshield opens or closes by means of crank on the instrument board. (3) Front half of forward window may be swung open in "butterfly" fashion. (4) Rear half of the window can be raised or lowered independently of the "butterfly." (5) Both halves of the forward window may be locked into a single unit and raised or lowered together—just as an ordinary window. (6) Rear door window, raised or lowered. (7) Rear quarter window has "butterfly" draft control.

Dodge would not adopt any ventilating system until Dodge engineers had perfected it. Dodge "7-point Ventilation" is an improvement over ordinary systems. It is more than a way of controlling drafts because it allows for thorough ventilation under all conditions of weather and climate.

At last! A simple, quick, easy way to open the windshield . . . just turn the crank! Operates instantly, adjusts to any desired opening, at a touch of your fingers. Works a new way—by means of an ingenious steel band. Holds windshield firmly . . . makes rattling impossible. One of the seven great features of the new Dodge ventilation system.

NEW BIGGER "AIRWHEEL" TIRES—Dodge gives these plump low-pressure "Airwheel" tires to you—bigger than ever—as standard equipment. They add to the smart style of the new, bigger Dodge. And they add safety, too—grip the road better; reduce skidding hazard. New distinguished hubcaps.

CLEVER FORGER GIVEN TWO YEARS IN PRISON

Court Amazed at Imitations With So Meagre Tools

Yorkton, Sask., Feb. 17 (CP)—Willie Muchyluk, 17-year-old Sturgis youth, today faced a sentence of two years imprisonment. Before Magistrate J. MacDonald he pleaded guilty to forging Bank of Toronto five dollar notes. A companion, Nick Okraintz, who pleaded guilty to uttering, received a similar sentence.

Perfect specimens of bank-notes produced with a paint brush, a box of school paints, a home-made die and linen paper were placed on exhibit. The court expressed astonishment that a boy could have forged the clever imitations with such meagre tools.

In view of the boy's age and his evident gift for art, Magistrate MacDonald said it was hoped employment could be found for Michyluk or some school of training willing to accept him. His parole then would be recommended.

NOT NATURE'S WAY

A story appeared a few days ago of a woman who is getting a third set of teeth in her old age, while her hair is turning dark, and here eyesight is steadily growing better.

This story was so strange as to arouse comment but doctors affirm that it is not possible to grow young.

The whole trend of nature is against the view that human beings can grow from age to youth physically. Nor would it be desirable if the plan of nature is to propagate the race, making is possible for generation to succeed generation. The weight of evidence is against rejuvescence from the octogenarian. Old wound not care to return slowly to the years of inexperience and finally to childhood and then infancy, gradually to disappear. Life is not made that way. Some persons may think somewhere there has been a fault in nature, a lack of completeness which allows man to grow old, and die when he might be of the utmost importance in life. But nature has drawn a veil over her ways, which we faintly recognize or recognize only in the dimmest outline while religion strives to give the answer.

The doctors were right—returning youth may be a spiritual experience but not a physical.

LIVE ATTRACTIONS

A strong defence of the black bear is made by Jack Miner, the eminent Canadian naturalist and lover of wild life in an article "What is Worth Most to Ontario, Live or Dead Attractions?" He claims that ninety per cent. of the population use only their eyes or a kodak and prefer live birds and game to less than ten per cent. or "the gunners" who "take all from the ninety per cent. while the ninety per cent take nothing from the shooters, but are constantly building up their sport."

Jack Miner comments: "I say without hesitation that only family of our big white tailed deer bounding across the highway and possibly stepping into the range of a tourist kodak and movie camera is worth more to more people of Ontario than twenty-five dead deer hanging back in the woods or even hanging in sight of our tourists, and remember the white tailed deer are no comparison to our lordly moose which the majority of hunters would shoot first.

"Those living sights and pictures are as good as golden wheat fields, dollars and cents among our rocky picturesque country. Yes, I say one hundred dollars brought into Ontario by tourists is just as good as $100 worth of wheat going out of Ontario. Moreover it is apt to be distributed among people who do not own land to grow wheat. Best of all live attractions are self advertising, for illustration tens of thousands of people go to Yellowstone Park in the United States and they spend tens of thousands of dollars and all they get out of it is the pictures of the bears and other live attractions, yet these photos and movies cause thousands of more people to go and spend their money, yet our innocent black bear of Ontario has hardly ever had any consideration yet he is one of the most attractive animals Ontario has today and if given a chance would be the most pictured animals we have in this province. Very true, he is mischievous but no comparison to a pack of our dogs. Why bless your life the garbage from the hotels in a small city or town in the north or even a lamber camp can be placed to bait them where the public can picture them nearly every day in the summer and will only shuffle quietly away while your truck dumps garbage for them and their movie pictures would go on the screens in all the big cities at our front or side door to the United States."

In support of his position in regard to bears, Miner argues: "Thus the fact I want to point out is the bear have always been here and the moose came in and have multiplied and increased in the midst of the bear by hundreds of thousands. There may be odd cases where a bear kills a calf moose or a sickly weak cow moose in the spring of the year but these are so few and far fetched that the moose themselves tell the whole truth by increasing to such numbers. As further proof of this at Metagama, Ontario, in 1900 there were no moose but lots of bear. Last year Mr. M. U. Bates in his advertisement to get hunters to come to his camp stated that during the past three years that forty-five bears had been taken as well as seventy-four bull moose. These bull moos were calves at one time. If bear were so destructive the moose wou'dn't have increased to such an extend in their midst.

"Don't think that I am opposed to a limited amount of shooting, far, far from it, but I do say that ninety per cent of the nature lovers that love live attractions should be considered first. Moreover when the fall comes and a reasonable open season is permitted the wealthiest of Yankee sportsment will want to come back and will leave tens of thousands of dollars with the government for licenses and hundreds of dollars with guides, gas stations and needy people during their fall hunt, but we must allow live attractions to multiply first, brought about by careful government legislation and co-operation and education of the settlers and trappers who live there."

GRAVE and GAY (Supervised by The Lamplighter)

MY PROBLEM

My neighbor polishes floor and shelf,
Shines her windows until they gleam,
Sweeps and dusts and airs and shakes
Everything, till all shining clean
Is her home beside, a joy to eye.
I'm ashamed of mine, but the day is short,
And letters are needed, it seems, I'll try
To clean mine, too, when I've written this.
I must point the way for this child,a-right,
To the one who is ill, I must send a word,
To the one who is downcast, a ray oflight.
Oh, dear, I am weary and still my rooms
Are dusty, cluttered, my rugs unswept,
While thought is calling for wings—a thought
That will not be downed and cannot be kept.

The day goes fast—Life is passing on—
I wonder if dusting should have to wait.
I would like to rest in a shining home,
But what if my message should come too late.

TRAMP PRINTERS ARE EXTINCT, or nearly so, for seldom is seen in city or country print shop the itinerant printer who works a day or a week and moves on again urged by the wanderlust for going places without getting anywhere. Tramp printers, or tourist printers as they loved to call themselves were a picturesque and interesting lot in the old hand-set days when a typesetter had to justify his work or quit. A current weekly magazine has an article about "The Old Tramp Printer," by a newspaper man who, when he graduated as a journeyman printer, took the usual post-graduate course on the road, but it was too brief for him to get much of the picture. Take any printers' hangout in the back room of a saloon in the cities of the United States or Canada in the days of the tourist printer, and over the shupers and schooners which crossed the bar steadily there would be a flood of reminiscence of the "road" in the hectic days of fifty cents a thousand ems, more or less, that would fill volumes with some of the most interesting narratives ever written. The tramp printer, or tourist printer, was not a hobo—the hobo is a derisive cognomen designating a tramp who will not work—the tourist printer was a gentleman adventurer, who asked not alms but was regularly grub-staked by his own kind in a general freemasonery which assumed that "my turn may come next." If there was no work immediately available the printers who were working would see that the tourist printer was provided with eats and also enough money for his immediate needs, then all he had to do was to register at the printers' "spiritual" hangout, always near the big newspaper offices, and get acquainted with the free lunch counter — while the Wurzburger flowed without stint, and the newest arrived tramp printer was the hero of the hour, especially if he had any background and previous reputation for long jumps and interesting adventures here, there and everywhere, hitting the blind baggage, ditched in the desert, crossing the Rocky Mountains and even crossing the ocean. Belleville was a regular port of call for a number of tramp printers in the old hand-set days, good printers all, but afflicted with the wanderlust, and generally a thirst which was hard to support adequately on a beer income. That was before the days of canned heat and rubbing alcohol, although lemon extract was coming into favor as an emergency beverage. Old time typos in this city have vivid recollections of many picturesque characters who roamed at will in the summertime, just working enough to balance their slim budget, and parked in the cities in the winter where there was enough "subbing" or extra work, to keep them going. Tramp or tourist cigarmakers, tailors, painters, and other tradesmen were also common before labor-saving machinery got in its deadly work and displaced the artisan who created things by the skill of hand and eye and artistic skill. Just another phase of the ever changing panorama which presents a new world to each succeeding generation while the greybeards wonder "what the world's coming to anyway."

CONTROLLING CHILDREN BY FEAR UNWISE

Fear Undermines Personality, Ambition And Forcefulness

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D.
Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright, 1934, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Most of us adults were raised on Fear. And those among us who have failed to see how pernicious such training is are bringing up their children in the same way.

It is the easiest thing in the world to frighten a child. It is convenient. It yields quick and decided results.

But study the childhood background of sufferers from "nerves," as I have done, and in scores of the cases it is fear, away back, that started the nervousness off.

Naturally, a child commits social errors, is mischievous and otherwise misbehaves. It must be coerced and socialized—but not with fear!

Frighten a child ever so little and you never can fortell what this is going to do to its immature, groping developing mind.

Let us remember that the world is bigger than the child and that as the child comes more and more into contact with the world's harness and its rigid standards, he naturally is timid. We must really try to remove rather than create fear. We must encourage the child to be brave.

Let us not tear down, but build up. Let us make positive suggestions to our children instead of negative ones. Let us cut "don't" out of our vocabulary entirely. Let us stop threatening.

Morality and social conduct, which are built up upon fear, offer but a shaky and flimsy foundation to depend upon. We can teach children what is right and what is wrong; we can teach them kindness, courtesy, tolerance, honesty, loyalty and all the other virtues by positive example, showing that it pays in the end to behave in an upright manner so that we become thereby more and more acceptable to our fellow human beings as well as to ourselves.

But trying to scare children into decent behavior only makes them evasive and sneaky. A child must learn to want to do right because doing right makes him happy.

One point the psychoanalytic school of psychology has brought out and emphasized is the effect of fear which may be entirely unconscious. In other words, the adult has fear lodged in his unconscious or subconscious mind, usually from childhood, and this subtly undermines his personality—ambition, forcefulness and general conduct without his realizing what the true scurce of the trouble is.

Fear makes cowards of us all and it is, in effect, cowardly for one person to inculcate fear in another, especially when the threat is pure humbug and the victim must believe because he trusts, or is too innocent and immature to know better.

Education has laid bare the evils of inspiring fear. Teachers are taking the time nowadays to gain the child's co-operation and understanding.

Reason with your child and build up intellectual strength so that devastating emotions such as fear will not assume too important a place in his character.

Fear is always destructive.

Make your child's thinking, as well as your own, constructive!

Dr. Bisch's Daily Diet Hint

Although salt is necessary in any diet, not only to render the food palatable but also as a health necessity, people in general are apt to go to extremes and use either too much salt or too little. Two grams a day per person is an average amount, including what is usually added to the food in cooking and a slight addition, made after it is served. Excessive use of salt may injure health, while too little of it may cause weakness.

CRATER OF VOLCANO CHOSEN FOR PEACE

Rev. Father Hubbard Hopes to "See Something in Alaska"

Victoria, Feb. 17—I am again going into the crater of Aniakchak volcano and stay a few weeks. There I can have absolute quiet and peace and perhaps finish my book on Aniakchak," stated Father Bernard R. Hubbard, S.J. "The Glacier priest" of Alaska, Father Hubbard is in Victoria for one of his periodical rests at St. Joseph's Hospital.

He expects to have another brief vacation in Victoria before sailing for Alaska early in May.

"It is now 21 years since the valley of 10,000 smokes blew up," Father Hubbard said, "and according to the 23 year cycle of volcanoes, it should be active this summer. We hope to see something."

Father Hubbard said he would explore the volcanic regions of the Alaska peninsula and the Aleutian islands by airplane and prepare a new map of that area to replace the one made 21 years ago and now out of date. He will chart all volcanoes and mark them dormant or

(From Our Special Travelling Representative, MR. G. M. JAMES).

ARTICLE VI.

Since our last letter a week ago we have found out a great deal about Florida in general and Miami in particular. Tourists can spend just as much money per week as they wish. The hotels are the most expensive running from five dollars to twenty dollars a day per person with meals extra. There are many excellent restaurants in Miami and most people eat there. Then as with us there are many Tourist Homes everywhere, even next door to the finest hotels where you can live as comfortably and as moderately as if you were at home. Taking into account cost of fuel, electricity, food and other home expenses at Belleville, we estimate that it is not costing us any more to live here than it would if we were home. For those who would like to enjoy the sunshine and beauty of Florida, it is chiefly a consideration of being able to get away for a few weeks. We believe it is well worth the effort.

Visitors to the south hear much of the C.W.A. (Civil Works Administration) which corresponds very closely with our Unemployment Relief System in details and method of operation. Everywhere you go south of the border you find groups of men at construction work of various kinds. We have been informed that had not this C.W.A. system been established on a nation-wide basis, there would have been a civil war as so many were in desperate circumstances and, that if it is withdrawn too soon, robbery and murder will be rampant. As we see conditions everything seems to be peaceful and normal.

Miami is jubilant over the largest influx of tourists since the year of the slump, 1929, and consequently all are jubilant. During the very prosperous years just prior to 1929 there was unprecedented real estate building and speculation throughout Florida; then the slump came with the result that you can buy a nice home in Miami today for less than two thousand dollars similar to one in Belleville that would be worth at least six thousand. The unfinished Roosevelt hotel in Miami is a good illustraton of present conditions. A company was organised to build this hotel at an estimated cost of one million dollars. The walls are up (red brick the only thing of that kind here), the roof is on, the windows are in place except a few dozen at the top but the interior is unfinished. The company ran out of money and were unable to raise another few thousand. The mortgage was foreclosed, and the property was sold for one hundred thousand dollars. Soon the second holders were in financial difficulties and the property changed hands again for ten thousand dollars. Many smaller properties have recently had a similar history. Hence with the return of good times it is easy to understand why so many people are smiling and cheerful here. We have never run into so much sunshine in both sky and hearts before and truly it seems so far just like a lovely dream. "It's just a bit of Heaven."

Our first Sunday in Miami was spent morning and evening at "The White Temple" whose pastor is Dr. Glenn C. James, a veteran of the Great War, who is slightly lame due to being wounded on the Western Front. We roughly estimate that his church will seat about three thousand. Every seat was taken before the service began. "There are two perfectly good seats beside me on the platform if any care to occupy them," announced the pastor as he arose to open the morning service. We have previously reported a similar congregation at Detroit and from these and others we have seen on this continent and in the British Isles, we think we can give the recipe for a large, eager, attentive congregation:

"1. The subject must be interesting.

2. The message must be delivered in a clear, distinct, simple manner.

3. The foregoing are usually observed but nevertheless both saints and sinners go to sleep. The simple secret lies in a few questions interspersed at intervals throughout the discourse. These questions are a challenge to interest and attention well known to the trained teacher. Moreover it gives the pew a chance to be a silent partner in the service and they like it. They are stimulated and follow every word and thought to be ready for the next question. Since the Great War all people in every land have been asking many questions and at the same time trying to answer them. They want reality, the substance, now, not the shadow. Ask the question, give the audience a few seconds to think and then slowly answer it from the pulpit. Scan the faces in the pews and it will at once be evident that they are satisfied both with their own thoughts and those of the pulpit. The best services that we attended in London and Edinburgh nearly two years ago were of this type and we have found many other illustrations in this country and in Ontario. Dr. James was a model of this type and very effective.

4. The writer now adds another item to this formula; it has never been used perhaps but present day conditions demand it. At the close of every church service just before the benediction give the pew an opportunity to ask a few questions while fresh in his mind and while he is in the mood. The answer would come from the pulpit or perhaps from another pew. In this way the church could help greatly. Christ both asked and answered many questions in a spirit of sympathy and helpfulness.

The officials and police of Miami are so kind and broad-minded that their city has become somewhat of a danger zone due to thousands of autos passing through its streets hourly at too fast a rate of speed even at intersections. A city paper has just given the January traffic report as follows: "Miami's traffic toll for January was five killed and one hundred and sixteen injured in a total of two hundred and eight accidents." The report shows that this is much higher than the report for the same month last year. A few days after our arrival a drunken driver of a truck raced down a street and killed two little boys before they had time to escape. We find it much more difficult to cross many streets here than in London, England, and consequently must exercise the utmost caution. As a result no doubt of the above facts, the Mayor and other officials of Miami have erected a warning 100 feet by 20 feet on a prominent corner which indicates pretty clearly that "reckless, smart aleck auto drivers" are headed for jail here.

The temperature of a typical day in the city recently has been maximum 73 degrees, minimum 55 degrees. At the Beach six miles east it is a little warmer due to the presence of much sand and the Atlantic Ocean with the Gulf stream one and a half miles off shore. There the air is 78 degrees and the water 72.

There is so much to write about amusements here that it is difficult to decide what to select or where to begin. Horse racing will be a source of interest for many for the next month as races are being run daily at Hialeah Park about ten miles north of the city. Twenty thousand people attend daily and bet many thousands on their favorites. We have met some nice women who have attended, bet and lost with a real smile.

All visitors here take the available sight-seeing tours in busses under capable guides and they are splendid. Our first tour went from Miami city where we reside to Miami Beach, a distance of six miles: Both municipalities are independent cities. Miami city has a population of nearly two hundred thousand, half of which are transient visitors while Miami Beach has a steady population of ten thousand with a variable floating population sometimes to a maximum of one hundred thousand. The two municipalities are separated by Biscayne Bay, thirty-five miles long and one and a quarter wide (average), an inlet of the Atlantic Ocean. Miami city touches the Bay at Bayfront Park which covers forty acres all of which soil has been pumped from the Bay. This park cost nearly a million dollars to reclaim and lay it out as it is. Miami Beach is reached by three causways which are really bridges from land to land or island to island. The last causway was finished in 1917 and is over three miles long from island to island across five small islands. Trolleys, busses and autos cross these causways incessantly. The city of Miami Beach consists chiefly of one hundred and twenty-five man-made islands, called very appropriately Venetian Islands, the soil of which was pumped from the Bay. These islands are all connected together by bridges but only thirty-five so far have houses built upon them. Star Island is the most select and exclusive of the group as it contains the homes of many of America's millionaires, who made their fortunes in malted milk, pumps, vacuum cleaners and many other similar necessities. Bankers and authors are also well represented. Al Capone, the notorious Chicago racketeer, who is doing a long term in prison at Atlanta, Georgia, has a lovely, pure white home in this select group, also Tex Ryckardt (now deceased but his widow survives) who promoted prize fights and the building of hotels. We also saw the beautiful home and grounds of the son of Hetty Green, who in her day was the richest and most economical woman in the world as she is alleged to have lived in a furnished room and to have worn only one dress for thirty-five years. These homes with grounds suitably laid out with lawns, trees, shrubs and flowers are all different and all "Just bits of Heaven". They are all built of stucco, the white prevailing, then a yellow tint and then a few in other becoming shades. Nearly every roof consists of red tile so common in France and parts of rural England. Plants, vines, and shrubs are in luxuriant bloom. The effect is so beautiful that it defies verbal description and explains why the occupants might not care to die. The black, rich, surface soil for homes and parks in all this district is brought from the Everglades in southern Florida where grass and jungle growth has been decaying for ages like the soil of our western prairies. For miles along the ocean the fine pure sand is covered in daytime by thousands of people of all ages from babies to the aged infirm in full bathing suit (very strict regulations on this point) either taking a sun bath and turning to the colour of an Indian or wading out in the waters of the ocean (72 degrees usually). Mere observers are so few that there is scarcely any provision for their comfort or convenience. The Atlantic Ocean near shore is a light green but at the horizon it is a lovely deep blue in bright sunlight. Many fishing vessels and ocean vessels are always in sight. A mile or more from shore the great Gulf Stream, 35 miles wide, flows by on its way from the Caribbean Sea near the West Indies to Newfoundland and the British Isles making both much warmer than they otherwise would be. Judged by the numbers participating and by the amount of Indian tan, the Beach is one of Miami's most popular sources of amusement.

There is another source of amusement here which is very considerable, the Astrologer and his Horoscope. Two men and a woman with numerous charts are conducting this campaign on a vacant lot on the busiest street (Flagler Street) here. They operate from the rear platform of an auto which they claim cost twenty thousand dollars in which they live and travel. They are always surrounded by a large, laughing crowd and we venture the opinion that they receive every day including Sunday, more dollar bills than any other single business in Miami. Was Barnum right? "People like to be humbugged."

The astrologers here argue that everything is subject to the influence of the planets, the tides, every blade of grass, life itself. They can tell you the birthday of every great person living and dead. They find that persons born in August (Virgo sign) are similar in disposition, qualities and defects. Similarly for the other months but each month very different from every other. They have charted all this matter-of-fact knowledge and have established twelve types each having good and bad qualities. Their business is to show you the type to which you belong, the method of attainment and the defects to be overcome.

"When were you born, lady?" says the younger of the men pointing to a lady nearby.

"August 25th," came the prompt, confiding reply.

"Your sign is Virgo and you are the salt of the earth; nothing finer or grander is ever born than your type. You belong to the literary, artistic, orderly class but you have one weakness, you must be loved all the time and your husband must say every hour of the day that you are the most wonderful woman in the world or you are downcast. You are also inclined to be rather critical of others because you realise that they are far below your own high standard and this might lead in time to unhappiness for you. Am I right?"

"Yes sir," came the reply as if a naughty child had been discovered.

"Our Horoscope will help you very much, only one dollar, have one?"

This refined, well-dressed lady yielded as thousands of others have done during the past few days, paid her money and went away with her book, tightly pressed to her heart.

"When were you born, young man?" The date was given and then the sweet lad heard the following: "If I were a hotel keeper and the lady who just left came for a room, I would charge her four dollars a day but if you came I would charge you eight dollars a day for the same room and the same privileges."

In utter amazement, "Why?" rang out from many open mouths.

"For the towels, spoons and other useful articles that would be missing when he left." The lad hung his head and went his way as best he could. Perhaps it was true but it seemed unnecessarily brutal and unkind.

Bootlegging of Stock Seen by Exchange Head

"If the brokerage business is to live," O'Brien said, "this bill must be modified. Brokers will not be content to just make a living."

Campbellford Maroons Annex Group Title Defeating Dohertys 6-1 on Game and 9-3 on Round

Fred Ingram, Defenceman Stands Out in Smart Game

ALL OVER

Winners to Meet Queens in Next Round of Playdowns

"It's all over".

"The Maroons won".

"The better team won."

"And the local intermediates are all washed up for this year".

"Congratulations Campbellford, your are worthy champions and won the title in a fitting manner."

"Fans—that all but tells the tale, of course the score now comes—Campbellford 6, Belleville 1, and on the rounds the Maroons won the [illegible] a 9 to 3 score, there isn't [illegible] more to say".

Completely out-playing the Belleville D.A.C. intermediates in every department, the Campbellford Maroons eliminated the Belleville intermediates from further O.H.A. competition, when the Hydro Town pucksters literally walked home to a 6 to 1 route over the locals at Campbellford before a packed house of rabid fans last night.

Starring Fred Ingram throughout the Maroons out-played, out-generalled and annexed their first intermediate O.H.A. group championship, after three years of knocking at the group title's door, last evening. Too many words of praise cannot be meted out to the Maroons in the clean cut manner in which they defeated the locals in the group finals, while to show their sportsman-like acknowledgement of bowing in defeat the local pucksters, after giving their all in the cause not only congratulated the Maroons in victory but personally went to their dressing room after their defeat to wish the victors every success in their future O.H.A. endeavours.

Fred Ingram Stands Out

As was previously stated Fred Ingram stood aloft and above all others to appear on the ice last evening and not only stemmed, repeatedly, the local tide of attacks, but led the Maroons to victory with three well earned goals to his credit. Fred was undoubtedy the best [illegible]er on the ice. Following in his [illegible]-steps was Don Morton, the ex-Stirling, Oshawa goalie, who turned back, repeatedly the scoring attempts of the locals by his miraculous saves in the Maroons' nets. "Buster" Whitton led the attack of the first line forwards of the winners with Bush entering into the picture occasionally. Ken Davis surprised all and sundry by passing out repeated passes of the puck that eventually resulted into goals being scored. Incidentall ythe entire Maroon machine clicked perfectly all evening and worked like a well-oiled machine. The winners played a perfect waiting game and were amply rewarded for their efforts.

For the locals no blame of the defeat can be laid at the door of Rube Buskard, their goalkeeper, as he literally kicked out the proverbial million, so often did the Maroons press. Jim Ethier was by far the best local player both coming and going. His rushes were effective and his rear-guard work stood-out. Alex Weir also played his usual steady game. As for the local forwards they were repeatedly bottled up by the superb back-checking efforts of the Maroons and found a five-man defence in front of them all evening. Each and every local forward gave his all with Covert leading closely followed by Carl and Pete Morgan. Connors went well as did McGuire in spots. In all the better team won and no more can be said.

The Dohertys opened the play purely on the offensive and carried the play for the first few minutes. The scoring was opened by Fred Ingram, when he rifled home a pass from Davis only to have the latter bat in McWilliams' pass but a few minutes later. Fred Ingram again demonstrated his wares by driving home another perfect pass from Davis as the initial frame ended. Although the locals were purely on the offensive in the middle frame and carried the majority of the play they scored one goal, that coming when Alex Weir batted home a pass-out after scramble around the Maroons net. Both goalies stood out this frame. Throwing caution to the wind and assuming purely the offensive the locals moved all forward in the last frame only to have the Maroons play a waiting game and break away to score three more goals. F. Ingram scored once, while Whitton bagged two this period. Repeatedly the locals missed golden opportunities to score through over-anxiousness. Again we say— "Congratulations Maroons."

The game was well handled by Referee Thompson, with Belleville taking five and ampbellford eight of the 13 penalties meted out.

The line-ups:

Campbellford—Goal, Morton; defence Fred Ingram and Harry Ingram; centre, Whitton; wings, Bush and Henry; subs, Davis, McWilliams, Shannon and MacArthur.

Belleville—Goal, Buskard; defence Rigby, and Ethier; centre, Covert; wings, Pete and Carl Morgan; subs [illegible] Morgan; Connors, McGuire and Weir.

Referee—C. E. Thompson.

PRE-GAME PREDICTIONS

(By the Canadian Press)

Pudgy Jack Adams, who packs a lot of hockey experience behind a smile, that won't wipe off, had a wider grin than ever today as he anticipated his Red Wings would finish the week-end with a stronger grasp on the National Hockey League American Division top spot than they have had in weeks.

While Black Hawks and New York Rangers, his opposition in the hectic rave for first place, are battling each other at Chicago Sunday night Adams' wings will face somewhat softer opposition in Ottawa Senators.

The Detroit Manager figures the fact the other candidates for division honors are meeting each other and the probability of Wings beating Senators gives him at least a temporary advantage. He holds a one point lead now over Rangers and if he can pick up two from Ottawa his chances will be greatly improved especially if there is a tie at Chicago.

Boston, out of the point-pinching race, play Leafs tonight with Eddie Shore scheduled to line up on Toronto ice for the second time since the Bailey incident at Boston. Shore received a sportsmanlike greeting from Toronto's hockey fans, when he played in the All-Star game here Wednesday.

He expects nothing of the kind tonight but feels after Wednesday's reception that any booes, that come his way will be the sort his colorful play always brings out on foreign ice.

With Montreal Canadiens idle, New York Americans hope to edge closer to third place in the Canadian section by beating Maroons in Montreal tonight. The Gerardmen, in second place with a lead of three points over Habitants, need the points almost as badly as the Ameriks.

JUNIORS PLAY ON MONDAY

Last Minute Order From O.H.A. Switches Arrangements First Made

Despite the fact, that the local junior O.H.A. club were ordered to play in group No. 1 finals versus the Queen's juniors this (Saturday) evening, last minute information from the executive of the O.H.A. body last evening cancelled tonight's tilt after Manager Thomas had well advertised the match.

The sudden information was received by Mr. Thomas late Friday night after he had strenuously objected to home referees for the coming series with Queens. Earlier in the day Secretary W. A. Hewitt had assured Mr. Thomas that the winners of group No. 1, Belleville and Queen's juniors, would have to be decided as quickly as possible. With such information at hand Mr. Thomas immediately advertised the game with the result, that a sudden reversal of arrangements was made at the last minute. The latest information received by the local club was to the effect, that the first game would be played in Belleville on Monday night with the return game being played in Kingston on Wednesday evening. With the local intermediates now out of O.H.A. competition a goodly crowd should be on hand to witness the junior tussle on Monday evening.

SCHOOL OFFICER BUSY

It was a busy month for the School Attendance officer in this city during January, it was revealed by the month's report submitted to the Board of Education on Friday evening. A total of 146 calls to homes were made during the month in tracing errant scholars. Four home permits were issued.

As Max Schmeling Went Down to Defeat

Another tragedy of the modern ring took place in Philadelphia the other night when up-and-coming Steve Hamas, former football star, ended at it began, the comeback trail for Max Schmeling, former German world's heavyweight champion. The fight, a bloody one, which had 16,000 fans in a continuous uproar, proved beyond a doubt that Schmeling is through, and, that Hamas can now take his place as a contender for the heavyweight crown. The picture shows Hamas throwing a hard left into Schmeling's face.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

New champions of the local intermediate loop were crowned last evening when the Campbellford Maroons eliminated the Belleville D.A.C. from O.H.A. competition in a game that stamped the "Millers" as worthy title holders of the local group. The "Millers" or Hydro Town aspirants, which ever you may wish to call them, rose to the occasion and outplayed the locals from the goal-mouth to the last substitute used.

• • •

There are no alibis, the Maroons completely and decisively obliterated the locals to not only win both games but prove their superior ability throughout. Honors must be passed out to Fred Ingram, the Miller's stellar defenceman, who out-played, out-starred and was beyond a shadow of a doubt the best player on the ice last evening. Fred not only stemmed the local tide of offence but led the "Millers" on the offensive and returned after an injury to steady his team and carry lone-handed the honors of victory. Morton, in the nets, brother Harry and Buster Whitton may have helped in the cause but Fred Ingram out-shone and out-played not only the locals but all to appear on the ice. His defensive endeavors were superb, while he carried the puck on the offensive to not only score three beals, but carry the play repeatedly into the Doherty's territory. Too much praise cannot be tossed in Fred's path. Early in the second period he was forced to retire owing to injuries received at the hands of his own team mate, Buster Whitton, but he returned to the pastime to star where he left off.

Following the game the locals swarmed into the Maroons' dressing room and wished them every success in future O.H.A. games and assured them that they were with them to a man in winning the intermediate championship. For over three seasons now the Maroons have been knocking at a group championship door and realized their dream last night when they eliminated the locals by the decisive score of 9 to 3 on the round. Manager Jay Perris' charges now meet the fast-travelling Queen's intermediates in the next round and they will have the whole-hearted support of the local fans, not only in spirit, but in person. "May they enjoy the honors the locals expected." No wise cracks from Peterboro are expected.

Once again the local senior interscholastic senior basketball team won the local Bay of Quinte group when the B.C.I.V.S. cagers defeated the Picton seniors at the collegiate last evening. The local junior cagers came to life and downed the Picton kids 34 to 4 and created a tie with the Trenton juniors, in their respective loop. Coach George Laughlin has labored long and hard with the two collegiate cage teams and today realizes some distinction for his efforts. The seniors as champions of the Bay of Quinte group enter the C.O.S.S.A. play-downs, while the juniors will now have to meet the Trenton kids in a sudden death game, possibly at Albert College. Incidentally the champion B.C.I.V.S. senior girls are playing an exhibition game at Queen's this evening. The seniors swamped their Picton rivals by a 52 to 14 score with Art Cole bagging 25 of the local's points.

• • •

"In again, off again, on again, Finnigan" seems to be the junior O.H.A. situation locally. After assuring Skipper Ed Thomas that the Queen's-Belleville series must start on Saturday night L. Belleville the executive of the parent body up and informs Skipper Thomas that tonight's tilt is off until Monday night. The matter came to a head when Manager Thomas objected to home and home referees; as after the objection the series was postponed. Did the Kingston sponsors have anything to do with the postponement? Ed Thomas was willing to take a financial loss and play the initial game here tonight but after his refusal of the suggested officials the series was shunted on until next week. Why?

At any rate the local kids now meet the highly heralded Queen's juniors in the first game of the play-offs here on Monday night with the return game being played at Kingston next Wednesday. Manager Thomas has called an extra practice tonight and expects two or three newcomers to join the fold as he is in the field for a new right winger. The remainder of the local roster is in fine condition and should give a good account of their season's endeavors against Queen's.

While hockey is on the wain the local bowlers in the city are right in the thick of their season's activities. Over at the Y.M.C.A. alleys afternoon and evening leagues are flourishing while the same holds good at the Recreation Alley rooms. Numerous records have been established on the Recreation Alleys this year with the Bank of Commerce team holding the current season's alley record of 3446. The Bank of Commerce team is composed of the following five this semester: H. Mein, P. Belnap, W. Walroth, L. Barrett and Lester Shiels. Whenever you see Les Shiels, Leo Barrett and Pat Belnap on the same bowling team—well, just keep a keen eye on that team as they're bound to be well up in the league race when the curtain is rung down on the season's activities.

Various sport columnists about the province have voiced their personal opinions relating to the newly proposed "commercial" hockey series sponsored by the O.H.A. in order to stimulate interest, especially in the senior series. The principal criticism against the proposal is the overwhelmingly powerful medium of free advertising that will be afforded the firms to sponsor hockey teams in the future. The main objection, however, will be the inability of bona fide amateur clubs in competing against these "packed commercial" teams On the surface it looks like another ten strike for the larger centres where the industrial concerns flourish, while the smaller centres will lose, through trafficking, more good players than ever before. The better players demand work and the large industrial concerns can offer better inducements.

After condemning the proposed innovation of commercialized hockey M. J. "Mike" Rodden, sports editor of the Toronto Globe, adds: "There are, we are told, two sides to every story, and the above conditions may have been more than balanced by the other side of the Ontario amateur hockey tale, in the eyes of the O.H.A. officials. It is this: There is reason to believe that the rules of amateurism are surreptitiously ignored by many of Ontario's hockey clubs in more ways than one; that personal gain is sought by club backers, and that the players themselves are subsidized. Perhaps the O.H.A. executive members have taken cognizance of these conditions, and, without trying to check them, have decided that commercial hockey is preferable. Even so, that does not make it any easier for those clubs which are trying to abide faithfully by the rules of the O.H.A. in particular, and amateur sport in general."

B.C.I. CAGERS WIN 2 GAMES

Seniors Win Group Title While Juniors Create Tie With Trenton

While the local senior B.C.I. & V.S. basketball team were annexing another group championship their junior brothers created a tie with the Trenton juniors when the local collegiate cagers won a twin bill from the Picton H. S. basketball teams last evening at the Collegiate gymnasium, when the Laughlin-coached seniors waltzed home to an easy win by the score of 52 to 14 and the juniors returned to form and win a decisive 34 to 4 victory.

The junior victory in the Bay of Quinte group creates a tie between the Trenton H.S. juniors and the local kids, each having lost but one game in group basketball competition and demanding a sudden death game to decide the group championship. The local seniors romped home to a group championship again this season, without having suffered a single defeat.

Starring Art Cole, who counted 25 of his teammates' 52 points, the local seniors literally walked home to an easy victory over their Picton senior rivals. Defensively Ostrom and Hilton stemmed all attempts of the visitors in scoring and added considerably to their offensive. Fred Forster followed Cole in scoring points, while Welsh was the large point-gainer for Picton.

The line-ups:

B.C.I. & V.S. seniors—Hilton 4, Ostrom 4, Cole 25, Martin, Faulkner 4, Forster 13, Temple 2, Henry, Mylchryst, Countryman and Cowain 2.

Picton Seniors—Palmatier, Hollingsworth 3, Foley 3, Mallett 2, Welsh 6, Yanover, Walters and Seeley.

In the junior game the locals assumed the offensive from the outstart and literally swamped their Picton rivals by a 34 to 4 victory. Practically every member of the Laughlin-coached squad entered into scoring, while their combination plays completely bewildered the visitors. Gold led the local scorers with Schrider, Tobe and L'Heureux followed in line.

The line-ups

B.C.I.—Schrider 4, W. L'Heureux 2, Gold 10, Langton 2, Tobe 4, Cowain, M. L'Heureux 6, Kikes 2, Forster 4, Blaker.

Picton—Yarwood 2, Turpin, C. Lockeyer 2, Wannamaker, Walton, Welsh, Lockeyer and Kenney.

PICOBAC CAN'T BITE YOU

MR. PICOBAC
Sketched from Life

"I'll guarantee to smoke Picobac all day—with time out for meals. And my tongue won't get sore, either!

"You can do it too. Picobac can't bite the tongue. It's not that kind of tobacco. Because why?

"Because Picobac is a Burley. And Burley is a COOL tobacco. Picobac is a fine Burley, the pick of Canada's Burley crop, grown in sunny southern Ontario. It simply can't bite you.

"I've smoked Picobac since it was first introduced. I've smoked barrels of it. I've never had a sore tongue from it yet.

"Now, gentlemen, I'm not telling you to do as I say. I'm telling you to do as I DO. I smoke Picobac because it's a mild ... cool ... sweet smoke. That's why.

"And when you buy Picobac you get more tobacco for your money. It's good for making cigarettes, too."

SPRINGBROOK IS DEFEATED

Glen Ross Chalks up 1-0 Victory in Rawdon Loop

Stirling, Feb. 17— (Special) — Glen Ross chalked up another win on Thursday evening when in a Rawdon League fixture they took Springbrook into camp for a 1-0 win. The second game of the double bill, that of Bonarlaw vs. Mount Pleasant was defaulted by Bonarlaw to Mount Pleasant on the former's non-appearance for the tilt.

Play opened quite fast and was very even throughout the initial period. Both sides had a number of opportunities to score but although the nets were menaced continually, no score was recorded. The sole penalty went to G. Haslett of Springbrook.

Like the previous stanza, the second period ended scoreless. Springbrook took the aggressive and although they managed to get through the defence failed to tally on the invincible Hagerman of the Glen Ross twine. Bill Heath of Springbrook drew a minor penalty.

The final canto saw Glen Ross stage a comeback and open the evening's scoring when Jack Armstrong of the Glen Ross defence beat "Casey" Heath of the Northerner's goal when Heath in attempting to clear allowed the puck to roll over his pads. Towards the final minutes of the play, Glen Ross bombarded Heath with a regular fusillade of shots which that boy turned away admirably. Penalties became more numerous and went to Carl Reid, Jack Armstrong, Lorne Bateman, Gerald Fraser and Gerald Haslett.

Lineups:

Glen Ross—Bert Hagerman, goal, Jack Armstrong and Gerald Fraser defence, "Friday" Fraser, centre, R. Brooks and Harry Brooks wings. Subs. F. McDonald, D. Scott and J. Pyear.

Springbrook—"Casey" Heath goal, F. Wallace and L. Bateman, defence, Bill Heath, centre, D. Beiby and G. Haslett, wings. Subs. R. Mason, C. Reid, G. Heath, R. Morgan.

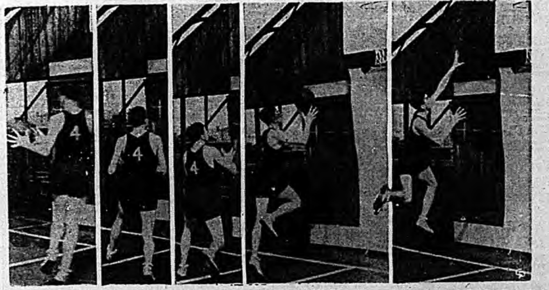
Right-Hander Can Snag Baskets With Left In Making Lay-Up Shot—Expert Tells How

Basketball Fundamentals



Written For Central Press Canadian and the Ontario Intelligencer

By JACK LIPPERT

Ability to shoot and pass with either hand is a valuable asset to a player in modern basketball, a game of speed and deception The accompanying moving picture frames show a player who is naturally right-handed, executing the lay-up or crip shot with his left hand. Observe that he leaps off his left foot, the foot that most born right-handed players will leap off whether they are shooting with their natural hand (the right)or the left hand.

Some natural left-handers leap off the left foot. Most basketball players are not aware of what foot they leap off. The leaping becomes such a well-conditioned, reflexive action that a basketball player is no more aware of which foot he leaps off than he is of which shoe he puts on first. Which shoe do you put on first?

The point is, that it makes no difference which foot a player leaps off, as long as he feels that he has himself under full control and feels "right".

Many coaches take extra pains to develop their shooting stars in the use of both hands. The split second that may be saved by letting the ball fly with the left hand, when the defensive pressure is coming from the right and is close and high, may allow the accurate shooting of a field goal that otherwise would be missed.

Observe that the demonstrator in these pictures is approaching the basket on a diagonal line. He is running from the right to the left diagonally, and crosses past the basket, receiving the ball just as he runs through the free-throw lane. The ball reaches his hands while his right foot is in contact with the floor (first count).

Our player makes his next stride a big long one (left foot striking floor—second count) in order to carry him over farther to the side of the basket, where the shooting angle for a bank shot is better than it would be if he took only a short step and leaped up very close to the rim of the basket.

This angle of shooting, especially for lay-up shoots, is very important and I will have more to say about it in future articles.

Record-breaking attendance at the Well Baby Clinic held in the city hall each Friday afternoon by the Royal Victorian Order of Nurses is still being maintained in spite of the weather. EXPECT MUSKRAT SKINS TO BE HIGHER

An unprecedented winter, characterized by temperatures that have frozen creeks and ponds in the district to the bottom will result in a decided scarcity of muskrat skins next spring, and the best prices for the pelts on record, according to fur dealers and trappers of the city.

It is believed that in the back sections while colonies of the little animals have perished owing to the formation of the thick ice which has sealed the air holes in spite of their efforts, and their inability to gather the food that had been stored by them last fall. Ordinarily the muskrats have been observed in previous years abroad during the whole winter, even in the coldest weather. In many sections this year not an animal has been sighted in places where whole colonies are known to have existed.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

(Copyright, 1934, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

One of the wisest of English novelists, Thackeray, said "Any girl can get any man she wants by putting her mind on the question." I am quoting from memory. Then he went on to say "Let men be grateful; the dear creatures don't know their power, or we would be utterly at their mercy."

Let's consider this power, this mysterious charm that enables a comparatively homely girl to pick a winner, walk up the aisle with him, and cause an astonished world to wonder how she did it.

This gift, which has little to do with beauty, is something quite apart from over-emphasized sex. I don't mean that prudes are ever popular or make good matches; they don't. But the girl who depends on sex, and sex alone, becomes quite as much of a bore as the prude.

"Flaming youth" will never lack for dates, but the dates seldom lead to the altar. The over-sexed girl is like the over-ripe peach which falls in the road and quenches the thirst of blueflies, bees, wasps and other insects that happen along—but that simile is too painful to pursue.

Brains? Well, to be an asset brains must be concealed weapons. Men are afraid of women who openly wear the label of cleverness. If a girl is really clever she'll hide it, as she would a deformity. All her little schemes will be employed in using this gift of the gods, while not letting on that she has it.

No man likes to feel inferior or "second chop," as the English have it. To this end, learn to be a good listener and let him talk about things, in which he is interested.

A girl must have skill, or what young people call a "line", or craftsman technique. This she develops herself. In real life no fairy godmother appears to the neglected damsel and inquiries "what are you crying for, my dear?" as in the beloved fairy-tale.

Every girl must be her own fairy godmother today. She must devote some of her time, systematically, to the vital problem of winning the man she wants to win. This doesn't mean that if she'd like to marry the Prince of Wales, or an international hero like Lindbergh in his bachelor days, she could put it across.

However, given a certain degree of social equality, any woman can make herself attractive—and almost indispensable—to the men of her choice.

"But how?" you will ask.

That, my dear is left to your intelligence and mother wit. Not all fish rise to the same bait. You must study the particular man in whom you are interested.

A man who has been smothered in domesticity, who had had a mother and four sisters all living under the same roof, will very probably be fed up on things domestic.

But the bachelor, who has been "baching it" with a group of untidy men and knows the discomforts of a womanless home, may look with a longing eye on a parti-colored salad and a table decked out with dollies.

PARENTS' FOLLY

Stop! Look! Listen! If you happen to be parents and have boys and girls at home. Don't delude yourself for a moment into thinking these youngsters are not observing you and your weaknesses every day, and holding you to account.

Your conduct is having an effect on their lives, and they may feel bitterly about it, too. Here is a letter that sums up the situation perfectly.

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"Have you ever heard of anyone being homesick at home? I am that person; I'm utterly wretched with what I'm going to call 'Domestic Nostalgia.' I'm a boy 19 years old, and my parents are just 19 and 20 years older than I am.

"Whether that's the cause of our rotten home life, I leave it to you. My grandparents believe it is because my parents never had any proper youth. They eloped from the high school, and, marrying as they did, they're still trying to make up for the good times they lost in the struggle to make a living, and in the everlasting baby-tending that overtook them.

"There are three children at home, and we have a sorry time of it. Father drinks too much, and the 'phone is forever ringing with Dad's dates. If Mother answers it she becomes sarcastic and personal, telling the callers they know more about 'my husband's whereabout than I do.'

"Mother is very pretty, not yet 44, and looks about 25. She has such a way with her that I don't dare bring my young men friends to the house. One of them just my age, urged her to get a divorce and was more than willing to become my stepfather. I told him I'd lick the pants off him, and meant it too.

"The only time Mother and Dad ever seem to have anything in common is when they're going out to a night club together. There is no housekeeping in what we children call 'home'. We all make instantaneous coffee, and scramble eggs when we eat there—I've eaten so many eggs I fear sometimes I shall begin to cackle.

"All this, Miss Fairfax, is a prelude to telling you I'm in love with a girl, whose parents have made her turn me down on account of the home I come from. They say they've nothing against me, but that kind of heredity is bound to tell. Do you believe in heredity? I hope you'll answer this.

'Homesick-at-Home".

The best argument against heredity is the mediocre and often utterly good-for-nothing sons important men and geniuses have had. I do not recall at the moment any case of an outstanding man in history whose son was in any way comparable to his father, except John Quincy Adams, sixth president, son of John Adams, second president of the United States.

Let me amend that. Heredity seems to have played a part not only in the Adams family of Massachusetts but also in the Cecil family in England—two outstanding examples. But most families seem to have a way of going into reverse.

Returning to your own case, you're only 19 and you've got to prove to that girl's family that you've got the stuff in you to make good. Then go ahead and make good, in spite of the painful exhibition of "adult infantilism" your parents are giving. If the girl really cares, she'll wait for you.

The Child's Social Life

By Lisa GRENELLE

The Child born of parents who are making a strenuous effort to "keep up with the Joneses" is liable to develop into a cheap snob, with a very materialistic viewpoint. If taught to put on a false front, to keep up appearances at all costs, he is bound to lose sight of all fundamental values and grow up to think only of "how things look." He will not dare be himself. He will be an imposter.

On the other hand, the child born of parents who make no effort to make and take a worthy place in their community is under a serious handicap. This child is also, more especially, if a girl, left dangerously without protection.

If a child's parents are not known the child is likely to be looked at askance by older members of the community, popular and inoffensive though he himself may be. If the parents are not known—do not mix with their neighbors— although nothing may be known against them, they are under suspicion and their child with them.

"The Company He Keeps"

It is natural, and to some extent good sense, to judge a man by the company he keeps. "Oh he must be all right; I met him at the Robert Whites." Or, "I don't know a thing about her, my dear; I met her at the Harry Greens, and you know they have all kinds of people there."

Sounds pretty snobby, doesn't it? But after all, it takes a long time to size a man up from scratch, and even the wisest of us are so often wrong. But if you know the sort of people he goes with—well, you can almost safely assume he is "their kind". They have done the preliminary judging and given you their diagnosis.

Hence it is natural and wise for parents to wish to know something about their children's friends, and about the homes where their children spend a good deal of time. Because children, always so impressionable, are easily influenced by their friends and the atmosphere of their friends' homes.

Your Child's Character

What are those homes like? Have you ever been in them? Certainly not unless, you are on friendly terms with the adult members of the family. It pays to know what the homes of your children's friends are like, if you are to protect them.

Mother may well give a sigh of relief when Janie brings home a boy she met at the Robert Whites, for they are fine people, and it is normal to assume, knowing Mrs. White, that the boy is a decent sort with a responsible training, and Janie fairly safe in his company. On the other hand, if Janie brings home a lad from the Harry Greens, mother will probably feel that she needs a little extra chaperonage.

Fine parents may breed an unworthy child, or worthless parents a fine one, but these are exceptions. By and large, a child is of his parents; his inheritance comes from them; his training comes from them. He lives and grows in the environment their characters have made.

"Green Stockings" Splendid Success at Albert College

Talent Cast Present Comedy With Distinction

"Green Stockings" that delightful comedy by A. E. W. Mason in which the downtrodden elder sister turns butterfly and devastates the community with her charm was presented to a large audience in the College auditorium last evening, by Albert College Dramatic Society under the direction of Miss Tuite. With every member of the cast possessing marked ability, in a play where practically all characters have major parts the audience was assured of a night of genuine enjoyment. The amusing situations that arose as the play progressed and the clever dramatic irony of the lines provided amusing entertainment that well rewarded a trip to the College on a cold night.

Students' Presentation

Before the play began, Dr. Chas. Bishop, principal of the School, welcomed the visitors and explained that the production of the evening was under the auspices of the Students' Council. He took this opportunity of expressing appreciation of the splendid work of Miss Jessie B. Tuite director of Expression of the Albert College Conservatory and also thanked the five young ladies of the Conservatory, whose co-operation made the play possible.

Story of Play

The scene of the three acts of the play is the charming living room of the Farady home near London. One is introduced to the household of four daughters, their aunt from Chicago who has special sympathy for the eldest daughter and the father, rather anxious to have his daughters marry so that he may close the large home and reside at his Club.

His second and third daughters are married, the youngest is on the verge of an engagement which he refuses to recognize until Celia the eldest and the "problem" of the family is wed. Celia has always been the dependable, and the conscientious daughter sacrificing herself and her appearance to make the household run smoothly. When her youngest sister tells Celia that her engagement with Bobby Tarvers is delayed because of the father's complex and offers a possible list of suitors for Celia, Celia rebels, invents an imaginary engagement with a "Colonel John Smith" now in Africa, then has his death announced after a suitable interval. The re-action of the men of the district is somewhat gratifying but Celia, who meanwhile has become fashionable, comes a cropper when a mysterious visitor from Africa announces that he is a friend of the "deceased" and turns out to be a Colonel Smith who had been delighted but mystified with a letter from her. The plays ends happily with Colonel Smith and Celia falling in love.

Splendid Work

Miss Catharine Smith had the difficult role of Celia. She had to make herself drab and uninteresting in the early scenes after which she blossomed out in beautiful gowns and became quite fascinating. The various phases of Celia, as the dowdy and earnest home-maker, the rebellious young woman, the gay and laughing, and finally the very perplexed and wary listener to the friend of the Colonel Smith, whose personality she thought she had created, are portrayed in a masterly fashion by Miss Smith. Her stunning appearance in the regal gowns in which she completes her triumph over the neighborhood adds to the success of her part.

Mr. Jack McDonald was Colonel J. N. Smith, D.S.O., who received a letter from Celia and who spends the intervening months of his sojourn in Africa trying to picture the girl. He has an amusing visit with Celia when under another name he hears with delight her answers, inspired on the spur of the moment, to his questions concerning himself. His adroit way of removing all obstacles to his talk with her and his sincere admiration of the girl result in his success as a suitor. Mr. McDonald possessing a very flexible voice and presenting a smart appearance in his uniform made the most of a very good part.

Miss Helen Sulman as Mrs. Chisolm Farady, who realizes how often Celia is hurt unwittingly by her sisters aids reluctantly in the deception she is carrying on and who is overwhelmed by the unlooked-for appearance of "Col. Smith's" friend had a role that had great opportunities and of which she made the most. Miss Sulman entered splendidly into the character of the lovable and shrewd Aunt Ida and her realistic illness scene was done with exactly the right touch.

The three lovely daughters of William Farady, Lady Trenchard, a widow, Madge Rockingham, whose husband is in India and the youngest, vivacious Phyllis who wishes to announce her engagement to Honorable Robert Tarver, are charmingly portrayed by Misses Bernice Arbuckle, Jean Dickens and Joan Maraskas and their beautiful gowns greatly enhanced the scenes.

Perhaps the most difficult part was that of Honorable Robert Tarver who is running for parliament and needs everyone's co-operation and almost super-human assistance to win the election. Not very bright but considering himself a wit Bobby bores everybody but Phyllis. Mr. Lewis Day carries this part well his accent, gestures to say nothing of his monocle aiding in his interpretation of the part.

As William Farady, the worried and blustery father, Mr. Morgan Rowland was a successful addition to the cast and never for a moment was out of character. Mr. Reg. Warren as Admiral Grice, R.N., Mr. Joe Barnard as James Raleigh and Mr. Phil Lake as Henry Steele who belatedly discover the attractions of Celia, are very good, the character of the Admiral being splendidly shown by Mr. Warren's delineation. Mr. Crawford Martin made the most of his part as Martin the butler.

During intermission Mr. Hall and Mr. Arnott gave solos, with Mr. S. M. Anglin as accompanist. At the close of the play a lovely bouquet of roses was presented to Miss Tuite for her devoted work as director.

Birthday Party of O.E.S. Chapter 55 Gala Affair

Miss Irene Hallam, Worthy Matron Cuts Birthday Cake

With a galaxy of distinguished visitors and an exceedingly large number of members in attendance, the birthday party of Belleville Chapter No. 55, Order of the Eastern Star was held last evening in the Oddfellows' Temple, Front St.

Miss Irene Hallam, Worthy Matron presided, and accorded all present a hearty welcome. At the suggestion of Mrs. J. Reid, P.M., the Chapter stood and repeated the 23rd Psalm in reverent memory of Dr. Seymour, whose tragic death has been a horrible shock to the city. After the routine business had been disposed of the Chapter was closed and the evening given over to a a gala celebration of the fifteenth birthday of the Chapter.

The Social Committee arranged a splendid program. Mrs. George Wallace rendered two delightful solos which were most enthusiastically received. Master Carl Austin and Master Billy Mitchell of Wooler sang a ridiculously humorous ditty much to the great amusement of the audience. Mr. James Bankier, whose name is synonymous with excellent music, beautifully rendered two splendid solos which were a great joy to all present. Miss Marie Meiklejohn acted as accompanist for Mrs. Wallace and Mr. Bankier, while Mrs. Austin did the honors for the two boys. Two recitations which were truly a treat to the listeners were given by Miss Jean Croft.

Vote of Thanks

Mr. Frank Wessels, P.P., expressed his appreciation to those participating in the program and praised them for their kindness and unselfishness in giving so generously of their time and talent. The Chapter tendered the participants a very hearty vote of thanks.

Over a hundred and eighty members and guests repaired to the banquet hall where lunch was served by the Refreshment Committee.

In the centre of the banquet table, resplendent with tall tapers and artistic decorations, towered a beautiful three-layer birthday cake crowned with fifteen glowing candles. Mr. A. Evan Barlow, charter member, and Worthy Patron of the Chapter, gave a brief history of the Chapter and paid tribute to the Past Worthy Matrons and Past Worthy Patrons under whose leadership the chapter had prospered and became the vital and extremely worthwhile organization it is today.

In a din of applause, a gesture of appreciation of the Past Matrons and Patrons the presiding Matron cut the birthday cake. Miss Hallam spoke of the chapter's rich heritage handed down by her predecessors and pledged herself to keep faith with those who had gone before.

The decorations both in the Chapter room and banquet hall were delightful. The color scheme was red and white and the room was festive ith a clever and intricate array of hearts.

Dancing brought to a close a memorable evening. All present proclaimed the evening a huge success.

JEWISH LAWYERS JAILED

Vienna, Feb. 17. — Three Jewish lawyers, Arnold Eisler, Valentine Rosenfeld and Ignats Gruder, were arrested and placed in jail today on unrevealed charges.

The charge under which Vienna's Socialist Burgomaster, Karl Seitz, is held, also remained unrevealed.

Rumors that Seitz is dead, were flatly denied by the foreign office, but all requests of foreign correspondents to see him were rejected.

FASCIST RAID IN ENGLAND

British "Black Shirts" Arrested at Wortham, Norfolk

Wortham, Norfolk, Eng., Feb. 17.—Police made their first raid against British Fascists at noon today taking into custody the "black shirts" of Sir Oswald Mosley's organization.

Nearly 200 policemen made the raid.

The Fascists, several days ago, encamped on two farms as voluntary pickets in the "Tithe War" in which farmers have refused to pay their traditional church assessment.

The police considered the Fascists self-appointed guardians who, on one farm, dug trenches and erected barricades in an effort to prevent the bailiffs from seizing pigs and cattle which had been impounded for unpaid tithes.

The police characterized the Fascist activity merely as a means of attracting attention to the organization.

COBOURG CAR FERRY AT ROCHESTER DOCK

Rochester, N.Y., Feb. 17 (AP)—Breaking the grip of an ice jam, which had held it fast overnight, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Car Ferry, Ontario II, butted its way into Rochester Harbor today with one woman passenger.

Drift ice, rolled up by a northeast wind, stopped the steamer late yesterday a half mile off Summerville Light and blocked it going into the harbor. The piled ice lay from eight to 10 feet thick and baffled two attempts by the 200-ton coast guard cutter Eagle to reach the steamer.

Shifting winds this morning loosened the ice pack and enabled the ferry to cut its own way through surface ice to its docks in the lower Genessee River. Aboard was a cargo of Canadian freight and the lone passenger, Mrs. H. B. Stokes of Rochester.

EXTRAVAGANCE SAYS LEADER

Recent Provincial Loan Arrangements Attacked

Norwich, Ont, Feb. 17—(CP)—The Ontario government, Dr. G. A. McQuibban, new Liberal leader in the legislature, claims was unduly extravagant in its arrangements for marketing the last provincial loan of $40,000,000.

In a speech last night before the newly-formed 20th Century Club here Dr. McQuibban declared the province received only $39,000,000 of the loan and that the other $1,000,000 was paid to bankers and brokers who arranged flotation.

Two bankers and brokers, he said, were called into consultation to decide the loan policy, despite the fact the Provincial Treasurer's Department contains officials capable of doing the work. The three men, he claimed, received $40,000 each for a few hours work.

"They walked out with $40,000 under their arms for enunciating a loan policy suitable to themselves" he said.

Dr. McQuibban contended that though the administration purports to show a surplus for the current fiscal year a debt of $700,000,000 rests on the shoulders of the province and that $600,000,000 of it has been contracted since 1919.

A $200,000,000 debt for provincial highways, he said, could be paid off through use of the gasoline tax, but instead the government used proceeds of the tax to bolster finances of other departments.

APARTMENTS NO FORTRESS

Dr. Deutsch Bitter at Bombardment of Workers' Houses

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press)

Bratislava, Czechoslovakia, Feb. 17.— A bitter denunciation of the Government's use of artillery against Socialist Apartment House strongholds in Austria's Civil Warfare was voiced today by Dr. Julius Deutsch, fugitive Socialist leader.

Dr. Deutsch is commander-in-chief of the Socialist forces and general secretary of the Austrian Socialist Party. Seriously wounded he fled to this border city only 30 miles from Vienna.

"When you shoot with field artillery into apartment houses there will be women and children among the killed," he said. He declined to estimate what the Austrian death list finally will show, but others in his entourage readily placed it at 2,500.

"You Socialists have been charged with building fortresses in those apartment houses," Dr. Deutch was reminded.

"That's damned foolishness!" the Socialist chief snapped.

"Whoever saw big windows in a fortress? Those big light, airy houses were for poor people. You don't build fortresses for sunshine."

Then he added sardonically:

"We build new homes—the other fellows waste money building fortresses; that's the difference between us."

Dr. Deutsch denied that the Socialists had planned the events leading up to the outbreak of disorders last Monday.

SEAWAY VOTE BY MARCH 1st

Speeches of Senators Will Show Railways Not Injured

New York, Feb. 17. — A special Washington despatch to the New York Times says President Roosevelt expects the United States senate to vote on the St. Lawrence seaway pact with Canada before March 1.

Reports to the president, according to the despatch, are to the effect that wavering Senators now favour ratification, this being true of a large group up for re-election this fall.

It was reported that Senator Key Pittman would confer today with the president and if the administration is ready to risk a vote, will ask the senate to agree on a time. This probably will be February 27.

The despatch Continued:

"Senators Hayden and Ashurst, opposed to the treaty at first because of the opposition of the railroad brotherhoods, are now for ratification. Mr. Hayden will speak on the treaty Monday and attempt to show that building of the canal will not injure the railroads or decrease employment."

SUCCESSFUL FLIGHT

Sydney, Australia, Feb. 17—(CP Cable)—The second solo crossing of the dangerous Tasman Sea between Australia and New Zealand, a stretch of more than 1,000 miles, was made today when Charles T. P. Ulm arrived in his plane, "Faith in Australia," after an 11-hour crossing.

Reds Fight Socialists Many Hurt in New York

New York, Feb. 17. — A flying wedge of Communists stormed the speaker's stand at a meeting of 3,000 Socialists in Madison Square Garden last night and started a free for all battle in which scores were injured.

More than 300 extra police mingling with the audience were unable to stop the fighting and before extra riot squads arrived an American flag was torn down, chairs were ripped from the floor, newspapermen attacked and the editor of the Daily Worker, Communist organ, severely beaten.

The meeting of Socialists was called as a mass protest against conditions in Austria. Communists had threatened to disrupt the gathering solely because of doctrinary differences.

WREATH PLACED UPON STATUE OF LAURIER

OTTAWA, Feb. 17.—(CP)—The anniversary of the death of Sir Wilfrid Laurier was marked here today by the placing of a wreath on the Laurier Statue by Hon. BURY COMMUNISTS WITH HONORS

Paris, Feb. 17 (AP)—With bands playing and Red flags flying, a cortege of thousands of Communists took their six dead in the riot of Feb. 9 from the morgue to Pere Lachaise cemetery today.

Not a single policeman was visible to control the crowd of 20,000 Communists and Socialists but heavy reserves and mounted squads were in readiness, although concealed, close to the line of march.

ECHOES OF OTHER DAYS

Even the wooden Indian in front of the cigar shop is gone, the present generation knows him not; and would wonder that people could make a business of making wooden Indians for tobacco shop signs, and that tobacconists would pay large sums for a good Indian to stand in front of the store day and night all year, except Hallowe'en night when he was discreetly withdrawn inside the store.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE BELLE

"Flying Down to Rio"

"Flying Down to Rio," Radio Pictures' musical extravaganza at the Belle Theatre today and Monday, with its flying chorines, its soaring pianos, it marimbolas and its chocalhos, literally knocks the spots off anything hitherto produced under the title of "musical production." It is spectacular beyond words.

Equally astonishing is the fact that the production has a story.

Handsome Gene Raymond takes his American jazz band to Rio de Janiero to open a show in a new hotel. He falls in love with Dolores Del Rio, daughter of the hotel owner, and a hot rivalry develops between Raymond and Raul Roulien, a situation complicated by the fact that Roulien has been engaged to Del Rio for years. When the "heavies," a syndicate of Greek gamblers, try to spoil the deal and ruin Dolores' dad by getting city officials to prohibit Gene's show, that young man foils them all by taking his band and his 200 beauties aloft.

In full view of thousands of awed Brazilians, girls sing and dance on the wings of airplanes, adagio dancers hurl their fair partners from one plane to another and ballet dancers trip the light fantastic while fluttering earthward in parachutes.

Dolores and Gene are then married by an airplane pilot and everybody lives happily ever afterward

Any attempt to list the delightful and thrilling innovations introduced in this production is futile. "Flying Down to Rio" is one of those films that has to be seen to be appreciated.

The picture also marks the film debut of Fred Astaire in a stellar role. Astaire, idol of New York and London musical comedies, and one of the best character comedians on the stage today, is paired with Ginger Rogers in a humorous romance. Their exaggerated tangos come close to stealing the show, while Ginger's cow-girl ride on the tail of a plane is one of the production's high spots.

The film is elaborately staged against the tropical and architectural beauty of Riod de Janiero. Native instruments and orchestras are heard. Chorus routines featuring 200 dark beauties said to have been selected from 10,000 California girls, enact many daring terpsichorean novelties. One of these is the presentation of the tango by 16 couples dancing in unison and perfect formation.

Of the sets, one in particular merits special mention. Representing a night club of the future it is built to resemble the interior of a dirigible. The tables, of glass edged with polished silver, are shaped like the tail of an airplane, while the orchestra, in a balloon basket, soars about over the heads of the dancers.

Excellent Shorts

Screen Souvenirs, with its interesting and amusing events of yesteryear, an amusing Mickey Mouse Kartune titled "Giant Land," and the popular Belle News with its latest events concludes a program of excellent screen entertainment.

AT THE CAPITOL

"LADY KILLER"

Thousands of persons go to Hollywood every year in search of success on the screen. But few have fame and fortune literally forced upon them, as did Dan Quigley, ex-theatre usher, "finger man" and fugitive from justice, when he found himself on the threshold of Filmland.

How Dan became an actor in spite of himself, and a star almost without knowing why, is one of the amazing and amusing situations that makes James Cagney's latest Warner Bros. picture "Lady Killer," which will be seen on the screen of the Capitol Theatre on Monday, something out of the ordinary in screen entertainment.

The rise of this ex-crook of stardom in Hollywood supplies the hilarious laughs in this comedy drama. But there are thrills aplenty when his former gangster pals try to put the finger on him because of his success. Exciting incidents are said to follow in quick succession to a smashing climax when the gang foiled in its blackmailing scheme, try to put the hero on the spot.

The picture is not without its fascinating romance for Jimmy, as the ex-crook who becomes a movie star, is a fascinating scoundrel. A gunman's moll and a movie queen are rivals for his affections.

The story is said to be based on actual Hollywood conditions as far as the film sequences are concerned, and the principal character is reputed to have its actual Filmland counterpart. However, Rosalind Keating Shaffer, the author, familiar with incidents of the film capital and with a deep insight into its characters, has based her story upon her knowledge of things in Hollywood.

The cast of "Lady Killer" is an exceptionally strong one. Mae Clarke, who will be remembered as the "grapefruit girl" of "Public Enemy" with Cagney a few years ago, has the role of Cagney's moll. Margaret Lindsay appears as a Hollywood screen star who helps the ex-crook to his first chance to rise from the extra ranks.

The early pals of the underworld are played by Leslie Fenton, Douglas Dumbrille, Russell Hopton and Raymond Hatton, while other important roles are entrusted to Henry O'Neill, Willard Robertson, Marjorie Gateson, Robert Elliott and George Blackwood.

Roy Del Ruth directed the production from the screen play by Ben Markson and Lillie Hayward.

Monday and Tuesday are Dinnerware Gift nites.

Last showing today (Saturday) "From Headquarters," a thrilling expose of police methods in unravelling crime, featuring Margaret Lindsay and George Brent. On the same program the popular "Skippy" Jackie Cooper in "Lone Cowboy"; Episode nine of "The Whispering Shadow" and Capitol News.

UNREST GROWS WITHIN SPAIN

Cabinet is Ready to Combat in Event of Uprising

Madrid, Feb. 17.—The government has ordered extraordinary precautions as labor unrest spread through Spain, and revolutionary threats were voiced by Socialists and Radicals.

Premier Alejandro Lerroux, while admitting that the government was continuing preparations for possible trouble, told the United Press he believed the situation still well in hand.

"My personal attitude, in the face of this problem," he said, "is one of complete serenity and tranquillity. I am certain that the government over which I preside has not given any motive for the Socialists or any other party to adopt the attitude which the Socialists seem to have taken."

Strikes in Madrid and in the provinces in the last ten days aroused alarm, particularly when the Socialists denounced the government and threatened to rebel.

Gil Robles, head of the popular Action party, declared that if a general strike is declared—as Radicals threaten to do — his party would support the government and occupy itself "with organizing groups which can take the places of the strikers and aid in guaranteeing the necessary services for making the revolutionary movement a complete failure."

"If the present government has to face a revolutionary movement," he added, "and asks the co-operation of the Spanish people, we would place ourselves at its disposal. We would remain loyal, both as citizens and patriots."

SIX MONTHS PRISON TERM

Rev. Father Bart is Sentenced For Negligence

TORONTO, Feb. 17—(CP)—Rev. Father Peter J. Bart, 36-year-old Roman Catholic priest who taught Greek Philosophy at St. Michael's College here, went to prison today, for six months for criminal negligence that an Assize Court Jury found brought death to a 15-year-old boy.

It was the second time the priest had been tried for manslaughter in connection with the death of Frederick Rose, young cyclist, whom his automobile struck on the night of last Aug. 21. The first time the jury disagreed after deliberating seven hours. Last night another Jury reached verdict reducing the charge in five hours. The second trial lasted four and one-half days.

Mr. Justice G. F. McFarland refused the suggestion of defence counsel T. H. Lennox, K.C. that he suspend sentence on the ground such an accident might have occurred to any person.

In his own testimony the priest admitted having had two drinks on the day of the accident but denied he was intoxicated as alleged by some other witnesses. He said he had been driving at about 30 miles an hour and that the boy, riding ahead of him, had swerved into his path as he sought to pass him. Others said the priest had struck the boy's bicycle because he failed to swerve his car away from it.

Father Bart is a native of Stratford.

WORKS PROGRAM IS CONTESTED

Duff, Liberal of N. S. Asks For List And Estimate Not Passed

OTTAWA, Feb. 17.—(CP)—With public works estimates, a bone of contention at every session of Parliament, before the House of Commons the voting of money for harbor and river works in Nova Scotia promises to provide some contention.

Swinging into its annual task of providing money to carry on the public service the House of Commons authorized Hon. H. A. Stewart, Minister of Public Works to spend some $6,250,000. When the Nova Scotia items came up William Duff, Liberal member for Antigonish-Guysboro, entered strong protest against the limited amount provided for that province.

He chided Conservative members from Nova Scotia with being unable to get as much for their counties under a government of their own party as they had under a Liberal Government. Conservatives from down by the sea came stoutly to the defence of the government and insisted they were pleased with the sums provided if not fully satisfied.

The Nova Scotia vote was not passed because Mr. Duff demanded the production of a list of works recommended for Nova Scotia by Department Engineers.

Mr. Stewart refused to provide this on the ground it was confidential.

TIGERS ADD POINTS

Hamilton Tigers added two more points to their total in the Senior Ontario Hockey Association engagements of last night, and are now four points in front of their nearest rivals, West Toronto Nationals. The Tigers beat the Nats 4-3 in an overtime fixture, while Torontos were handing Kitchener a 4.0 trimmings on Toronto ice. The victory kept Torontos in third place and also kept Kitchener from moving out of the cellar point. A tie would have evened the Kitchenerites with Varsity.

Witty Innkeeper's Mockery Brings Prison

LAGGENBECK, Germany, Feb. 17—Charged with ridiculing the Supreme Court for its verdict in the Reichstag incendiary trial, Heinrich Sommermeyer, innkeeper, has been sent to a concentration camp

Sommermeyer displayed on a placard at the local carnival celebration parodying a recent song hit. It said:

"Latest hit: 'Dont Hang your Head Van den Lubbe.' Text by Dimitroff."

Marinus Van den Lubbe, young Dutchman, was found guilty in the trial and executed. George Dimitroff was one of four defendants acquitted.

DOMINION BASIS ASKED FOR LEVYING INCOMES

Mayors' Conventions Work Through Plenty of Routine

LONDON, Ont., Feb. 17.—(CP)—An appeal will be made to the Dominion Government on behalf of Mayors of 22 Ontario Municipalities urging a change in laws covering municipal income taxes that would permit the municipalities to levy the tax on the basis of Dominion schedules or have the Government collect it for them.

The appeal was approved at the Mayors' Conference which ended here last night after sitting for two days.

The Mayors also authorized despatch to the Ontario Government of a petition seeking legislation that would give municipal councils more control over expenditures by Boards of Education through inclusion on the Boards of two council members.

A majority of the Mayors favored the policy of cash relief to indigent citizens in opposition to the voucher system and decided to appeal to the Provincial Relief Board for Legislation enabling them to adopt the cash policy.

penthouse love

BY

alma sioux scarberry

Batch saw that Charity was pleased and smiled inwardly. She was just like every other woman, after all. Give any of them a little flattery and they'd rather have it than manna from heaven. He was still holding Charity's wrist. He took her hand and put it on his knee, covering it with his other hand. Charity felt she should draw away. But she didn't want to. Batch grinned.

"I hope we're missed," he said.

Charity looked nervous. "It does not look very nice for us to be sitting out her all this time. Some one might think—"

Batch stopped her with a laugh. "Let 'em do a little thinking. It'll be good for them and for you too. That double-crossing bunch of night owls should talk about a couple of innocents holding hands on a penthouse balcony."

"You don't sound as though you [illegible] much of your friends," [illegible] said, a little surprised.

"I was born and brought up with them," Dr. Batchelor told her, "but after all, I do work. You can't quite class me with the playboys."

"Do you have a private practice?"

"I'm head of the Crippled Children's Hospital on East Fifty-first street."

Charity's eyes opened wide with pleased surprise.

"Oh— how nice. What a lot of good you must be doing."

Batch turned the matter off with a wave of his hand. "We're able to fix a kid up pretty good now and then."

Charity felt a new respect for him. She wanted to know him better. It was refreshing to find a man who really did something worth while among a crowd such as Doug's and Yanner's.

Batch was thoughtful, thinking of Charity Temple. Then, partly because he was curious, and partly because he hadn't anything better to do the next afternoon, which was Sunday, Batch asked her suddenly, "Are you doing anything tomorrow afternoon?"

"N—no," Charity admitted reluctantly.

"Drop down and have tea with me," Batch grinned at her. "I live on the fourth floor of this very building."

Charity was thoughtful a moment. Then she said a bit doubtfully, "Do—you suppose it will look all right?"

Batch roared with laughter. "How [illegible] is it going to take me to con[illegible] you, Charity, dear, that a woman with your money doesn't have to worry about what people think of her?"

"All right," Charity agreed recklessly. "I'll come."

The doctor grinned broadly. "And now, I really can't sit out here and make violent love to you any longer."

Charity hated to see him go. He was the nicest man she'd ever met. She stood up and gave him her hand in farewell. "Good night, doctor. You've done me world of good."

He blew her a little kiss and went back into the penthouse. Suddenly Charity felt very light-headed and very independent. She didn't mind being rude to her guests. With a little smile she went in and locked her suite against intrusion. And she was almost happy when she undressed and slipped into bed.

Doug was awakened the next morning by the telephone beside his bed. He reached out sleepily, but he sat up thoroughly awake when he learned it was Yanner.

"That was a fine stunt you pulled on me last night," he answered her sweet greeting. "It's a wonder you wouldn't have given me some warning before you came bursting in with a bunch of hoodlums."

Yanner's dulcet tones dripped honey. "Oh—but darlin' you WILL forgive me. Don't you understand?—I just had to see her sweetheart—I [illegible] had to! To see for myself if [illegible] was as unattractive as you said she was. I'm satisfied now. I'll never be jealous again."

"You just about wrecked my happy home." Doug was still far from mollified. "If that's the way you act when you're jealous, I hope I never see you in a fit again."

Yanner sounded little—and hurt. "You're mean—Doug. Go back and get your beauty sleep, you old bear! I woke up with the birds and I just couldn't go back to sleep until I called you to ask you to forgive me. You—have forgiven me?"

"Oh, well, forget it," Doug said grudgingly, and Yanner smiled to herself. It was so easy to wrap Doug around her little finger. She had never had any doubt that she could manage him—even when he was married to another girl.

She made the sound of a kiss into the phone. "You're a honey! and oh, darling, I hope you can hurry up and shake that poor little pill. My word, I had no idea such a tongue-tied, country clod existed in this civilized city."

For some unaccountable reason Doug did not like Yanner's description of Charity. She was astonished when he said coolly, "Is she that bad? Maybe you're a little prejudiced."

Yanner started to get angry. But she knew she must not. So she said innocently, "I don't know what you mean. But I suppose I do sound jealous—to you. Maybe—I am. I do sort of love you, you know."

"I thought Charity managed rather well," Doug added, further to Yanner's chagrin. "Put yourself [illegible] her place and you'd probably [illegible] up and throw the furniture at somebody."

"Doug!" Yanner scolded him, trying to sound playful. "You're still a little peeved with me. But meet me out at the airport this afternoon and I'll make you forget all about it."

"I think I'd better stay home and square myself."

"Why?" Yanner demanded possessively, cold fear clutching at her heart. "You don't care what she thinks! You're going to divorce her, anyway."

"I know," Doug said evenly, but with determination, "but she's human, and I'm not going to treat her so rotten after this. She did me a big favour last night, and I'm going to stay home today and be devout to her."

Yanner's answer was the click of her receiver.

CHAPTER NINE

It was noon when Doug got up. After a breakfast and lunch combined, he knocked on the door that led to Charity's suite. He felt a sinking sensation in his knees at the thought of confronting his wife.

Sylvia opened the door, flashed her wide smile, and said regretfully, "Madame went to church, sir. From church she planned to drive out to the country for lunch, I believe. And she told me she had a tea engagement in town and would not be back till dinner time."

Doug was surprised. So—Charity was finding ways to keep herself from getting bored, was she? He had pictured her as sitting home knitting or reading all day. And she went to church!

For some time Doug debated calling Yanner and saying he was sorry and would be out. But somehow he didn't feel like driving out to Long Island. Then an inspiration struck him.

It had been weeks since he'd touched his painting. It was a beautiful day for doing that picture he'd planned to do of a girl against the large palm on the southside of the balcony. In a few seconds he had Chickie Belle, the most famous dancer in New York, on the wire, and learned she was at leisure as it was Sunday and she had no rehearsal. Doug completely forgot both Yanner and Charity in his eagerness to put the divine Chickie on canvas.

Later in the afternoon Dr. Batchelor sat musing in his bachelor apartment. What in the world had possessed him to waste a tea time on Charity Temple! He would probably be bored to death.

He had given Jennings, his man Friday, the afternoon off. So it was he himself who opened the door to Charity's timid ring. Batch gave her his most reassuring smile, and held out his hand to pull the reluctant visitor in.

"Come little fly," he grinned, his brown eyes sensing the uncertainty in her flushed face. "Into the big spider web where I lure my victims."

Charity laughed self-consciously. Batch put an arm around her, still grinning, and piloted her to a large studio couch piled high with cushions.

He picked up a cocktail shaker, shook it noisily and poured two cocktails. He handed one to Charity, smiling "Have no fear. This is one of my own prescriptions. Drink as many as you like. I test the stuff myself."

Charity's first impulse was to take the drink. Every one she would meet from then on thought nothing of it. But she never had taken a cocktail—so she shook her head.

The doctor looked at her questioningly.

"I thought," Charity choked then, miserably embarrassed, "I was invited to tea."

Batch roared. "Bless your heart, infant, there isn't a speck of tea in the shack. I don't use the awful stuff. Don't tell me you don't take a cocktail!"

"I've never had a drop of anything intoxicating in my life." Charity shook her black head again. "I—Just never have."

Batch was more than a little amused. And the temptation to tease her was so strong that he put the cocktail shaker down beside the couch, picked up his drink and sat down very close to her. She wished the earth would open and swallow her, when he looked closely into her face—then took her hands to hold them tightly in his big, brown ones.

Suddenly his arms were around her and she felt his warm lips on her mouth.

Charity was on her feet in an instant—her eyes blazing. "How—how dare you!" she choked, sudden tears springing in her eyes. "Let me—out of here!"

She groped for the door, and before Batch could stop her she had flung it open and ran stumbling down the hall. He started after her—then thought better of it. Why in the devil had he done such a crazy thing, anyway?

It certainly hadn't been because he had any desire to make love to her. It had been just an experiment— to see what she would do. Or, probably habit. It was routine business—almost — kissing women, married or single, who came to his apartment. They usually expected it. In fact, would feel neglected if he didn't know them a little heavy attention.

Charity's breath was coming in quick, furious gasps when she let herself into her apartment. She had never been so furious with a man in her whole life. So—that was what he thought of her! Because she'd go to his bachelor apartment for tea!

But suddenly Charity sat down on her bed. She had been kissed! For the first time in her life——a man had made love to her. Perhaps there was something about her to attract men, after all. Something no one but Dr. Batchelor had ever seen. Her anger began to cool—and its place was taken by a relieved little feeling of wonder. She was ashamed of herself when she had to admit finally that she was glad.

Almost gaily she went to her balcony door and threw it open to breathe the warm, romantic spring air. But the sight that greeted her eyes sent the hot blood rushing to her face. She stepped back, horrified.

There, not ten feet away, sat Doug, painting. And standing unabashed against the big palm, her perfect body a splash of ivory against the green, was a nude woman, with long red hair blowing about her white body.

Charity's first impulse was to push out and demand that the brazen woman leave her balcony at once. And to demand to know if her husband had not one wit of respect for his wife. All her old-fashioned training demanded that she show where she stood on the matter of such goings on.

But her better judgment restrained her. Or, perhaps it was her great embarrassment. She simply could not bring herself to appear on such a scene. Softly, she stepped back and closed the balcony door.

Then she leaned against it. It was several minutes before Charity could bring herself to peer from the curtains. Doug, she saw, was painting on, his brow wrinkled in thought.

Conquering her first shock, Charity looked a little more calmly—and was amazed at the indifferent, routine way the model seemed to look through Doug and to the roof tops beyond, utter unconcern in her slanted green eyes. It was a revelation to Charity.

TARZAN AT THE EARTH'S CORE

(Metropolitan Newspaper Service) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Beginning Monday: A Stirring New Tarzan Story
TARZAN THE TERRIBLE
H-26

Now what went on in the city below, the watchers aboard Gridley's expedition never knew. A long time they waited after the parachute floated to earth. Then a great crowd was seen to move from the palace down toward the harbor. A little later, with set sails a single ship moved out to sea toward the fleet, from Sari. Then Tarzan of the Apes knew his plan had succeeded. The dirigible followed above the Korsar's ship and Ja's flagship moved forward to meet it.

Thus was David Innes, Emperor of Pellucidar, returned to his own people. The dirigible dropped low above the flagship of the Sarian feet. Greetings were exchanged between David and his rescuers — men from another world whom he had never seen. He was unharmed and great was the rejoicing aboard the ships as they turned back across the Korsar Az toward their own land. Tarzan and the O-220 followed long enough to obtain from David explicit directions for reaching the polar opening to the outer world.

As the fleet beneath them began to get under way, Jason Gridley made his decision. Tarzan was saying to him: "Our adventure is successfully over. Back to civilizations from the earth's core is our next move. But first we must fulfill our promise and take Jana and Thoar to Zoram." Gridley shook Tarzan's hand in warm congratulation, and smiled as he replied: "My friend, give my regards to the outer world, for I'm not going back." "Not going back? Why?," exclaimed the ape-man incredulously.

"This expedition was my suggestion. I feel responsible for the still missing officer. With David Innes' help, and native Pellucidarians, I shall attempt to find him." Nothing would change the American's mind. So the O-220, overtaking the fleet, signalled it to heave to. By this time Jason had assembled his guns and ammunition, ready to be lowered to the flagship. Reluctantly, he bade his adventurous companions good-bye. Then he turned to The Red Flower of Zoram. Before he could speak, she addressed Thoar. "Good-bye, my brother," said Jana. "I go with Jason. He is the man I love."

Argues Not Good Policy When Board Try to Effect Economy

SAFE PURCHASED

Routine Business Only Before Board at Session

A rugby game played at Toronto by the local Collegiate Institute rugby team and made possible thru' a grant of $100 made by the 1933 Board of Education for the trip, occupied the centre of the stage at the regular meeting of the Board of Education last evening as discussion centred around the legality of the grant.

The question was raised by School Trustee George F. Lent under the heading of Enquiries.

"I've been on this Board for the past four years. Last year we had a good representation on the Board and we had also what was commonly called an 'economy year.' Yet there were certain expenditures, particularly at the close of the year that I didn't approve of. One of them was the grant of $100 we made the football team to go to Toronto: I don't know if this was legal, or if it was ever passed by the Board. Was it?" questioned Mr. Lent.

"The grant was approved after it had been given the team," pointed out Chairman of the Board, E. A. Geen.

"Yes, I know that now. But does this Board know really how much that trip to Toronto cost the taxpayers of this city? It cost the city $100 I know, but what about the other costs? For example, the school was closed down that day and the pupils were all given a holiday. I'd like to know who authorized that. What other expenses besides the $100 were there?"

Mr. Geen—"The chairman of last year's Board probably authorized the closing of the school. Perhaps Mr. MacLaurin would be able to tell us definitely."

"I received orders to close the school on that date," explained Mr. MacLaurin.

"From whom, the chairman?" asked Mr. Lent.

"Not entirely."

Believe Cost $500

"I'm prepared to state that the Collegiate rugby team cost the taxpayers of this city in the neighborhood of $500 for the year, last year. Not perhaps in actual cash, but considering the loss of time, the loss of service of teachers, which cost us about $300 per days in salaries and other incidentals. This is money that taxpayers of the city voted us to carry on education. And what's more, I don't believe that the money was spent legally. I believe that during the coming year we should have the advice of a solicitor on this spending of money. People want an accounting of the money that is being spent by the Board. It isn't our money to spend and go through with in a rush at the last moment. We should have authority for these expenditures," argued Mr. Lent.

Rev. H. B. Neal, Trustee—"You mean give the solicitor the $100?"

Mr. George F. Ostrom—"Do I see this argument as a point leading toward the appointment of a solicitor for this Board?"

Mr. Lent—"Oh, no; oh, no, I don't mean it that way."

Mr. Ostrom—"I for one backed the rugby team last year. I believe it was good business and I still believe it is. Why, wherever we went last year, to every school in the land, we saw the teams out in action, playing for the school they represented. Belleville wasn't alone in this. It was the smallest thing the 1933 Board of Education could have done, to assist our hard working team in some manner. It was the smallest thing we could have done to close the school for one day to give the pupils a chance to see the team in action if they wished. Schools were closed throughout the whole Province when school teams took the day off to compete with each other. What example would this city have to set to be alone in this matter?"

Reg. Moncrieff —"I think that sports in schools have helped this city to a greater degree than most people imagine. I know myself several instances where this has proven so. In one particular case that I can cite, parents have actually chosen this city for their residence when they moved from another city, all because Belleville had a reputation for sports. In that manner alone, through taxes we have gained far more than we would have lost by giving a team a small grant now and then.

Gives Comparisons

"And, if Mr. Lent wants to go into comparisons regarding wastage of salaries and service of the teachers all because of one day's school closing, let him figure the loss that occurs each year in salaries and so on because schools are closed on Saturdays and Sundays. Teachers are hired by the year; expenses of the school are figured on a yearly basis. Why not keep open on these other holidays and save all that money that is lost?"

"I don't think that ratepayers of this city put us here to give out $100 grants whenever we felt like it," vigorously defended Mr. Lent. "I don't think they want to see their money spent that way, and not get anything out of it. We can say that sports in this school cost them $500 last year."

"Where do you get the $500 loss?" questioned Mr. E. J. Butler. "I don't like to hear this kind of talk. I don't like to see this sort of thing go out to the public like that. The board merely gave the team a grant of $100; where is the $500 loss?"

"Yes, figuring the way this has been done, supposing we had to close the school down on account of an epidemic; how much do you suppose that would cost the taxpayers?" questioned Cyril Waite.

Principal P. C. MacLaurin rose to the defence of the school team.

"Through all this discussion evidently some of the members of the Board have forgotten another side of the matter. I'd like to inform them that the teachers of this school have taken great pains with the scholars to assist them in matters of sport. Many of them put in several working hours each day on this.

"They leave school at six o'clock very often in the afternoon and then come back in the evening and devote hours more on the task of training and so on. What is the use of talking about the teachers being one day off, and the taxpayers losing their services for this day? Why not count the other hours in? I'll venture to say that in less than a year a full twenty days' free service will have been given this city by the teachers above all the time out for holidays."

"Well, the public doesn't know that," countered Mr. Lent.

"They should know it now," replied Mr. MacLaurin.

Steel Safe Purchased

Only minor matters occupied the attention of the members of the Board and except for brief flashes of discussion business moved quickly to an early adjournment.

A recommendation by the Finance Committee that a steel safe be purchased from a Toronto firm for the purpose of safeguarding money and valuables in the principal's office at a cost of $80 was approved.

"The old brick vault is inadequate for safeguarding cash," pointed out Chas. Hyde. "It would have cost us too much to put a steel lining in it too."

"Is the vault useless?" queried Mr. Ostrom.

"No, it will be all right for the keeping of documents," replied the chairman.

A committee named to bring down the estimates for the year 1934 is composed of the following: Chairman E. A. Geen, Geo. F. Ostrom, H. J. Allin, Chas. Hyde, F. S. Deacon and Cyril Waite.

"And we expect to have this report on estimates ready for the Board some time next week," stated Mr. Waite, in answer to a letter received from the City Council.

"The city ought to show a good example itself," commented Mr. Ostrom.

A motion which was not yet adopted by the Board was made by Trustee Reg. Moncrief in which the attention of the Dominion and Provincial governments will be drawn to the fact that at present inexperienced office workers graduating from schools find it impossible to secure governmental positions, owing to lack of previous experience in office work.

"As it is now," argued Trustee Moncrief, "the small business man must stand the expense of training this help, only to lose it some times after a year or so when they accept governmental posts. It isn't fair. I believe the graduate should have just as good a break as the others when it comes to applying for these jobs."

The motion was laid over until the next meeting.

Milk Not Paid for

It was revealed that on one day last week the milk that was being delivered to city schools had turned sour.

"I believe that all the school principals are aware of this," commented Mr. Allin.

"Well, we didn't pay for that day's supply, did we?" questioned Mr. Waite.

"Make a note of that, Mr. Secretary," requested Mr. Ostrom. "We don't want to pay for spoiled milk."

Mr. W. J. Harrison—"That milk must have come from the cow that the farmer lit a bonfire under when it was so cold last week."

Minor repairs will be carried out in the Collegiate Institute. The bicycle room will be given better protection there with the installation of heavy wire netting with a locked gate in the room. New shelving will be placed in the biological laboratory. A grant of $100 to the school library was approved. A recommendation also that the services of a supply teacher will not be needed for a replacement of less than three days was carried.

A request from the local body of Girl Guides for the use of the gymnasium for a meeting one night next week was honored. On the written request of Mr. C. C. Stewart, trustee, a two months' leave of absence was granted.

Book Cost Lower Likely

Further reductions in the cost of supplying scholars of the Collegiate Institute with school books may result from the probing of a special committee named for this purpose. The committee consisting of Mr. Moncrief, chairman, Rev. H. B. Neal, Principal MacLaurin and Mr. H. J. Allin will meet to consider where reductions may be made in the present cost of supply.

Under the heading of Enquiries, Trustee Moncrief asked: "It has been rumored on the streets that a certain young man of the city who was said to have been the one who robbed the Collegiate vault some months ago was finally caught, and the money taken away from him and returned to the school. Is this true? I want to see this matter officially confirmed or denied. There is said to be suspicion and whisperings about this boy, and I have been requested by him to clear this matter up. Does anyone know anything of it?"

Chairman E. A. Geen—"Mr. MacLaurin would be the only one who would know about this. Mr. MacLaurin?"

"No. Absolutely not," replied Mr. MacLaurin. "The police have been up to the school here several times looking the vault over and so on, but so far nothing has come of their investigators that I know of. As far as the money being returned, it hasn't been. I see the same sort of robbery has been carried out in Toronto. Maybe the robber moved west."

Mr. Moncrief—"That should dispose of that rumor."

"Has this city received any of those 50,000 editions of 'Cry Havoc' being distributed by the Ontario Department?" asked Trustee Allin. "That's a wonderful book. I believe we should get enough of them to go around, and have every scholare read it."

"We haven't heard any word about them, yet," replied Secretary J. B. Findlay.

"This special committee that was supposed to look after the reduction of this Board; is it still functioning?" asked Mr. Moncrief.

"I believe that went out of existence with last year's board," replied a member.

"What are the hours governing the use of this school by the pupils?" asked Mr. R. D. Adams. "Have they entry to the school at all hours at night, and after school?"

"No, only on special occasions," enlightened Chairman E. A. Geen.

"What's on tonight?" asked the trustee.

"A basketball game, I believe."

"Oh. I heard them whooping and hollering in the hall out there, and I just wondered."

MALCOLM CAMPBELL SEEKS DESERT GOLD

London, Feb. 17—An expedition to search for gold and racetracks in the heart of wildest Africa started from Southampton yesterday.

Aboard the Arundel Castle when she shipped for Capetown was Sir Malcolm Campbell, holder of the world's automobile speed record, and two friends. The party, which will soon be joined by Sir Alan Cobham, famed British aviation pioneer, is bound for the parched Kalahari desert in Bechuanaland, located between the Orange and Zambesi Rivers.

The two British knights of speed, with a geologist friend and a mechanic intend to fly into the desert in Sir Alan's cabin monoplane, air-speed courier. It is this machine in which, later in the year, Sir Alan intends to attempt a non-stop flight from England to Australia, refueling from four tanker planes while flying.

Carlow's Greeting to City as Centennial Draws Near

Felicitations Are Sent by Reeve And Clerk of Township

All the way from Fort Stewart in Carlow Township this morning to the office of City Clerk Wilfred Holmes came another resolution passed by Carlow Township Council at a recent meeting, congratulating this city on the attainment of the 100th anniversary. The resolution:

"Moved by J. C. Mackey, seconded by W. E. Inwood, that whereas the City of Belleville will have reached the century mark on the 6th day of March, 1934, Be it resolved that this council of the said Township send their whole-hearted congratulations to His Worship the Mayor, Aldermen and citizens of the City of Belleville on its centennial.

"The high commercial and industrial standard with all its institutions, its beauty, nicely situated on the Bay of Quinte, anticipating the deep water way canal, promises in future to be a very important shipping centre for agricultural products.

"All this can only be obtained and maintained by sound municipal government, self-denial and sacrifice by all.

"May your deliberations as a municipal body during the year 1934 eclipse all other records regarding service and satisfactory accomplishments.

"Jas Douglas, Clerk, Fort Stewart,

"Jas. D. Jennock, Reeve of Carlow Township."

The resolution will be read to members of the city council at their next regular meeting.

HOSPITAL BURNS PATIENTS SAVED

PEMBROKE, Feb. 17—Twenty patients were carried to safety when fire of unknown origin destroyed a two-storey wooden hospital at the Petawawa military camp, now being used by an unemployment relief project. As the fire started in the attic, there was ample time to get the patients out. They were taken to a first aid station.

Despite a three-hour fight by 350 men of the camp, they were unable to extinguish the blaze but were able to save equipment and fittings of the hospital.

Col. J. H. L. Bogart, superintendent of the camp, was unable to estimate the damage.

Tragic Death of King Albert I Leaves Peace of Europe Undisturbed, Former Allies, Foes, Send Condolences

All Eyes Turn to Prince Leopold as Successor

QUEEN DISTRAUGHT

Touching Meeting of Prince Leopold And Queen Elizabeth

(By The Associated Press)

As the world mourned King Albert today, hope was expressed in the capitals of the great powers that his death will not disturb the peace of Europe.

While flags were half-mast everywhere and official periods of mourning were ordered, attention was focussed on his successor, the young Crown Prince Leopold.

How he will handle the Belgian internal difficulties, including the old racial problems, and how he will act toward Europe's political troubles of the hour, one of the chief of which is Hitlerism, worried the statesmen of many countries.

France Disturbed

France was particularly disturbed over the tragedy, and hoped that Leopold III will prove as good an ally as did King Albert. Premier Gaston Doumergue and his two vice Premiers, Andre Tardieu and Edouard Herriot, decided to carry the nation's condolences personally to Brussels, and President Albert Lebrun will attend the funeral.

It was noted with much satisfaction by the countries which formed the group of Allies in the Great War that German military leaders, headed by President Paul Von Hindenburg himself, expressed deep sorrow and regret.

Messages of condolence poured into Brussels from nations and people in all parts of the world, showing the regard peoples everywhere had for him.

Brussels, Belgium, Feb. 19 (AP)—"All is finished!"—A phrase breathed so low as to be almost inaudible—was uttered over an over again today by the distraught Queen Elizabeth of Belgium as she mourned the death of the King.

This was revealed by persons close to the Queen as they sought to comfort her. They said she was almost overcome with grief and was unable to control her feelings.

Friends of the Royal family at Surbarban Laeken, site of the castle, declined to give details of the first meeting of the Royal son and his mother upon Prince Leopold's arrival from Switzerland last night.

Before they embraced after the Prince and Princess had been taken to the castle, the mother and the man who will soon be King Leopold III knelt before the dead monarch's bier in the Royal Chamber.

Princess Astrid, who loved King Albert as she did her own father, was urged to shorten her trying visit to the death chamber because of her health.

Princess Marie-Jose, at Naples, was forced to give up plans to attend her father's funeral, but her husband, Prince Umberto, was expected today.

A French delegation headed by Premier Gaston Doumergue, Andre Tardieu and Edouard Herriot was

Dogs Chase Sheep Shot By Farmers

Guelph, Ont., Feb. 19—(CP) — Two dogs, caught in the act of chasing a flock of sheep on the farm of Augustus Adams, Guelph Township, were shot by farmers today. A third escaped, dodging a hail of shot which followed it. The two were Alsatians, and are believed to be the pair responsible for widespread sheep killing throughout this district.

None of the sheep were injured today.

British Empire Can Never Forget Says King George

By The Canadian Press

"The British Empire can never forget."

From London, His Majesty expressed the Empire's sorrow at the death of Albert, King of the Belgians, sending the following message to the Duke of Brabant, the Crown Prince.

"It is with the most profound sorrow that I and my people have learned of the tragic death of your illustrious father and I hasten to offer our heartfelt sympathy to you and the people of Belgium.

"The British Empire can never forget the heroic figure whose courage was an inspiration to the Allies throughout the dark years of the war and will join with the Belgian people in mourning the loss of a true friend and ally."

On behalf of the Canadian soldiers who fought in Flanders for the cause Albert served so heroically, the Department of National Defence at Ottawa issued the following statement.

"The sad news of the accidental death of King Albert in Belgium will be received by the members of the Canadian Corps with very great regret. During the war he visited our units both in the line and in reserve on many occasions and the example which both he and Her Majesty the Queen of the Belgians set of remaining in the small section of their country not overrun by the enemy and of sharing in the hardships and dangers of their people was highly regarded.

Pope Pius, in a telegram to Queen Elizabeth, said: "We present you our most heartfelt condolences and implore from the very good God the peace of the just for the soul of so loved and worthy a sovereign and ask the grace of celestial comfort for Your Majesty, the Royal Family and the entire nation so greviously tried.

David Lloyd George, war-time prime minister of Great Britain, said Albert was a "wise Monarch grievously tried.

MERRY MOOD OF MONARCH

Smilingly Set Out in Full Alpine Dress, Driving Own Car

Brussels, Feb. 19.—Rumors that Albert I., King of the Belgians, had been mentally depressed before his tragic death were nailed as imaginative and untrue by court attaches today.

"The King was in splendid spirits when, in full Alpine equipment, smiling at the promising sunshine, he left Laeken with his valet, Van Dyck, Saturday," a court dignitary told the newspaper Independence Belge.

King Albert, the spokesman said, drove the car himself, arriving near the scene of his death about three o'clock Saturday afternoon.

Leaving the car, he instructed his valet where to await his return and told him the cliff he planned to scale. The valet was the last person to see the King alive, it was said today.

Prior to leaving the castle at Laeken, Albert gave precise instructions as usual concerning his program for the evening. The documents he was reading before he left the castle were still on the desk today—just as he left them.

Prince of Wales Will Represent King George at Funeral

HISTORY RECALLED

Leopold III Will Be Fourth King of Belgians

London, Feb. 19.— (AP)— The Prince of Wales will represent the King at the funeral in Brussels, Thursday of Albert I, King of the Belgians, it was announced officially today.

The Prince is expected to fly—his favorite means of transportation—to Brussels Wednesday, weather permitting.

In accordance with the court mourning decree, officers wore crepe arm bands at the traditional changing of the guards at Buckingham Palace this morning.

LONDON, Feb. 19—(CP Cable)—The House of Commons resumed its sessions this afternoon with marks of mourning for King Albert of the Belgians. The Sergeant-at-Arms and the Speaker's trainbearer wore black gloves, instead of the usual white.

A murmur of sympathy ran around the House when Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald gave notice that tomorrow he would move an address of condolence with the royal family, the government and the people of Belgium.

All flags in London were at half-mast.

Royal History

BRUSSELS, Feb. 19.— When Leopold III ascends the throne of Belgium, he will become the fourth king of that little independent country.

His great grand uncle, Leopold I, was the first ruler of the country formed as a result of the revolt of the Belgians against the King of the Netherlands in 1830.

Leopold II succeeded his father, Leopold I. Leopold II was the uncle of King Albert and great uncle of Leopold III.

Belgium was a part of France in the latter part of the 18th Century but the great powers, determined not to leave France in permanent possession of the territory, forced the establishment of a new kingdom, formed by Belgium and Holland, a kingdom confirmed by the treaty of Vienna in June, 1815.

The Belgians revolted, and with a general war in prospect if France again stepped in, the powers, at a conference in London January 20, 1931, provided that Belgium should be a perpetually neutral state.

Dates From 1831

They sought a new king, and found him in the person of Leopold I, then a German Prince of Saxe-Coburg, one-time officer in the Russian Army, and who had, a year before, turned down an offer to become King of Greece.

Leopold I assumed the throne July 21, 1831, after taking the oath of allegiance to the country's new constitution. It was not believed possible for the new kingdom to last, but by a wise and benevolent administration, Leopold I welded the people of his little country solidly together.

Leopold I died Dec. 10, 1865 and his son, Leopold Louis Philippie Marie Victor, became Leopold II. He also was noted for his ability, sagacity and kindness. The most notable event of his rule was the foundation of the Congo Free State.

Leopold II died at Laeken Dec. 17, 1909, after a reign of 43 years. As he had no son, the rule passed to his nephew, Albert, the latter taking the oath of allegiance on December 23, 1909.

SIMPLE OATH OF TWO DOZEN WORDS

Brussels, Feb. 19 (AP) — A simple oath of two dozeen words officially will make Crown Prince Leopold the new King of the Belgians—Leopold III.

The words: "I swear to observe the constitution and the laws of the Belgian people and to maintain the national independence and the integrity of territory."

The solemn ceremony on the day after the burial of his father, King Albert I, will be held in the Chamber of Deputies.

KINGUNAWARE ROCKS LOOSE ON CLIFFSIDE

Belgian Resident Had Reported Condition to Tourist Club

KING AS FLIER

Canadian Tells Courtesy of Albert I in War Days

Brussels, Feb. 19—(AP)— "If the King had only known......"

More than one grieving Belgian voiced that sentiment today as it became known that a Brussels resident had discovered many rocks loosened by recent freezings and thawings on the cliff from which King Albert I fell to his death when a rock broke.

The matter had been reported, it was said, to a tourist club here.

Belief was expressed that the King would not have tried his Saturday afternoon's climbing had this information reached his ears.

By another curious quirk of fate, King Albert had planned a short visit to Switzerland and, but for political events, would have been their instead of Belgium Saturday.

Story of Air Flight

Toronto, Feb. 19—(CP)—A flight with Albert, King of the Belgians, over enemy territory in a plane piloted by a Canadian airman, Captain J. Robinson, D.F.C., in August 1918, was recalled by the veteran aviator today when word of the death of the Belgian monarch reached him.

Story of Flight

Capt. Robinson was elected to pilot the King over German-occupied territory when he wanted to see H.M.S. Vindictive sunk in the harbor of Ostend. The Canadian airman was at that time flight commander of 202, Royal Air Force Squadron. The two started from Bergie, near Dunkirk, and were preceded by a fighting squadron. They were from 15,000 to 16,000 feet up, and although they were shot at continuously, no shells came near the royal plane.

Capt. Robinson said the King was very courteous and amused by the bursting shells. A few days after the flight, the captain was presented with a silver cigarette case, engraved on the inside were the following words: "Captain Jack Robinson, R.C.A.F. in remembrance of our interesting trip to Ostend, August 25, 1918, Albert."

Kingly Monarch

Paris, Feb. 19—(AP)— Three former presidents of France and the man who holds the office now expressed their shock and sorrow today at the tragic death of Albert I, King of the Belgians, whom all knew well.

"He is a knightly King, gone to join Marshal Ferdinand Foch and Marshal Joseph Joffre in legendary history," said former President Alexandre Millerand.

President Albert Lebrun and former President Gaston Doumergue, now Premier, and Raymond Poincare, expressed the same deep feeling.

General Maxime Weygand called the dead King "one of the greatest and noblest men war has ever revealed."

JOHN McGRAW SERIOUSLY ILL

Baseball Leader Suffering From Uremia And in Semi-Coma

New York, Feb. 19 (AP)—John J. McGraw, one of baseball's greatest leaders and fighters, today was waging a losing battle against uremia in New Rochelle Hospital.

A bulletin issued by his doctors at 9 a.m. reported his condition as worse than last night, when they expressed hopes for his recovery, and from other sources it was learned he was sinking rapidly and in a semi-coma.

"The patient was restless at intervals tonight," reported Doctors Louis B. Champman and E. L. Kellogg in their official statement. "The general condition is not quite as good this morning. Temperature, pulse and respiration are somewhat increased."

McGraw's age—he will be 61 April 7—is a factor working against his recovery, his physicians pointed out.

Machine Gun Fire Fells Troops

Bodies of Heimwehr troops, shown above, littered the court outside of the Karl Marx apartments in Vienna after the Austrian soldiers had stormed the Social Democrat headquarters and trained their heavy artillery on the stronghold of the revolutionists. This picture was radioed to New York from London, after it had been flown there from Vienna.

AGED INDIAN FLEES FIRE

Crutch Catches in Leg of Chair, Indian Hurling Lamp

Kingston, Ont., Feb. 19 (CP) — George Jeffries, an aged Indian narrowly escaped serious burns when his home, a few hundred yards below the locks at Kingston Mills, six miles east of here, was destroyed by fire Sunday.

Mr. Jeffries had just got up from his bed and was walking across the kitchen floor, carrying a lighted lamp when one of his crutches caught on the leg of a chair causing him to fall.

In an effort to save himself, he threw the lamp, scattering oil around the room which was soon enveloped in flames. He had only time to get out of the house before the entire building was burning.

Mr. Jeffries lives alone at Kingston Mills and maintains that he is about 100 years of age, though it is believed he is about 90.

COST OF ELECTION PLACED AT $80

With the total cost of the election of school trustee for Bleecker Ward set at between $75.00 and $80.00, not more than twelve or fifteen votes are expected to be cast today in the balloting being carried on in three polling booths of the ward today. Up to eleven o'clock only four votes had been cast at the booth in the home of Thomas Morris, 204 Station street where electors of No. 14 were listed. At Queen Victoria School not a single vote had been cast up to that hour. One more polling booth had not been heard from.

Opinion was divided today on the outcome of the election for trustee, which will place either Miss Fleming of Mr. Isaac Stephenson in that office for the coming year.

Principal cost of the election, it was pointed out at the city hall today, will be for the pay of the three returning officers required by law and the rent of the booths. Stationnery and printing will boost the sum up to the above named total.

FRIGID WAVE AGAIN ON WAY

Preceded by Heavy Snow Fall in Belleville-Kingston Area

By The Canadian Press

Ontario emerged from an all-night blizzard today to find another frigid wave had settled in after a brief respite of moderate weather early in the week-end.

Throughout the province a stiff north-west wind whisked snows down from the Arctic wastes, drifted high banks along highways and impaired highway travel in several districts. In the Kingston-Belleville area the snowfall was the heaviest and temperatures were falling.

Communists today attempted unsuccessfully to start a general strike in Madrid in sympathy with Socialists in Austria.

U.S. Navy Goes to Sea for Three Days 90 Ships, 27,000 Men in Complement

San Pedro, Calif., Feb. 19—(AP) —Twenty-seven thousand men went to sea today for three days of United States navy manoeuvres.

Dawn brought the signal for the movement of 90 fighting ships and approximately 300 war planes from San Pedro and San Diego naval bases to secret rendezvous at sea.

The battle force was under orders to take a westerly course, and at some place about 100 miles off San Diego to turn in a manoeuvre of attacking the coast.

BE LENIENT ADVICE GIVEN AUSTRIANS

Clemency and Appeasement Advocated by Sir John Simon

SHOOTING SEQUEL

Treatment of Labor in Austria Discussed

LONDON, Feb. 19.—(AP)— Sir John Simon, Secretary for Foreign Affairs, revealed in the House of Commons today that the British Government has made representations to Austria to treat lightly in dealing with the situation growing out of the civil war there.

The statement was in reply to a question from the floor as to whether the Foreign Secretary will make it plain to Austria that "the continuance of the political and financial support given in the past will be contingent on the way in which she treats the working classes in that country".

Sir John Simon replied to the question: "The British Government has been making representation as to clemency and appeasement in the present situation."

The exchange of question and answer followed the Foreign Secretary's reading of the three-power communique of Saturday night, whereby Great Britain, France and Italy combined in the assertion that they recognised the Sovereignty and Independence of Austria—a declaration regarded as a hint to Germany that the three powers would permit no violation of Austrian Independence.

Col. Josiah Clement Wedgwood, Labor Party member, asked whether "this agreement was given before the Austrian government perpetrated its massacres or afterwards." He also asked whether Great Britain's views had been modified as a result of Austrian developments.

Sir John answered this question with the remark that he felt sure it would be recognised "that whether the peace of Europe best can be secured by the disapparance of Austria or not can hardly be said to be changed by the events of the last few days."

TANK BLOWN BY THE COLD

Presumed Automatic Gauge Refused to Function Due to Cold Snap

Marmora (Special)—A very unusual accident occurred at Dr. Hamilton Crawford's on Saturday morning which might have had serious results. Owing to the extreme cold the automatic guage which controls the pumping of water into the large pressure tank in the basement of the house was either frozen up or failed to work. As a result the pump kept on working until the pressure in the tank became so great that the tank was blown right off its base and struck the kitchen floor with such force that three or four joists were smashed and the kitchen floor above them shattered. The kitchen stove was also thrown over and damaged so it had to be replaced. The basement was flooded with water and considerable damage was done in other ways. With the assistance of Deloro Smelting and Refining Co. Limited the damage was mostly repaired in record time. The bottom was welded in the tank, new connections made, new joists and new flooring installed and the water turned on again Saturday evening.

Fortunately no one was injured as a result of the accident.

Perfume-Scented Taxis Quite the Vogue with Up-to-Date Detroit Firms

Detroit, Feb. 19 (CP)—Perfume-scented taxis? Sure, they are the vogue with quite a number of taximen here. Detroit cabs have gone foppish.

Drivers pride themselves on the appearance of their vehicles and have decided that a bit of incense or perfume adds that little touch which pleases customers. In fact one drug store is selling inexpensive scent designed especially for that purpose. It is suggestive of lilies of the valley.

"Customers like it," said Driver Steve Evans. "It freshens the air in the cab." Arthur Orday admitted that he too used the scent particularly in the winter. John Alsobrook used sandalwood for his "sweetener."

Of course some of the old-timers look askance at the proposal.

"It is all bosh," said Robert Watkins. "It is the bunk," according to Edward Martin.

"You can't tell what some of these young shieks will do," said another old-timer, "why some of them even wear spats."

WRIST FRACTURED IN HEAVY FALL

Mrs. F. G. Mills, 16 Grove Street met with a painful accident on Saturday afternoon, when in stepping off a chair, the heel of her shoe caught in a stool, throwing her heavily to the floor, fracturing the right wrist. She was attended by Dr. G. H. Stobie, who reduced the fracture at the hospital. Mr. Mills at the time of the accident was attending the funeral of the late Rev. Dr. J. A. Seymour and the fracture had been reduced and Mrs. Mills had returned home before his arrival. For the present Mrs. Mills is staying with her daughter, Mrs. Henthorn at Corbyville.

FROST LINE DOWN FOUR FOOT DEPTH

Called to repair a blocked sewer leading from a downtown building, employees of the city department of public works found it necessary to excavate through four feet of frozen ground before the bottom of the frost line was reached. This is an average depth throughout the city. In an ordinary winter it was stated, the penetration seldom exceeded three feet.

DISCUSS REPAIRS AT NEXT COUNCIL

Needed repairs in the upper section of the city hall tower, urged by the custodian of the clock, Jack Roblin, whose claim, that the weakened supports of the huge bell and clock mechanism were a potential menace to the safety of the building, will be discussed at the committee meeting of the city council on Thursday evening, it is expected. A special invitation to attend the meeting and advise councillors of the facts of the case is said to have been extended Mr. Robiin by Alderman Thomas Marshall, chairman of Markets and City Property.

50 SNOW SHOVELLERS ON CITY JOBS

Fifty men, the largest force of workers employed on a single day this winter for the sole purpose of removing snow, bundled against the cold weather, and armed with scoops and shovels, spread out over the city in an attempt to remove one of the heaviest snow falls of the season, which coated walks and streets to a depth of from five to six inches. Crosswalks and streets in front of city property with mounting billows of snow, drifted by the wind throughout the early morning, presented a problem to the snow shovellers.

Although costs are mounting in the department of public works, this winter has been more productive of labor for unemployed of the city than for many years. One hundred and sixteen workers of the department were paid from a pay sheet entered last week. This includes only regular and extra employees of the department, and does not include relief workers on Zwick's Island payroll.

RADIO PROGRAMS ARE INTERRUPTED

Radio owners on the East Hill were up in arms on Saturday evening when it was found that the usual peaceful broadcasts from native and United States broadcasting stations were being marred by an intolerable buzzing and crackling of some defective electrical apparatus. Many of them were forced to discontinue the use of their machines over the week end, while others listened to their favorite programs only with great difficulty. On Monday the trouble was stated to have almost disappeared with only brief interruptions from the unknown source.

DOG FOUND WITH FRACTURED HIP

Found lying on the Corbyville dump a pure-bred German police dog was removed to the city dog pound early Saturday evening where it was found to be suffering from a fractured hip. Later it was found the animal belonged to Mrs. Fisher, Charles Street, who said the dog had been missing since last Monday. Dr. Reid, local Government veterinary, is endeavouring to save its life.

WORKERS WORK DESPITE COLD

Blustering weather, flying snowflakes and increasingly cold weather during the day failed to halt the relief work programme on Zwick's Island today. Clad for warmth and protection against the elements, the two hundred workers used to the cold weather and outside work, they have been engaged on in shifts throughout the winter, have become inured to the work. Only very brief excursions at odd intervals are taken to the stove warmed building on the island for a shin heat.

ROBE IS STOLEN FROM RADIATOR

Returning to his parked car early Saturday evening F. N. Nobes, R. R. 5, Belleville, found that the Buffalo robe, which he had covering his radiator placed there to keep the motor warm, was missing. Mr. Nobes had left his automobile parked at the rear of a Front St. place of business, covering the radiator with the valuable Buffalo robe. The police were notified and traced the robber's foot prints in the snow to a local driveway. The matter is still under investigation.

ROUTINE BUSINESS OF HYDRO BOARD

Only business of a routine character came before the regular meeting of the Belleville Hydro Commission today. All members were present.

MRS. E. B. COOKE

TWEED,—Word was received on Saturday of the passing on Saturday, February 17th of Mrs. (Rev.) E. B. Cooke wife of Rev. E. B. Cooke, pastor of Cannington United Church and the pastor of Tweed United Church from 1928 to 1932. For some time Mrs. Cooke has not been in the best of health and just before Christmas suffered an attack of influenza which left her in a weakened condition and aggravated an old trouble. About two weeks ago she was taken to the hospital in Toronto for an operation which, however, could not be performed owing to her weakened heart condition. Surviving are her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bamplin of Unionville, her husband and one daughter, Eileen. The funeral service will be held in Cannigton at one o'clock p.m. on Tuesday.

MAIN ROADS ARE ALL OPEN

Concession Roads, However piled Deep With Drifting Snow

Traffic was possible to northern points in Hastings County today only if the main travelled roads were used, stated stage and bus drivers when questioned.

A six-inch fall of snow swept into the district late last night and early this morning by a strong wind and piled in mounting billows, which reached almost the tops of rail fences throughout the section, almost ended all other traffic on the less travelled side roads and concession roads, and gave even rural mail carriers, who have depended on the less temperamental horse to make their regular deliveries during the past few weeks, considerable trouble before they were able to get thru'. On highways however, due to the work of government snow plows, which were out at dawn, wheeled traffic was carrying on with little more difficulty than annoyance.

"Madoc road was pretty good, all the way," reported Mr. E. Stapley, proprietor of the Belleville-Madoc bus."

Tweed road was open and in fair condition, although drifted badly in places, it was reported at the office of Aselstine's Garage, proprietors of the Tweed and Marmora stages.

Larger transport companies of the city reported little difficulty on the highways, where snow plows had also been active.

Woodworking Plant Entered by Unknowns

Gaining entrance through a rear window, which was forced open, mauders ransacked the Elliott woodworking building on Pinnacle St., sometime over the week-end. Nothing of any great value was reported missing although the would-be burglars completely plundered the building, apparently looking for loot, that suited their purpose. Mr. Reg Elliott of the firm in question, notified the police early Monday morning. Accompanying Mr. Elliott Sergeant Booth made an inspection of the building, discovering how the prowlers gained entrance. An old bag and some new over-size files were all, that was found missing.

"Peace Be Unto You" Message of Moderator

The irreparable loss to the congregation of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church in the sudden death of their beloved pastor, Rev. Dr. J. A. Seymour was most forcibly brought home on Sunday morning, when Rev. S. M. Scott, Picton, Moderator of the Kingston Presbytery, delivered a kindly message of hope and comfort. The church was filled to capacity, the members of the Sunday School occupying a separate section in the auditorium. In memory of the late pastor, evening service in the church was not held and this week no meeting will be held in the church. In making this announcement as Moderator, Rev. Mr. Scott, solicited the congregation to spend a week in devotion and prayer, asking for the Divine Guidance in their hour of trouble. Only three hymns were sung at the service and during the taking of the offering, Professor Wheatley, played "The Lost Chord".

Taking as his text "Blessed are they, that mourn for they shall be comforted" and the last words of Christ after His resurrection, after He had met His disciples in the Upper Room "Peace be Unto You", Rev. Scott stated, that he was not going to preach a sermon but rather speak to the congregation as a whole, because he said "it will be utterly impossible for me to meet every member individually. This church and this city has lost a valuable member of the community and as the years go on we will be able to more appreciate the many services, that he rendered in Christ's name." "It is fitting," said Rev. Mr. Scott, that we should gather on the first day of the week as the disciples did waiting for their Christ. They met in that Upper Room in Jerusalem with a terrible weight on their shoulders, but they talked over the wonderful experiences of the past years, when they walked and talked with Christ but they were dejected over their attitude to Christ in the Garden now that their Great Master and Leader had been taken from them.

Realized They Failed

Rev. Mr. Scott stated, that the men realized, they had failed but they could not forget and it is the same with us here today. "We may reject Jesus but if once for a brief moment by His ever living presence we will never be the same. God in His kind providence removes them from our midst and it is always for some purpose and probably we will not realize for many years, the sudden removal by Jesus of your beloved pastor." Continuing the story of the Upper Room, the speaker showed, that in the midst of their tribulations, Christ came into their presence and broke bread with them and before leaving, said "peace be unto you".

It is true, that Christ has risen but He daily communes and holds fellowship with us and the same holds true of one we mourn He will be present in the spirit guiding onward and upward to the heavenly home, that he now enjoys. The disciples on that wonderful day were afraid of the future but Christ set all things right, when He appeared and said "peace be unto you". Death could not hold Him and He promised to be with them for evermore and the disciples were transformed from dejected men to disciples of Christ and they went about preaching good and His salvation. "Probably during the busy life, that the late Dr. Seymour spent with you," said Rev. Mr. Scott, "you now recall the number of times you might have done a little more but God has forgiven and sent His Only Son as a comfort to you."

Rev. Robert Hall, pastor of John Street United Church, delivered a most appealing prayer, hoping, that the light of God's love would rest upon the congregation and those, who were left to mourn. Rev. Harold Reid, also assisted briefly in the service.

At Other Churches

In other churches tribute was paid to the memory of the late minister of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, the late Dr. J. A. Seymour and to his life and work as well as reference to the shock his sudden summons has roused in the entire community. Eloquent tribute to the results of his labours here and his sympathetic attitude towards all communions and to his interest in every philanthropic enterprise was tempered only by the sense of personal loss which each minister felt as his brother spoke of his associate, who had been snatched away. Most touching were the references to the personal friendships which the late Dr. Seymour had formed here.

The thought of the passing of Dr. Seymour, saddened and dominated all congregations yesterday. In Bridge Street United Church in the midst of an evangelistic service, Rev. Dr. J. Semple pointed out the uncertainty of human life and cited the loss of Dr. Seymour. "If Dr. Seymour were here tonight and I believe he is here in spirit, he would say "Be ye also ready," said the minister.

Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne at evensong at St. Thomas' Church paid fitting reference to the tragic death of Dr. Seymour and pointed out what fine cooperation he had always had from Dr. Seymour especially in regard to the recent week of prayer, three services of which were held in St. Andrew's Church. Mr. Payne voiced the sympathy of the parish of St. Thomas' for the bereaved family of Dr. Seymour and for St. Andrew's congregation.

During prayer on Sunday morning at the Tabernacle Rev. I. B. Naylor prayed for the bereaved family and congregation.

At Holloway Street United Church the entire congregation stood for silent prayer at the morning service and the Rev. Harold B. Neal, minister, offered a brief prayer for the family and congregation. Messages of condolence to Mrs. Seymour and her son and also to the congregation of St. Andrew's will be sent today.

The congregation of Christ Church stood at silent prayer for the family and for the sister congregation of St. Andrew's.

At Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church Mr. M. Barlow, lay reader, asked Rev. Harold Reid, who was supplying in the absence of Bishop Marshall, to extend the sympathy of the congregation to Mrs. Seymour. Rev. Reid offered a prayer for the family and St. Andrew's Church.

At the opening of morning service in John Street United Church, the Rev. W. D. Harrison, who was in charge in the absence of Rev. Robert Hall, the pastor, assisting in the service at St. Andrew's, made reference to Dr. Seymour's passing the congregation stood in silent prayer and then sang:

"For All the Saints who from their labours rest,
"Who Thee by faith before the world confessed,
"Thy name, O Jesus, be forever blest.
"Alleluia!"

At Victoria Avenue Baptist Church, tribute was paid by the Rev. A. H. Jones, minister, who had been very intimate in church work and personally with Dr. Seymour, to the kindliness of heart, the devotion and the fine personal qualities of his late friend.

Born in Perth, Ont., he had been a resident of Vancouver for a quarter of a century.

LIBRARY CORNER

It looks as if we are going to have a rest from the endless grind of going places and seeing things. Lent is an unsolved mystery to many of us but its blessings are easily traced in a relaxed tempo of living and in an added period of leisure. Our modern life makes so many organised attacks upon our spare time that we can look upon this respite as an Heaven-sent opportunity to recapture our dwindling personality. There is something to do this Lent. Personally we do things much better than we do without things—and now for a few practical suggestions. Naturally we would think that the only way to regain your intellectual equilibrium is through the medium of books. It is not a bad idea, really.

First and foremost among the recent publications is Eugene O'Neil. Yes, we said Eugene O'Neil, for Lenten Reading. He has written a new play Days Without End that has proved one of the most thought-provoking books that we have met with in some time. In the notice on the jacket it is guaranteed: "Days Without End" will leave no one cold and unmoved. As an aside we might remark that O'Neil is finding his soul but loosing his originality. In this you will find all the tricks of duo-personality that makes his previous efforts unique. Now he has dedicated his unquestioned genius to evolve "A Modern Miracle Play" Not the least miracle portrayed is the fact that O'Neil could have written it.

In another vein, yet equally refreshing, is a book of sermons by Harry Emerson Fosdick, which he has published under the title "The Hope of the World". Right at this point, you will exclaim "Do I have to read sermons; isn't it bad enough to listen to them?" We might remark to the effect that that is a rather common attitude. But seriously, these are wonderful in their breadth and depth of religious experience and fervour. In other works which have arrived from the versatile pen of the pastor of Riverside Church, New York City, we have had displayed a smart modernism. Here in contrast, we have the product of a Christian soul, filled with human understanding. A few of the addresses which appealed to us more than others were the following: The Hope of the World Lies in its Minorities; Through the Social Gospel Into Personal Religion; The Service of Religious Faith to Mental Health; The Conquest of Fear; The Peril of Worshipping Jesus; Christianity more than Duty-Not Weight but Wings; and lately, A Soul's Invincible Surmise. All of these will deepen the channels of your soul regardless of the particular direction of your religious life and persuasion.

Next in order we have, Mr. Stanley Jones and his new book "Christ and Human Suffering". This author is appearing on the lecture platform in Toronto, at the time of going to press. This may make his book more interesting, or it may make it less interesting. Personally, we would much rather read "Christ and Human Suffering" than hear its author deliver a lecture. This work is the product of his years of service among the countless sufferers of India. The statement of his thesis is easily detected and developed in a charming manner. It hammers away, insistently upon the idea of God's desire for our ultimate happiness, and of the solution to our problems of unhappiness through following the example of Christ.

If the clear and searching light of the crisp prose of Dr. Jones proves a strain on your mental eyesight, we suggest the delicate and shadowy misticism of Repplier's life of California's greatest missionary Junipero Serra. Here is romance and adventure which the author does not attempt to analyse nor explain into absurdity. Here is a beauty of style that matches the traditional setting. Here, as also in Dr. Jones, is faith in Almighty God.

From faith in God, we come to that expression of faith between individuals, which men call human love. Nella Braddy has written a large volume around Anne Sullivan Macy. Now, who was Anne Sullivan Macy? We must be frank about these things. She was the teacher of Helen Kellar. To her Kellar has owed her fame and her widened horizons. Miss Braddy has built up her book on this unusual theme in an unusual way. This is "The book of the month that is different". If you care for novelty and for some thing that will be a challenge to your human irritations, this book will leave you strangely contented with your own lot in life.

Our next expression of Faith is faith in ourselves. After the experience of the past few years, that faith is at a low ebb, indeed. It is timely then, that we offer you Walter Pitkin's "Life Begins at Forty". You have always heard much of this book, and we shall not add our praise to that already stated. It is a perfect example of English prose, written around a call for a new world order. Do not let that last discourage you, for you will not be urged to form a committee to begin life at forty. We warn you, however, that you will be stimulated to adopt an alarming pose of superiority over the vapid mouthings of the youngsters of twenty and thirty. It also works the other way, and we can see those same youngsters looking forward to the "end of life for which the rest is made". However, it is not alone to congratulate those who have passed middle age — it is also intended to act as a spur to them. Listen to this:—

"The forties, fifties, sixties, must be devoted more and more, to expansive, exciting and precious learning. To learn something new, we must forget ourselves and go lost in the subject. Thus, we rise above the infantilisms which plague the empty hours of the senile. Above all, however, we must learn that there is a career for each decade, determined, chiefly, by the energy demanded".

We shall let the whole matter of Lenten reading rest there. If you want to escape from what Pitkin calls the infantilisms which plague the senile, then spend this Lent in intelligent and profitable reading. We shall stop with a prophecy that if you use this discipline, intelligently, you will not give up the precious hours so readily at the end of your period of fasting. G. E. G.

TRUCK MAY HAVE STRUCK AIR PUMP

Activities were rather quite in and about local police circles over the week end. An air pump, on Moira street, situated in front of the Belleville Vulcanizing Company's place of business, was broken off when a truck is alleged to have struck it early Saturday evening. A local resident appeared in police court Monday morning facing a breach of the L.C.A., Magistrate Mikel enlarged the case at the request of the defendant.

Picton and Prince Edward County

By Our Own Correspondent

Picton—On Thursday night "Parent and Pupil Evening" was held at P.C.V.I. and the school auditorium was packed to capacity, by an enthusiastic audience of parents from town and county.

The programme opened with selections by the school orchestra. From half past seven until eight a demonstration of experiments was given in the chemical and physical laboratories.

From eight o'clock until a quarter to nine the girls gave a demonstration of physical training, under the direction of Miss Gordon. This much enjoyed part of the program consisted of drills, marches and display dancing.

From a quarter to nine until nine thirty the boys gave an exhibition of physical training under the leadership of Mr. Andoff. First they illustrated work on the apparatus in the gymnasium, then pyramids, and lastly gave a demonstration of Danish drills, illustrating the system of Nels Bukh. Some years ago Nels Bukh went to Japan to teach drilling to the Japanese army and also to Japanese school children. He returned from Japan by way of Canada and while in Toronto so impressed the Department of Education, that his system has since been adopted.

From nine-thirty until a quarter to ten, art exhibits of the students were viewed and a demonstration of Commercial work put on in the typewriting rooms.

Directly after this, the large audience again gathered in the auditorium, where a short concert was much appreciated. The school orchestra gave several selections. Next followed three songs in French by the French class, and four popular songs of Germany, sung in German, by the German class.

Following these a one-act play "His First Dress Suit" was presented by members of the dramatic club under the direction of Miss Beth McMullen. The parts were all exceptionally well taken and the play was most enthusiastically received. The evening closed with the National Anthem.

Principal Fox hopes to make this Parent and Pupil night an annual event, so that parents may see the work that the school is doing, and may become acquainted with, and co-operate with the staff.

Mrs. Edwin Peeling and daughter, Mrs. Frank Billett and sister-in-law Mrs. Shank have gone to Oshawa. Mr. Shank will remain in Picton until after the sale of Mrs. Peeling's furniture on Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. Lyle Robinson was called to Belleville on Friday owing to the illness of her sister Mrs. Chaplin, who entered Belleville General Hospital to undergo an operation for appendicitis.

Mrs. Doolittle is nursing Mrs. Frank Pearsall and baby son at their home, Cherry Valley.

Philip Dodds was called to Toronto this week owing to the very grave illness of his sister, Miss Margery Dodds whose condition shows some slight improvement.

The roads are almost impassable for cars as the snow is piled high in places and had to be shovelled out to make good travelling.

The Y.P.S. was held at Miss Peggy Jury's on Tuesday evening, the attendance was fair despite the bad weather and roads.

MISS McMAHON VISITS GUIDES

Guides from Campbellford, Marmora, Deloro and Frankford, were invited to attend.

The Brownie Pack met at four o'clock in the High School Auditorium, where Miss McMahon assumed charge of the meeting. Games were taught and two stories were told the little Brownie while Miss Eleanor McRostie, Brown Owl of the Frankford Troop taught a little song. The Brown Owl of the Stirling Pack, Mrs. A. E. POCKET MONEY MADE BY SNOW SHOVELLING

Many Residents However Are Shovelling Own Walks This Year

Residents of the city are clearing their own walks this year, it was explained at the Employment Service of Canada office today. Altho' a few calls had been received at the Campbell Street office where names of workers are listed, the number of men employed on odd jobs this year is believed to be below the average for previous winters. Independent of the office, however, numerous unemployed have been garnering a considerable harvest of quarters and half dollars by making a canvass of residential streets in the city. One man stated today, that up to noon he had cleared four dollars by shovelling snow for house holders, while a small boy armed with a shovel and making calls on downtown store owners showed a handful of silver coins, the results of his efforts.

TWO FULL MOONS IN MONTH OF MARCH

Due to the Month of February Only Having 28 Days

There will be two moons in the sky next month. But the moons will be "full" moons, and local citizens who observe the strange recurrence need not hasten to an occulist for an eye examination. The happening will be unusual but quite in order, even if it does not occur very often.

In fact, for the first time in three years, the month of March will have the two full moons on the first day of the month, and again on the 30th.

This rare occurrence is due to the fact that February being the shortest month of the year with 28 days, had no full moon. The last one was on the last day of January. Since a full moon makes its appearance every 29 1-2 days, the first missed being in February, and comes on the first of March. That month, having 31 days, gets its second moon on the 30th.

R. Meldrum Stewart of the Dominion Observatory at Ottawa, said that while the occurrence was not a phenomenon, it only happened every two or three years.

BURY BEVERLEY JONES AT BROCKVILLE TODAY

Played Part in Developing Industrial Schools in Province

Toronto, Feb. 19—(CP)—The funeral of Beverley Jones, one of Ontario's leading lawyers and educationists, will be held here this afternoon from St. George's Anglican Church. He died at his home here Saturday in his 95th year. Interment will take place in Brockville, Ont.

A resident here for 70 years, Mr. Jones played a prominent part in developing industrial schools in Ontario. He also was a prominent figure in the legal world and a leading layman of that Anglican Church.

In 1864 when he graduated from Osgoode Hall, Mr. Jones launched on his legal career. He was the only surviving member of the class of 1864.

Mr. Jones was responsible for the legislation which resulted in formation of the Victoria and Alexandra industrial schools at Mimico and New Toronto. He was secretary of the Canada Law Amendment Association, and drafted the bill known as the Juvenile Offenders Act in 1886 which provided for separate trials for juveniles.

He was born in Brockville where he attended grammar school.

DEATH OF KING ALBERT I.

The tragic death of Albert, King of the Belgians, is a shock to the entire world — that the King should die alone on a rocky mountainside thirty-five miles from Brussels. Climbing had been one of his sports and a frost-loosened rock gave way and sent him to his death.

King Albert First of Belgium was one of the most colorful figures in modern history. His chance came in 1914 when he bore the onslaught of the German hordes breaking through Belgium to overcome France in the first flush of the Great War. Throughout the war and since then he remained the popular hero of his people and of the world which had been in arms together for the four hard years of the war.

His country's actions in the war will live in history forever, and become a legend like that of the heroic three hundred Athenians who died at the pass of Thermopylea and held back the Persian hordes long enough to give Athens time to be saved.

The monarchy stands firm in Belgium. That is no wonder when a monarchy is so sane and so much a part of the national life as it is in Belgium. King Albert cannot be placed in the same category with some monarchs who lost their thrones. The King of the Belgians was the servant of his people even more than any minister of the crown.

The world likes a man of prowess, a man without guile. That demand Albert filled.

Britain, France, and other nations can never forget this great leader. His passing is so tragic.

Perhaps his love for athletics had something to do with his open nature. He was a tennis player, an athlete of distinction, a mountain climber and a daring flier. No country could demand more of a man than he gave them, leadership, honesty, examples of bravery, open-heartedness, lack of guile, idealism and self-sacrifice.

Men like Albert keep the kingship pure and clean. They live in the generations-to-be by their influence.

PRICE INDEX

Commodities are rising in price according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. For the sixth successive week grain was recorded for the week ending February 10. The official index based on 567 commodities moved up about 2.3 per cent. in January over December to reach the highest point since November 1932. The standing on the 1926 base was 70.6 compared with 69.0 in December. The gain in 172 commodities as contrasted with a decline in 54 indicates the predominant character of the advance, notes the Bureau. Each of the eight principal groups except chemicals participated in the increases.

In many quarters there is a feeling that the world is in for a period of increasing cost of living, one of the inevitable results of improvement. The fact is very clearly accepted that there has been a period in which products such as meats and so forth were sold far below the cost of production.

If this price advance goes hand in hand with general improvement, even though it be the first to move it will start money afloat—which is the only means of improvement. Frozen credit has cost the world too dearly for too long already. The climb of the price of foods, it is hoped, will not be too far in advance of general improvement, lest it make it more difficult for some to subsist. With credit free, however, every man goes to work and is able to contribute to prosperity and the general welfare.

That is what all men want.

RAILWAY IMPROVEMENT

The recent news here that there has been a steady improvement in the activities on the Canadian National Railways was news of a kind certain to stimulate hope. Railways have for several years been indicating a depressed condition but with a picking-up of business hope is generated because of what the railways have meant and still mean to Belleville.

Business is better, according to the general opinion and it is thought by many an ideal time in which to buy.

Carloadings were recently higher than a year ago and both railways tell of increased earnings and reduced costs of operation.

It would seem that the sign which is apparent elsewhere is also apparent in this division.

General pick-up should mean accelerating increase in trade for the railways. When the movement gets fully under way, a heavy movement is to be expected by rail.

There are certain things in which mediocrity is not to be endured, such as poetry, music, painting, and public speaking. —Bruyere.

SELF-EXPRESSION

How crudely this basket is woven,
How faulty its shape and design;
Yet its maker, long dead and forgotten,
Found joy in each color and line!

Its touch, as it grew in his fingers,
The old tribal story it told
Awoke something vital and tender
In his heart, where all else had grown cold.

Its legend of maiden and sun-god,
The tale of a race in Earth's youth,
He has woven here, crudely but strongly,
And his work has the warrant of truth.

There was pride in his breast as he wrought it
And lofty the thoughts in the mind,
Of that weaver, so close to the savage,
So akin to the rain and the wind!

CONFUCIUS SAID: "One picture is worth a thousand words," and in that short, crisp sentence the ancient philosopher said as much and as well as one thousand words would cover. In these days of long speeches and long articles a study of the ancient philosophers might lead to a helpful condensation, which would be easier on the ears and eyes of a long suffering populace.

OLD SOL is certainly doing his demdest these days, whenever he can get a look-in to make Old Man Winter a back number, and the occasional sunny days bring the neighbors out in flocks with smiles on their faces and with the buying urge to shed the shrouds of winter and bedeck themselves in the gay garments of spring. It can't be long now.

MANY YOUNG MEN are reaching the voting age every year, taking their place among the citizens whe elect the lawmakers and directors of the policies of this country. Young men of today are taking a serious view of their duties and responsibilities and it has been suggested by the young men themselves that a day be set apart each year when those who have reached twenty-one years be officially received and welcomed as full-fledged citizens of the state—an occasion when the duties, responsibilities and opportunities of full citizenship could be brought out forcibly in a non-partisan manner, and the new citizens made to feel that they are part and parcel of a glorious young nation with a history to be proud of and a future full of promise.

MARK TWAIN (Samuel Clemens) had a sense of humor which won him a fortune through his writings and lectures, and a second fortune after his first was swept away in a publishing business in Hartford, Connecticut. Sidelight reader sends in a sample of the Mark Twain humor at its best as follows; which like all good things will bear repitition:

> A subscriber to the Mississippi weekly edited by Mark Twain, found a spider in his newspaper one morning and wrote to enquire whether it was a sign of good or bad luck. Mark Twain replied: "Finding a spider in your paper was neither good or bad luck for you. The spider was merely looking over your paper to see which merchant is not advertising, so that he can go to that store, spin his web across the door, and live a life of undisturbed peace ever after."

NEWS BRIEFS AND ODDITIES, the first column in this newspaper, is perhaps the most popular. There is more entertainment and intelligence in this one column than in many books—and every day comes a new column of news oddities from all parts of the world. Not so many years ago the telegraph news for provincial dailies came in plate form in the baggage cars, from a day to a week old. Now it flashes into this office by electricity, writes itself on an endless roll of paper, is fed to the linotype operator, and right up to the hour of going to press the important happenings of the world are being transmitted by cable under the ocean and by many miles of wire over the land, rushing through space, never ceasing until it appears in type in your daily newspaper.

"Billy, are you married?"

"No," the little boy replied, "but I knew a man once who died."

FACTS ABOUT ENERGY MADE BY THE BODY

Knowledge of The Chemistry of Body is Important

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D, Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright, 1934, King Features Syndicate Inc.)

Protoplasm is living material. Once chemists have discovered all the elements that constitute protoplasm, the secret of life itself will have been found.

So far as is known, protein material is never absent from living substances. About three-fourths of the weight of protoplasm is usually water. Besides, various other substances, such as lecithin, a kind of fat, cholesterin, and certain inorganis salts, such as the phosphates, and chlorid of calcium sodium and potassium, occur in smaller proportions.

Protoplasm, when in the living state, is in a continuous state of change. The remarkable ability which it possesses of taking chemical substances out of the food and building itself up is known as "anabolism." The breaking down processes, which only this living material can carry on, is known as "metabolism."

There is no need trying to remember all the facts about protoplasm. Suffice it to say that if the individual has at least some knowledge about the wonderful chemistry of his own body, he is more likely to take better care of what he eats, how he works, how he thinks and, in general, how he conducts himself.

The power by means of which the body works—that is, the force through which the various organs function—may be summed up in the word "energy."

It is a well-known fact that electricity, for example, may be changed into heat and that by means of this heat food may be cooked. Electricity also may be changed into light by other forms of working energy.

In the human body food is burned, oxidized, and this creates the heat and energy that is required. Oxygen plays a predominant role in the burning of the good-stuffs and this yields the heat and energy for bodily warmth and for our various activities.

You have probably heard the term "calories" used. Technically, it refers to the amount of heat required to raise one pound of water four degrees fahrenheit.

Some foods yield more calories than others. Therefore, the important thing is not how much food we eat, but how rich the food may be in the caloric value.

The number of calories which we require for our best functioning depends somewhat upon age, occupation and climate. Younger persons require more calories since they are in process of growth and more energy is needed to build up the body. Persons who work out-of-doors and do manual labor also tend to consume more calories per day. In northern climates more heat is required to keep the body warm; therefore more calories are needed in such climate than are needed in southern ones.

Our food is made up largely of protein, fats, carbohydrates, mineral, salts and water.

Protein compounds consist mainly of carbon, hydrogen, nitrogen, and small quantities of sulphur and phosphorus. Protein is found in the form of eggs, milk, blood, cheese, and leguminous vegetables such as peas, beans and lentils.

Fats are composed of carbon, hydrogen, oxygen.

One need not figure out the exact chemical constituents of calories of each food eaten. In fact, this would be a most laborious task and would make eating quite a hardship.

Appetite is really the best guide there is. If you really crave a certain food, the chances are that it will do you good.

Dr. Bisch's Daily Diet Hint

In choosing wine as a beverage it is well to remember that it had best be taken only with meals. Whether white or red wine is used is largely a matter of preference although an epicure demands that only certain brands and colors be used with each dinner course. Wines with high alcoholic content are likely to make one heady quickly while weaker wines often are equally as pleasing and less intoxicating.

Little Benny's Note Book

I happened to look in the icebox this afternoon while our cook Nora was upstairs and what was in there but 6 hard boiled eggs on a plate all pealed and reddy to eat, being a grate looking site and me thinking, G, gosh.

Hard boiled eggs being my favorite kind of eggs and pritty near my favorite kind of food, and I went up to ma's room and she was sewing on her sewing machine, me saying, Hay, ma.

Are you ever going to learn not to address me as Hay or are you just naturelly impervious? ma said, and I said, I mean G, ma, I just saw 6 hard boiled eggs in the icebox.

That wouldn't require supernatural vision inasmuch as they're rite there in plane site, but it seems to me you've been told not to go peeping in the icebox, ma said, and I said, Anyways, ma, what do you bet I cant eat the whole 6?

You could proberly eat a whole dozen and it would make a very intristing case for the doctor, ma said, and I said, No, ma, ma, I mean what do you bet I cant eat the whole 6 without getting sick?

I'm not in a betting mood, ma said, and I said, Well, can I try it just to prove it to myself?

No, ma said, and I said, Well, then can I eat 2 of them just on genrel principals? and she said, Those eggs happen to have a perpose in life, they're intended for an egg and lettuce salad for supper and that's going to be their destination.

Well, then, gosh, ma can I have one and save you the trouble of putting any egg on my salad plate at supper. I said, and ma said, O for goodness sakes take one, you're werse than a dozen conflicting lawyers.

Wich I quick ran down and did, and at supper I found a lot of egg with my salad anyways, proving ma had either forgot or elts didn't care.

DOCTORS AND NURSES TO RECEIVE MEDALS

Toronto, Feb. 19 (CP) — When medals were presented to players by Leo Dandurand who participated in the benefit game here Feb. 14 in aid of "Ace" Irvin Bailey, injured at Boston Dec. 12 when bumped by Eddie Shore, Bruin defenceman, not all were handed out.

When the order for the medals was made five extras were included and will be presented by Bailey March 6 at Boston to the three doctors and two nurses, under whose care he was placed. Leafs and Bruins clash then in their final meeting of the year, and it is suggested by Conny Smythe, Leaf Manager, that Bailey make the presentation on the ice before the game starts. The decision rests with the recipients, however, as to whether they wish their tokens received in that manner.

Primeau Scores Two Goals as Leafs Defeat Bruins but One of Markers for Boston

Amerks, Hawks And Red Wings Win N.H.L. Games

ONE POINT NEEDED

Leafs Can Cinch Top Position in Section in Next Game

By A. E. FULFORD

Canadian Press Staff Writer

Joe Primeau, spearhead of Toronto kid line attacks is the mildest of hockey players. Effective, never drawn into rough play, he has won the Byng Trophy twice and is right up with contenders for the award this season.

But he lost his temper Saturday night, when Leafs played Boston Bruins in a National Hockey League game at Toronto. The Canadian [illegible] leaders were on top 5-3 when Primeau, in a scramble around the Toronto net, pulled the blunder hockey players have nightmares about.

Marty Barry slashed at his stick and Primeau scored on his own goal. When that happens to most hockey players they hang their heads and take the jeers of the crowds and dressing room jibes as best they can.

Primeau had other ideas. Grimly determined, he took the puck from the faceoff at centre ice, circled through Leaf territory, stick-handled around a couple of Bruins, drew Tiny Thompson out and gave the Leafs back the goal he had lost them just 40 seconds before.

The Leaf centre's "boner" and its sequel lent an unusual touch to a week-end of interesting N.H.L. hockey. Detroit Red Wings were taken into overtime by Ottawa Senators but won 2-1 and lengthened their lead at the United States' section top to three points.

Rangers Defeated

New York Rangers lost by the odd goal in three to Chicago Sunday and saw the Hawks hurdle them and take over second position, two points back of the leaders. New York Americans beat Maroons 4-2 in Montreal Saturday and edged up to within a point of Canadiens, who hold third place in the Canadian division. Habitants were the only idle team over the week-end.

[illegible]art from the amusing Primeau [illegible]dent, Charlie Conacher's scoring of two goals and Tiny Thompson's great work in the Boston net, the affair at Toronto lacked brilliance. Eddie Shore, suffering from a charley horse, made a courtesy appearance in the first two minutes and spent the rest of the evening autographing.

Conacher got his two goals in the first period and Happy Day made it 3-0 in the second before Barry and Nels Stewart counted to bring Bruins back into the picture. Dit Clapper sandwiched another Boston goal between markers by King Clancy and Red Horner in the same period, which completed the scoring but for Primeau's act.

Americans unloosed speed they have seldom shown in Montreal, when they beat Maroons and the latter could not fathom the stout New York defense. Earl Robinson sent the Gerardmen away to a goal lead in the first period but Eddie Burke evened it up in the same period and Rabbit McVeigh put the Amerks ahead near the end of the middle frame.

Russell Blinco, Maroons recruit from Windsor, presented the only Montreal threat in the third session, scoring after Bob Gracie had given the New Yorkers their third goal. Red Conn made it 4-2 in an attack with Deed Klein just before the game ended.

Splurge of Speed

[illegible] splurge of speed in the third period after two sessions of defensive hockey gave Chicago two goals in less than three minutes, all they required to beat Rangers. Johnny Gottselig got the first with the help of Johnny Sheppard and Lolo Couture and Paul Thompson worked with Doc Romnes for the second.

Earl Seibert scored Rangers only tally with less than five minutes of play remaining and Lester Patrick threw everything he had into an effort to tie it up. Charlie Gardiner kicked himself out of several exciting scrambles around his net in which it seemed sure Rangers would tally.

Little Eddie Wiseman broke up the game at Detroit with an overtime tally with four minutes of the extra playing period gone. Johnny Sorrell burned a fast one at Bill Beveridge and Wiseman was in like a hawk to snap up the rebound and drive it past the Ottawa netminder.

Herb Lewis got the first Detroit goal in the opening period, skating through the whole Ottawa team on a brilliant solo dash. Frankie Finnigan tied the game up in the third on a pass from Jerry Shannon.

Keeps Well By Using Dodd's

"I am over sixty years of age and whenever I feel my kidneys not working right I take a few Dodd's Kidney Pills and am soon all right again," says H. Stewart, 2121 Dufferin St., Toronto, Ont. My experience is, that they are the goods all right either for the kidneys or lumbago." 43

TECS IN 4TH PLACE IN INTERNATIONAL

Playoff Position For London Almost Assured Fact.

Buffalo and Syracuse spent the week-end curbing the league-leading Detroit Olympics of the International Hockey League. Buffalo jumped over Syracuse into second place by whipping Detroit Saturday night 4-1 while Syracuse was losing 7-3 to Cleveland but Syracuse crawled back over into second berth by whipping Detroit Sunday night 8-2.

In the other week-end battle London Tecumsehs took a firmer grasp in fourth position by walloping the Windsor Bulldogs 7-2. London gave the home town fans a treat by easily subduing Bulldogs, tossing in four goals in the initial period and three in the third while Windsor tallied in the first and second.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

Just exactly the calibre of hockey played in the Kingston junior O.H.A. group cannot be determined until the Queen's kids meet the locals at the arena this evening when a direct comparison can be ascertained. The local kids, after starting off rather late and then again in a quandry as to their grouping, etc., have advanced by leaps and bounds until they are now in the junior O.H.A. play-downs.

• • •

No pre-series information relating to the definite strength of the Queen's kids has been broadcast out of Kingston although pre-season information received was to the effect that Coach Wally Elmer had a sturdy team of practically young giants. The Queen's teams always did favor size when it came to picking their junior teams in past years as they virtually looked like giants when compared with local junior teams in years gone by. The local kids, despite their smallness in stature, always held their own against their larger "student" opponents and repeatedly came down in front. Skipper Thomas has gathered together a team of kids this season who have strong hearts even if they are a little under-size compared with the majority of junior teams throughout the province. Tonight the local Cubs face the acid test when drawn against Wally Elmer's Queen's kids. If the locals continue to play the excellent brand of combination they displayed against Hastings they should more than hold their own tonight. Incidentally wouldn't Roy Covert and Carl Morgan be a great help to the kids tonight? They're still eligible to play junior.

• • •

Considerable interest is being taken about the city relative to the coming Queen's-Campbellford intermediate series. Most fans are anxious to see how the Maroons will stack up against the sturdy defence of Earl McDonald, "Spike" Murphy and Kostiuk. If the Maroons could be induced to move their home game with Queen's into Belleville arena there is little doubt but that a crowd of over 1,500 would be assured. Belleville is quite central for all fans in Central and Eastern Ontario—they have drawing powers from all of North Hastings, Prince Edward, east as far as Kingston and west to Port Hope. The staging of the game in Belleville would be to the mutual advantage of all as a bumper crowd would undoubtedly jam their way into the local arena to witness such a struggle.

During the course of our comment regarding last Friday's game we did not mean to detract attention from the local intermediates as they gave their all, to the very last man, but, even their all wasn't enough as the Maroons proved much too good for the locals. It is no disgrace to be beaten by a club that played the calibre of hockey displayed by the Maroons on Friday. They made no mistakes, that's the answer. On the other hand the Dohertys never gave up hope and battled until the last ditch, but, when defeated heartily congratulated their victorious opponents.

Coach Allison's feminine B.C.I.V.S. cagers ran afoul of Lady Luck on Saturday night and bowed to the Queen's senior intercollegiate team by a 34 to 20 score. The locals were out-lucked from the time they left Belleville, it seems. They had tire trouble, motor trouble and upon their arrival at Queen's were forced to jump right into the fray. At the half-way mark Marion MacLean discovered she had been playing all evening with three frozen toes on each foot. The local girls had an excellent work-out, however, and are now anticipating a game here in the near future with the K.C.I. interscholastic team. The local interscholastic girls have one victory to their credit over the senior intercollegiate team at Queen's, having defeated them two weeks ago at Kingston.

• • •

Aurel Joliat, the little giant of Montreal Canadiens, will be under consideration next month as a candidate for the Hart Trophy, the National Hockey League's annual award to the player regarded as having been most valuable to his club. This, after basking in the reflected glory of a greater star, Howie Morenz, for ten years. In the last decade, the peerless pair of the Flying Frenchmen, Morenz and Joliat—always Morenz first—have led Canadiens to three Stanley Cup triumphs and three National League titles. Between them, they have scored close to 450 goals. They were the ranking front-line duo of hockey. But during all this time, the glory went to Morenz. The blazing speed of the Stratford Streak made him hockey's most famous figure. Three times he won the Hart trophy, twice he topped all point-makers. It was Morenz the Magnificent who played beside little Aurel Joliat and Aurel couldn't help but suffer by comparison.

THE BIG SEVEN

Hockey's big seven had a new face today with Marty Barry of Boston making his bow in a tie for last place with Paul Thompson of Chicago. Barry scored two goals and obtained one assist when Toronto Leafs defeated his team 6-4 Saturday night and moved into the select circle. Charlie Conacher of Maple Leafs returned to the game after being out with injuries and collected two goals and one assist to lengthen his lead in front of the pack.

The standing:

	G.	A.	P.
Conacher, Toronto ...	27	16	43
Boucher, Rangers	11	26	37
Primeau, Toronto ...	11	25	36
Jackson, Toronto	17	16	33
Dillon, Rangers	7	23	30
Thompson, Chicago ..	14	15	29
Barry, Boston	17	12	29

BASKETBALL

After having downed the fast Queens senior intercollegiate girl's basketball team in Kngston two weeks ago the local B. C. I. and V. S. feminine cagers dropped their second tilt with the Queens lassies by a 34 to 20 score at Kingston on Saturady night. The Allison-coached clan from Belleville were forced to take to the floor upon their arrivel in Kingston, they having been held up a considerable length of time due to motor trouble. The game was of the exhibition nature.

Staging a first half power attack, that the local girls could not stem the senior intercollegiate cagers forged to the front and enjoyed a substantial lead, when the second half opened Lead by Annie Cruji, their scoring ace, the local girls staged a belated rally but could not pull through with a victory Eugenia May and Marion MacLean were the other local point gainers. Misses Fishleigh, Kymons and Rickards were the big scorers for the winners.

The line-ups—Queens — Fishleigh 15, Kymons 9, Norton, McGinnes, Rickards 10, Naphthula, Wayling, Hympz and Mason.

B. C. I. and V. S. — Cruji 13, May 3, MacLean 5, Carman, Elliott, Symons, Juby, Scott and Smith.

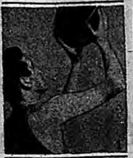
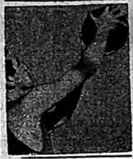
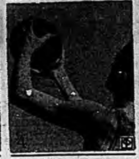
Stress Finger-Tip Control In Making Lay-Up Shot







Written For Central Press Canadian and the Ontario Intelligencer

By JACK LIPPERT

The hands, and especially the tips of the fingers, play an important part in putting the ball into the basket on the lay-up shot. Players with large hands and wide finger-spread are at a great advantage, because of the better control they can exert over the ball.

Beginners cannot, as a rule, get very good results from "finger tip control!" It is perhaps better for beginners to apply the whole hand to the ball, rather than just the finger tips. However, they will wish to develop into finger tip shooters—because the finger tips being the most sensitive part of the hand in which the sense of touch is most acute, are able to exert the finest sort of control over the ball. By a mere slight twist of the finger tips, this way or that, the reaction of the ball off the bankboard can be regulated.

It is a wise played who knows how to use this "spin" to best advantage. Some players are "spinners", that is, every ball they shoot carries an overload of spin. They spin everything they get their hands on, including passes. Players of this breed are a great nuisance. As a rule, they could be developed into very valuable members of the team, by merely restraining them in their application of spin on the ball.

The accompanying photographs show the two positions of the shooting hand on the ball for lay-up shots. Pictures No. 1 and 2 show the left hand; pictures No. 3 and 4 the right hand. In these days of improved speed in basketball, more and more players are acquiring the skill of shooting with both hands.

Pictures No. 1 and 3 give the "push" style of laying up the shot; pictures No. 2 and 4 give the "lift" style. The push style is more generally favored. Personally, I feel that it gives much better control over the ball and have always taught this style. However, if a player naturally took to the lift style and felt more at ease with it and was making goals and not missing them, I let him go his way.

Experienced players, of course, can shoot either way. They are so well conditioned in hand and arm reflexes that they unconsciously use the best style for the situation. A player leaping high into the air for a lay-up shot will generally use the push style, because of its superior accuracy. This style requires a fraction of a second more time, but in a high leap the shooter has this time at his disposal.

For a player travelling at express speed in short steps, who receives the ball as he is virtually under the basket and has to let it fly instantly, the lift style is about the only thing he can use. There is no chance for him to leap. He merely tosses the ball up from whatever position he happens to catch it. This is hardly to be regarded in the category of lay-up shots, but comes under emergency shots, about which I will write later.

3 STARS OF SATURDAY'S GAME

SELECTED BY— Charlie L. Querrie

Shoreless Bruins Shorn of Hope

The Boston Bruins, like the Austrian navy, have to get along these days without a great deal of help from Shore.

As a result the Bruins seemed somewhat at sea on Saturday night and might have been completely sunk had it not been for the goal-tending of Tiny Thompson, who stopped almost everything but the clock.

After the first period was played in three-quarter time, the production speeded up and the hockey was clean but entertaining. Especially when Joseph Primeau, the appendicitis victim, grew a trifle feverish and began scoring at both nets.

Joseph scored first for Boston. Then he skated through the Bruins to score for the Maple Leafs and (with both sides uncertain about his next move) might have continued this system until he led the league, but the final whistle put a stop to his improvising.

Happy Day won the third award with his usual dependable display, which is worth a star any night in the week.

LESSON 6

VEGETABLES

Everybody knows now-a-days that no food is more important to us than vegetables. It is a good general rule to follow, that we should eat at least one raw vegetable and two cooked vegetables every day. We need the vitamins contained in them—and the minerals. These help us to have good health. Then another thing—practically all vegetables have "roughage" that we do not digest when we eat it, but which is still very useful to our bodies; this roughage works like a broom, as it passes through our system—sweeps out the narrow tubes and passageways for us, and so helps to make us healthy and keep us so.

However, it is always more pleasant to eat something because we like it than because it is good for us. So clever people do not talk so much at the table why things should be eaten; instead, they cook vegetables, for instance, in the nicest ways possible; make them very appetizing with good sauces and other finishing touches—so that second helpings will be in real demand!

So in this lesson, we will consider the most useful ways of preparing our Canadian vegetables, and I will show you how to follow each method in the easiest way that will get good results.

It is important not to overcook vegetables, as this alters flavor, destroys food value, color and texture.

To preserve green color, cook vegetables not too closely covered. To keep vegetables white, add a few drops of lemon juice or vinegar to the water. Red vegetables, such as cabbage and beets, must not be cut too finely; beets should be cooked with skins and a short length of stem left on—and peeled after being cooked to prevent "bleeding." Lemon juice or vinegar preserves their color also.

When paring vegetables, pare as thinly as possible.

And don't overcook vegetables!

First, we will make a list of the general cooking methods—and tell how each is followed.

Note—Sauces suitable for vegetables were taught in Lesson 1.

BOILING—This is one of our commonest ways of cooking vegetables. We put the vegetable into a saucepan containing salted boiling water—one teaspoon salt for each quart of water. Many of the valuable minerals escape into the water—which is unfortunate; so when the flavor is good we save the vegetable water and use it in making soups, gravy, sauces. We don't keep the water off strong vegetables like onions, turnips, cabbage, cauliflower; in fact we sometimes use two waters for very strong onions or turnips, to get rid of some of the too-heavy flavor.

The smaller the vegetable is cut, the more vitamins, minerals and sugar we will lose into the water.

With certain utensils such as the very heavy cast aluminum pots and so-called waterless cookers, very little or no water may be used. This preserves practically all the valuable parts of the vegetable without loss. The trick in using these special pots is to have the heat very low, once the pot has been thoroughly heated and the vegetables and seasonings put into it; incidentally, we get a good flavor this way, because butter, pepper, salt, etc., are cooked right into the vegetables; there is nothing to be drained away. I advise starting the vegetable with about two tablespoons water. And if any steam is observed, lower the heat at once.

Another way to save the values and to cook the seasonings right into the vegetable, is to tie up the prepared vegetable in a big square of wet cooking parchment. This special cooking paper is very tough and can be used over and over again if it is washed off each time. Wet it, put the vegetable, butter and seasonings in the centre, gather up the edges, tie very tight and drop into boiling water—just like a plum-pudding!

And again—whatever the method, avoid over-cooking.

STEAMING—Steaming vegetables is usually better than boiling them, as there is less loss of food values. Put the prepared vegetable in the steamer, on plate or in cheesecloth, or in wet cooking parchment, set it over boiling water and cover closely.

BAKING—Vegetables which have a tough skin can be baked in it. This is a fine way to save the valuable minerals, sugar and vitamins. Sometimes the vegetable is cooked quite plainly or with just seasoning; sometimes it is stuffed.

Bake all vegetables in a moderate oven 350° to 375°.

Baked potatoes are most familiar. If they are well scrubbed and then rubbed over with bacon fat, the skins are full of flavor and good to eat—and very valuable food, too. Sweet potatoes are treated the same way. Allow 45 to 60 minutes, at 375° F.

Tomatoes and onions are good when baked. Wash tomatoes and cut out stem but do not peel them. Take off outer skins of onions. Set in a baking dish, sprinkle with salt and pepper—put a bit of butter on each onion and a little water in their dish; tomatoes do not need any added moisture. Both tomatoes and onions can be hollowed out and filled with a suitable stuffing before baking. I will mention some good fillings later.

Baking beets is a new idea and an excellent one. Do not peel, but place—tails and all—in a pan, with a half inch of hot water. Cover tightly. Slip from skins when baked. Give them a moderate oven, too.

Vegetable marrow and the various squashes are most easily cooked in the oven. We don't have to peel them just cut them open, remove the seeds, and set them in a pan (to catch juices), sprinkle with pepper and salt. I like to rub squash first with a little soft butter, or equal parts butter and molasses for a good flavour. Marrow and squash can be cut in squares, too, for baking. A section may be cut out of a marrow, seeds scooped out and a filling put in, then the wedge replaced for baking.

VEGETABLE STUFFING—Bread crumbs nicely seasoned, with salt, pepper, parsley, a little melted butter and some definite flavor such as minced onion or grated cheese, make good filling for baked vegetables. Then there are vegetable fillings—stewed or canned corn with a little chopped green pepper or onion fried first in butter; bread crumbs and canned tomato soup or highly seasoned canned tomatoes. Chopped cooked ham, veal, pork, may be added to the filling. Chicken or crab meat or other fish, mixed with cream sauce, and baked in pepper or tomato shells, makes an excellent main course for lunch or supper.

The above three methods are those generally used for vegetables. In each case, avoid over-cooking, and serve as soon as possible when done.

SPECIAL METHODS FOR COOKING VEGETABLES

Escalloped

Many vegetables, either cooked or raw, can be placed in buttered baking dish in layers—each layer covered with medium thick cream sauce. When the dish is filled put a layer of buttered crumbs on top and bake in moderate oven until the crumbs are browned on top and the vegetables (if raw) cooked. Potatoes can be dredged with seasoned flour and escalloped with just milk instead of sauce, because they will partially thicken the milk themselves. Tomatoes are done with layers of buttered crumbs, but no sauce.

Cheese adds to the food value and flavor of escalloped vegetable dishes and makes them an even better main dish for luncheon or supper. Add ¼ cup grated sharp cheese to each cup of white sauce before combining with vegetables; buttered crumbs and grated cheese should be spread over the top.

Glazed Vegetables

Sweet potatoes, parsnips, and carrots are particularly good when glazed. Boil them until tender, peel them, cut in good-sized pieces and spread in a single layer in a large enough baking dish. Pour over a thick syrup of brown sugar and water or use maple syrup or golden syrup or boiled sweetened cider; bake until brown, basting often with the syrup.

Souffles

Souffles are among the most delicate vegetable dishes. Because they are held up by eggs with air beaten into them, they must be served as soon as taken from the oven, or they will fall. For a general rule, use one cup of thick white sauce, 3 eggs and 1 cup of cooked vegetable that has been put through a sieve—you remember it in Lesson 1?—and seasoned well. Beat the egg yolks well, stir the hot sauce into them, add the vegetable, then fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites. Half fill a greased baking dish or individual dishes and cook in the steamer (protecting top with waxed paper). Or set in a larger dish containing hot water and cook in the oven at 350° F. until firm in centre. The time will be from half an hour to an hour, according to size of the dishes.

ROSLIN W. A. IS ENTERTAINED AT CARD PARTY

ROSLIN—The Roslin W.A. held a very successful euchre party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hamilton on Tuesday evening, February 13th. In spite of the fact that the roads were in very bad condition due to the snow storm the previous night there were about fifty persons present. The prize winners were ladies' Miss Lulu Colden and Mrs. W. Kerr, gentleman, Mr. W Alford and Mr. Norman Colden.

At the close of the evening a delicious lunch of sandwiches, cake, and coffee was served by the ladies of the auxiliary.

A large number attended Mr. David Miller's farm stock and implements which was held at his farm on Wednesday afternoon, February 14th.

Master Donald Sills spent the week-end with Master Walter Chisholm.

A number of homes in the neighbourhood report fruit and vegetables frozen in their cellars during the severe cold weather of the past few weeks.

On Wednesday afternoon, the teacher and pupils of the Roslin School held a Valentine Party in the school about twenty-five guests were present, and enjoyed the afternoon's programme which included songs, dialogues, recitations, contests, games, and riddles. Master Edgar Burleigh acted as chairman for the occasion.

The Valentine Postoffice was the cause of a great deal of merriment for the children. At the close of the programme, candy was served.

VALENTINE PLAY SEEN AT LIBRARY

Boys And Girls Present Inercsting Program

A charming Valentine entertainment by members of the Boy's and Girls' Department of Corby Public Library was given on Saturday morning to an audience of seventy-five small fellow-members under the direction of Miss Ethel Adams, B.A., who is in charge of that department, a Valentine play and program were arranged, the double room that contains the girls' and boys' library making an ideal little theatre.

So interested were the children in the enterprise that a dramatic club may be formed. After the performance a group of the tiniest readers shyly asked if they please might be in the next play and the other children are already keen about the idea.

Preceding the play the following interesting numbers were given:

Guitar duet—"The Kamiki March" by Marion Wilkins and Elsie Adams.

Recitation—"Hearts were made to give away", George Woodhouse.

Story—"The twelve brothers", (Grimm's Fairy Tales)— Thelma Hodges.

Guitar Trio—Dorothy Carr, Marion Wilkins and Elsie Adams.

Story—"Br'er Rabbit breaks up a Party", Ethel Adams.

Guitar solo—Joyce Woodhouse.

The play "The Rosy Path" was splendidly given, the children knowing their lines perfectly and presenting a delightful picture in their old fashioned costumes. With the book stocks pushed out of sight, red draperies used as a background and the large double doors making a curtain, the front part of the department was an ideal stage.

The play told of the Princess Floribel whose garden was a bower of beauty and Princess Rosamund who gave away all her flowers when Prince Valentine came to choose his bride, poor Princess Rosamund's last rose was stolen by the old witch but Tangry, an old man, tells the Prince that Rosamund's garden is blossomless because of her generosity. And as in all good fairy stories, they all lived happily ever after.

Miss Adams and the cast are to be congratulated for the very well done presentation.

AT THE CAPITOL
"LADY KILLER"

Starting life as a crooks' accomplice and "finger man" for a gang of crooks may not be the ideal formula for success on the screen as a motion picture star. But Jimmy Cagney, as the hero of his latest Warner Bros.' picture "Lady Killer," which has its premiere at the Capitol today, will keep patrons shrieking with laughter at his experiences, his hair-raising escapades with the police, ex-gangster friends and his former "moll" sweetheart.

[illegible] never a drag or a slow moment in a Cagney picture—motion picture fans know that by now—but the speed and pace of "Lady Killer" is enough to make the production easily the fastest and, in many ways, the most gripping of Cagney's recent dramas. "Lady Killer" is a splendid combination of the Cagney in "Public Enemy", "Taxi", "The Crowd Roars", "Picture Snatcher" and "Footlight Parade."

There's no hint, in the opening chapters of "Lady Killer", that Dan Quigley, played by Cagney, theatre usher at a Broadway cinema palace, is some day to become a Hollywood star. It's farthest from Dan's mind, too, at that time. When he loses his job as an usher, his first step seems to be taking him in the direction of the underworld. He becomes both "finger man" and arch-schemer for a gang of crooks, and their rackets include everything from housebreaking to blackmail and running a gambling speakeasy.

Then an unlucky killing makes them all fugitives from justice, and Dan Quigley makes tracks for California, only to find that the long arm of the law is waiting for him there.

It doesn't take Dan long to lose both his girl and his bankroll. When he does make his debut in the world of motion pictures—much against his better judgment—it is as an "extra." Being a convict one day, an Indian brave the next, for three dollars and a box lunch is the poorest "racket" he's ever run across [illegible] decides. [illegible] he meets Lois Underwood, charming Hollywood star, and things begin to happen.

But of course Hollywood success doesn't run any smoother than true love, though Dan Quigley has been lucky at both. His crook pals who deserted him when he was down on his luck, turn up now that he's a successful movie star to make him again a catspaw in their criminal enterprises.

The showdown that follows between Quigley and his former comrades is tense, headlong melodrama, and supplies a thrilling climax to a refreshingly different picture.

Improving as he is with each new production, James Cagney has never done anything racier or more sparkling than the hero of "Lady Killer". Mae Clarke does excellent work as the sweetheart of his shady days, and interesting Margaret Lindsay is charming and convincing as Lois Underwood.

Added short subjects include Russ Columbo in "That Goes Double", a Silly Symphony and Capitol

AT THE BELLE
"BITTER SWEET"

Noel Coward is one of the geniuses of the theatre and will be remembered on the screen for "Private Lives" and "Cavalcade"...... until the elaborate film presentation of "Bitter Sweet" ranking at the top among Coward's successes. It is the attraction at the Belle Theatre tomorrow (Tuesday) and Wednesday.

"Bitter Sweet" is sheer romance, telling the story of the deathless love of beautiful Sari for her handsome young music master. Sari was bethrothed with much pomp and ceremony to a stuffy social registerite from whom she runs away at the fifty-ninth second with the handsome but penniless fiddler, Carl.

Carl and Sari elope to Vienna, where Sari sings and Carl leads the orchestra in a gay cafe, and where the bitter mixes with the sweet when a certain dashing captain refuses to be discouraged in his attentions to the lovely Sari.

The romance is told to music, also by Noel Coward. "I'll See You Again" "Dear Little Cafe" "The Call of Life" and the Tokay drinking songs are especially featured. Ivy St. Helier, international comedienne who played the role of Manon in the New York and London productions of "Bitter Sweet" sings two beautiful numbers.

"Female" Novel Film

Ruth Chatterton will play a new and unusual role in her latest screen vehicle "Female" the companion feature offering on the same program.

The glamorous star has had a long, unique and varied list of roles in her stage and screen career.... ranging all the way from the touching, tearful, "Madame X" to the ultra sophisticated and indolent heroine of "The Rich Are Always With Us", but never before has she appeared in the guise in which "Female" will present her: an efficient big business executive at the office of the vast motor company she has inherited and governs. It is a role peculiarly well adapted to a star who combines Miss Chatterton's gifts both as comedienne and dramatic actress. A distinguished cast appears in "Female" with George Brent as leading man.

"Flying Down to Rio"

The world's first and only aerial ballet, girls dancing on thin air above Rio de Janiero, is one of the amazing and thrilling sequences in the musical extravaganza "Flying Down to Rio", to be presented for the last times at the Belle tonight (Monday). The production an elaborate one of love, melody and laughter, features a great cast headed by Dolores Del Rio, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers and Gene Raymond.

Early declines in egg prices during the week were completely recovered on Saturday at the close of trading on the Montreal Dairy and Produce Market. Cold weather light offerings and prospective limited receipts again this week were strengthening factors as the week closed. Graded shipments in carlots or less of fresh eggs brought 41c to 42c a dozen for A-large, 39c to 40c for A-medium, and 37c to 38c for A-pullets. Arrivals for the week totalled 7,185 cases, compared with 6,285 cases the previous week.

The butter market during the week touched a new high level for the winter season, selling at a top of 27 1-4c a pound for No. 1 grade in carlots or less. It closed the week at 26 3-4c to 27 1-4c a pound, compared with the previous week's close of 27c. A total of 5,097 boxes was offered for sale, as against the previous week's total of 3,175 boxes.

Current make Ontario cheese held steady to slightly firmer, selling at 10 3-4c to 11c a pound. Arrivals totalled 585 cases, compared with 866 cases the preceding week. Potatoes ended the week at $1.05 to $1.10 per 80-pound bag of Quebecs, with New Brunswick Mountains in similar quantities at $1.10 to $1.15. Prince Edward Island Mountains in 90-pound bags, sold for $1.30.

ONE BLOCK OUT ON HIS DIRECTIONS

Car Not Lost But Not Parked Where Driver Thought It Was

"A wise man is never sure." Despite our confident feeling related to our movements, sometimes we can error without realizing our mistakes.

An exited Toronto motorist rushed into the police station late Saturday afternoon with a tale of woe and assured the police his automobile had been stolen. The excited Torontonian assured the police he had left his automobile, licenced A-2409, parked on East Bridge St. about six car lengths from Front St. "The car is gone now, why I was only out of it about five minutes," bewailed the sorrowful driver.

After being assured that Mr. Car Driver was so certain as to where he had parked his automobile Constable Taylor went to the place where the car was supposed to be parked. Sure enough there was no sedan as described by the resident of Toronto. The officer then wended his way around to Campbell St., where parked just six car lengths from Front St. was the missing Toronto-owned automobile. The Queen City motorist merely being out one block in his directions.

TRAGIC DEATH

expected from Paris this afternoon. They planned to carry the French government's condolences to Queen Elizabeth and other members of the Rayal family.

The Dutch Prince Consort, Henry of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Crown Prince Gustaf Adolph of Sweden and Princess Astrid's father, Prince Carl, Duke of Vastergotland, Sweden, will attend the funeral, it was learned today.

Visivly shaken, his face drawn and haggard, Leopold stepped from his train for a brief moment shortly before last midnight when it passed the northeastern station at Brussels to shake hands silently with high government officials assembled to greet him.

Unable to speak and scarcely restraining their sobs, Leopold and Princess Astrid acknowledged with handshakes the silent homage paid them by various members of the government and the Burgomaster of Brussels.

The Prime Minister o fBelgium alone whispered a few words to the Prince and helped the Princess back into their coach. The train, carrying them home from a vacation in Switzerland interrupted by the tragedy, proceeded to the private station at Laeken castle where the most moving events of his life awaited Prince Leopold.

Springtime Lassitude Displayed by New York Stocks—Goodyear Tire Jumps Six Dollars to $134 And Some Others Make Small Advances while General Tone is Sluggish—Easing-down Tendency in Metal Shares

TORONTO MINES

TORONTO, Feb. 19.—(CP)—On active trading, the Mining Board of the Toronto Stock Exchange developed dullness before noon with prices showing a tendency to ease down.

In the Base Metal Section, Sherritt Gordon gained a cent to 1.18, Noranda at $35 was off about 10 cents, Falconbridge lost 5 ceins, and Hudson Bay 10.

Trading was slow in the big Gold Issues with Dome off 50 cents to $35.50, Lake Shore 15 cents to $45.50 Pioneer 30 cents to $12.15 and Wright Hargreaves 10 to $7.10 Bralorne showed some improvement.

Silver Stocks held to an upward trend today with few exceptions while Base Metal Shares were just holding and the golds moderately weak. Losses up to 75 cents were registered in the Senior Gold Group, Dome, Lake Shore, McIntyre and Pioneer coming out at lower prices.

Another advance in the price of silver metal stimulated interest in Mining Corporation, Nipissing, Bear Exploration and Premier. Bear advanced about 3 cents.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 19—Goodyear Tire common with a jump of 6 points to 134, provided the industrial section of the Toronto Exchange with a morning feature but the general tone was sluggish with volume small in all but Canada Cement, Canada Dredge, Nickel, Walker's and Gypsum. Canada Dredge was actively taken on an advance of 1½ to 32¼. Canada Cement sold ½ up at 11, and the preferred showed a point gain to 51.

Smelters was strong at 148, up a point but Nickel was barely steady, selling down a few cents to 23.30. C.P.R. dropped ⅛. Ford eased to 23¼ and Brazilian at 13⅝ was down ⅛.

Distillery shares opened firmly but Walker's Common dropped back before noon to 46¼ for a loss of 1½. Industrial Alcohol lost ¼ to 16½ and Distillers Seagrams was unchanged.

Listless trading at slightly lower prices in spots marked the first three hours of the industrial session. Goodyear Tire was a feature on the upside, advancing 7 points to 135 and good buying at better prices appeared also in Canada Cement and Canada Dredge.

The distillery shares eased down small fractions in Distillers Seagram and Industrial Alcohol and more than a point in Walker's common while the brewery stocks remained mainly unchanged.

WALL STREET

New York, Feb. 19 (AP)—Stocks displayed symptoms of springtime lassitude today and most of the leaders shuffled along in a trendless fashion. Bonds were again fairly firm.

Canadian equities held to a narrow range. Shares of Canadian Pacific, International Nickel and Dome were steady. On the curb Lake Shore Mines and Hiram Walker conceded fractions. Dominion Government 4s were a shade lower.

Studebaker preferred, an odd-lot issue, spurted 14 points and the common was up 1, reflecting reports of plans for reorganization and the lifting of the receivership. Pierce Arrow, Hupp Motors, Packard and Chrysler were a bit higher, but General Motors was unchanged.

WEATHER

TORONTO, Feb. 19.—(CP)—With the exception of light to moderate snowfalls over Ontario and Western Quebec the weather over the week-end has been generally fair throughout the Dominion. The weather has become much colder again over Ontario and Western Quebec while Temperatures over the Western Provinces are now moderate.

Northern Ontario—Fair and decidedly cold today and part of Tuesday, then moderating.

Ottawa and Upper St. Lawrence Valley—Strong northerly winds and colder with some snow. Tuesday—Mostly fair and quite cold.

Lake Superior—Moderate variable winds; fair and decidedly cold.

Kenora and Rainy River—Moderate winds, shifting to southerly; fair and decidedly cold; moderating by Tuesday.

Belgian King Killed on Lonely Mountain Victim of Beloved Sport

Skull Fractured When He Falls Off Steep Cliff

ALONE

Body Not Found Till Some Twelve Hours After Fatality

Brussels, Belgium, Feb. 19.—Little Belgium—a nation bowed in deepest mourning—made ready simultaneously today to bury a beloved sovereign and crown his sorrowing son.

Albert I, King of the Belgians, who met tragic death at his favorite sport, mountain-climbing, will be honored with all the solemn pomp a grieving country can bestow on Thursday.

Within twenty-four hours after the obsequies, Crown Prince Leopold will become at 32 the new king.

The Crown Prince and Princess, the former Princess Astrid of Sweden, 28 years old, rushed to the Royal Castle at Laeken from Switzerland, arriving early today.

Like Queen Elizabeth, prostrated by grief at the tragedy, they did not hear of the King's fatal fall until many hours after his body had been found early Sunday morning.

Today both the Prince and Princess remained within the castle.

The first important ceremony of the period of mourning, which will continue until after the funeral, will be the removing of the body to the royal palace in Brussels tonight.

The body will be borne on a caisson between solid walls of war veterans along the route through the city—war veterans who remember the great figure of a man six feet two inches tall who risked his life almost daily to be close to his soldiers during the trying days of the war.

Lanterns shaded with black crepe will light the mournful line of march.

Body to Lie in State.

The body will lie in state at the palace in Brussels until Thursday when it will be taken to the Saint Gudele Cathedral. Interment will be in the royal crypt at Laeken.

How the widowed, 58-year-old Queen Elizabeth—the same age as her royal husband—was holding up against the blow could not be learned today.

Since the first outburst of passionate distress in the death chamber where she knelt weeping beside the body, she has passed the time in privacy which none attempted to violate.

Only the second son, Prince Charles, was with the Queen until last midnight when Prince Leopold and his wife arrived from Abelboden, Switzerland, where they had been vacationing. Their sorrowful meeting took place in the Queen's private apartments in the palace at Laeken.

For the next three days the Crown Prince and Princess are expected to maintain privacy insofar as possible—the Princess particularly. It is unlikely that she will appear in public.

Prince Leopold will take the oath of fidelity to the constitution before a joint meeting of the Chamber and the Senate Friday. Afterward, he will be proclaimed king.

In the castle awaiting removal to Brussels, the body of the dead king lay in a bed of Rosewood, strewn with white lilacs.

Bandage Attests to Severity.

A heavy bandage around the head to a point low on the right side attested to the severity of the wound received when he fell late Saturday in a deep ravine near the village of Namur, 32 miles south of Brussels.

The face was unmarked, except for two cuts over the right eye. The lips were parted slightly. The light moustache was trimmed neatly.

All indications pointed to the fact that the king, who in death wore the olive uniform of a general, either was killed instantly in the fall or lived but a short while.

Everywhere today people were still talking almost as though they could not believe the tragedy actually had occurred.

As they recounted the story of the accident, amid a few whispered rumors that he might have met with violence, ministers of the government and authorities at Namur confirmed the manner of his death.

An official report, issued by the minister of justice, Paul-Emile Janson, bore out the story that the king left early Saturday afternoon with his valet for the Marche-Les-Dames, where he had been on climbing parties previously.

He left his valet in the automobile. Hours passed. The monarch said he would return by four. When it grew later, the frightened attendant notified officials.

Even then, however, with soldiers and peasants joining in a desperate search, it was two o'clock Sunday morning before the body, clad in a corduroy suit, was found in a deep ravine.

Rock Crumpled.

It was ascertained from an investigation of the face of the precipitous cliff that a frost-bitten rock crumbled when he grasped it and he plunged thirty-six feet. The skull was crushed.

On the streets today, many openly showed their grief as people of all classes mourned.

Some expressed surprise that the king's entourage allowed him to undertake alone such a dangerous climb—not even permitting his valet or forest wardens to assist him.

Friend of Poor

The grief of the working classes was heightened by recollections of his many kindnesses. Laborers recalled, that he never missed visiting their houses when touring the country or inspecting factories and mines.

Among thousands of people of all classes lining up at the palace in Brussels to sign a register open to all citizens eager to give testimony of their loyalty to the King and Royal family, an engineer said.

"The King never missed shaking hands with the engine driver who piloted the Royal train and several of us had the honor to assist him occasionally in piloting the engine—which was one of his hobbies—and which earned him the nickname "The King in Overalls."

The Crown Prince and Princess are both popular with the people of Belgium.

When he was only 14, the Prince, Duke of Brabant, volunteered as a common soldier in the Great War. His popularity has increased steadily through the years.

The Princess, who is expecting the birth of a third child this spring, has been well liked by all since their marriage—"A real love match," the world claimed it —in 1926.

Their two children are Princess Josephine Charlotte, 6, and Prince Baudouin 3, who will become heir to the throne.

Prince Leopold's sister, Princess Marie-Jose, was married to Prince Umberto, heir-apparent to the throne of Italy in 1930. Prince Charles, first of the three children to reach the side of the grief-stricken Queen, is 31 years old. He is a bachelor.

The Crown Princess is a niece of King Gustav of Sweden. She is a daughter of the Duke of Vaestergoetland.

At the time of their marriage, Princess Astrid was a Protestant. She joined the Roman Catholic Church of which Leopold is a member, later.

Romantic Marriage

Their romance has been pointed to frequently as paralleling the affection displayed so deeply by King Albert and Queen Elizabeth.

Linked always with the Belgians' thoughts of Albert as the soldier-saviour of his fatherland is the story of how they sacrificed and risked their lives together with their people in the war.

Then the capital was La Panne, a Flemish village, not far from the French Border. It was only five miles from the dug-in battle line, constantly rocking from the heavy shell fire, but they stuck it through together to the triumphant end.

When finally the conflict was terminated, they were side by side in a tremendous demonstration tendered them as they rode through Brussels after the armistice.

Along with these recollections today, sorrowing subjects of the royal pair dwelt with almost equal fondness on the many stories of King Albert's prowess in sports. He apparently loved to risk his life in out-of-doors adventures.

In 1928, the King narrowly escaped death or serious injury on the St. Moritz bobsled slide. One member of his party was thrown over a slope in the accident.

Then, two years later, he nearly lost his life on a mountain climbing expedition on the Dolomites. He was a great lover of horses, but was forced to give up riding several years ago. He also had been urged to cease driving his own automobile, but is significant of the spirit of the dead King that he was at the wheel himself on the trip to the scene of the mountain climbing expedition which ended fatally.

SPORT KING LOVED WELL CLAIMS LIFE

(By Smith Reavis, Associated Press Foreign Staff)

The sport he loved most of all, mountain climbing, claimed the life of King Albert of the Belgians.

At least once before, in 1930, he narrowy missed death as he scaled a high peak in the Julian Alps, near Trenton, Italy. His two guides owed their escape to his heroism.

The King, ascending Brenta Summit, 11,000 feet high, stood on a rock jutting out from the almost perpendicular side of the mountain. A guide shouted that it was giving away. King Albert moved quickly to another rock but continued to support the tumbling fragment with his breast and hands until the guides, who were below him, jumped clear. Then the King let go and the rock plunged into the valley far below.

Big, powerfully built, King Albert all his life made sports his chief hobby. Mostly they were dangerous sports such as mountain climbing, bob-sledding, skiing, horseback riding, fast automobile driving and motorcycling.

Enthusiastic as School Boy

He made annual visits to the Alpine snows of Switzerland and Italy where he wouldy engage in tobogganing and skiing with the enthusiasm of a school boy. With the glow of health in his cheeks and his rugged, six-foot-two frame vibrating with fresh energy, he would subsequently turn to his daily tasks with renewed energy.

He worked as hard as he played, rising early and seldom getting eight hours' sleep at night.

Bobsledding was also the cause of a near accident. In January, 1928, the King was in a bob-sled rushing down the steep St. Moritz run. The Earl of Northesk, who was acting as brakeman, was thrown from the sled, which careened and continued on its way, throwing the Royal passenger into a dangerous position.

Dudley De Lavigne, an English passenger, pushed himself into Lord Northesk's place, he clutched the King and dragged him into a position, which balanced the sled for the rest of the run.

"I was not standing on ceremony" De Lavigne said later.

"This was the greatest thrill I ever had; greater than in the war or even motorcycling," the King said when the run finished.

FATHERS AND SONS MEET AT TABERNACLE

A large and representative congregation gathered in the Tabernacle United Church yesterday morning for the annual Father and Sons' service. The invocation was given by Mr. R. Edmondson, leader of boys' work, while Donald Alexander read the lesson of the day.

An inspiring address was given by Harry McGuire, taking as his theme the "Four Fold Life". In striking words he told the congregation that the aim of the C.S.E.T. movement was to lead the boys to accept the ideas of Jesus, who is the way. The Rev. I. B. Naylor delivered a special message to the fathers present, regarding their duties. A large number of fathers, accompanied by their sons and other male relatives were present to assist and help carry out this annual service.

The programme will be continued tonight in the form of a social evening in the school rooms of the church.

Cincinnatians Recall Visit of King Albert

Cincinnati, O., Feb. 19.—A king who chatted with factory laborers as man to man and found great delight at the throttle of a speeding locomotive.

That was Albert I, of Belgium as recalled today by citizens of Cincinnati and Toledo, who saw him in October, 1919, hardly a year after he left the trenches from which he directed his small army against advancing hordes of the enemy.

It was the first time Cincinnati ever entertained a reigning monarch of the old world, and the only time her streets ever rang with "long live the king!"

When the special train pulled into Cincinnati, the royal party was welcomed by former Governor James M. Cox and the late Mayor John Galvin.

As King Albert stood chatting with Brand Whitlock, then United States Ambassador to Belgium, he yielded readily and with utmost good will to the requests of newspapermen and photographers. But he was interrupted by a cry, "the king's carriage!"

"Well, that's me, boys," he told the press. "I must go now."

Lost in City.

There was an awkward twenty minutes during which he was "lost" with Governor Cox when a cab driver was given the wrong instructions. This caused a tour through various side streets and under the concrete work of a viaduct, which, the king remarked, delighted him.

Some one asked Prince Leopold, who succeeds his father as ruler, if he knew anything about baseball.

"No," he replied, "but I witnessed a wonderful game called 'craps' which some of the men were playing on a train. I rather think I should fancy it myself a bit, once I had mastered it."

When his train pulled out, the King was in the cab of the locomotive and held the throttle for several miles.

"And he handled it in first class shape," observed engineer J. A. Lux.

Tired, Below Par? Try This "Hospital-Tested" Remedy

If you knew that a remedy had been scientifically tested at a hospital on 40 patients, to prove its value in correcting run-down, always tired, below par conditions, and the results had been so good that they impressed the doctor in charge of the test, wouldn't you, too, be impressed?

Such a test was recently made on that famous preparation, Dr. William's Pink Pills. At a leading Canadian hospital 40 students formed the test patients in a clinic to determine the exact amount these world-known Pills increased the haemoglobin and red blood corpuscles in the blood streams of tired out, nervously-exhausted people. (These two vital blood elements carry oxygen from the lungs and nutriment from the food to every cell in the body, and a lack of them is the cause of these run-down conditions).

In every case where the red corpuscles had been below normal at the start, there was a recorded increase after the treatment on Dr. Williams' Pink Pills—and in 95 per cent. of the cases the haemoglobin content had also improved. The patients had lost their tired-out feeling, had regained their pep and energy, and their general health was again normal.*

Are you needlessly putting up with that distressing "tired out" feeling that indicates a run-down condition? Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will benefit you as they benefitted these 40 scientifically-tested patients. This proven preparation will restore your energy, vigor and buoyant health, because it revitalizes your blood stream. You are taking no chances, as the hospital test shows. You are bound to feel stronger, revitalized and more vigorous as you take the treatment.

Start taking this proven blood-builder right away. It is equally good for children, "teen-age" girls, and adults. Your druggist has these Pills in stock—50c a package.

*Individual reports on these 40 patients, certified by the hospital pathologist, are on file.

EVANGELISTIC SERIES SERVICES IN LENT

Carolina Singers Contribute Two Numbers at Bridge Street United Church

All through Lent, services at Bridge Street Church on Sunday evenings, said Rev. Dr. James Semple last evening, will be evangelistic in character, as he opened a service in which Gospel hymns of evangelistic type were sung while he preached from the story of the Wise and Foolish Virgins.

The Carolina Singers were guest singers and rendered two numbers, "In My Own House" and "There is a Balm in Gilead" as only Southern singers can render them.

The congregation was one of the largest the church has held in years. The main portion of the auditorium was filled and the gallery largely filled when the evening service began.

In the morning Dr. Semple spoke on the Lenten theme.

28 CONFIRMED BY BISHOP AT ST. THOMAS

Rt. Rev. John Lyons Performs Ceremony of Laying on of Hands

DEDICATE TABLET

Bishop Pays Personal Tribute to Memory of Rev. Dr. J. A. Seymour

For the second time within a year, the Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne, vicar of the Church of St. Thomas, had instructed and prepared a class of candidates for presentation to have administered unto its members the rite of confirmation or "the laying on of hands" upon those that are baptized and come to years of discretion." In the church where he had guided the spiritual welfare of its congregation for several years the Rt. Rev. John Lyons, M.A., D.D., Bishop of the Diocese of Ontario, Sunday morning with the vicar vouching for their due preparedness, administered the rite of confirmation to fourteen boys and fourteen young women and girls.

Tablet Dedicated

At the close of the processional his Lordship dedicated a tablet to the memory of the late George and Isabella Benjamin, the gift of a remaining member of the Benjamin family. Bishop Lyons made reference to the long and faithful services rendered St. Thomas Church by those whose memory was honored this morning and the privilege that had been afforded him personally of knowing their family, which had so long been closely identified with the history of St. Thomas' congregation. He paid most feeling tribute to the late Frederick P. Benjamin, who so recently had passed away, and spoke of the delight in worship the deceased had ever manifested and his faithfulness to his church.

In Loving Memory of My Parents

Isabella Benjamin
Died

Pays Tribute

Previous to delivering the sermon of the morning His Lordship on behalf of the whole Anglican community in Belleville, as well as himself, paid tribute to the memory of the late Rev. (Dr.) J. A. Seymour and offered sincerest sympathy to the widow and son so sadly bereaved in his tragic passing and to all others who so deeply mourned his demise. "I take this opportunity," said His Lordship, "to pay tribute to one whose tragic death the past week has come as a shock to all members of this community, irrespective of religious affiliations. My association with him had been of brief duration, but I had found him ever a faithful minister of the gospel and a real friend in Christ. During my brief sojourn in the city, since his arrival here, I had learned to count him as a friend and I believe he reciprocated that feeling," said the Bishop.

He then further eulogized the life and work of the late Dr. Seymour. "In this expression of my own feelings I believe I am expressing the feelings of the whole Anglican community in Belleville, who share the loss of the family, of the members of the Session and the congregation of St. Andrew's Church. In their great loss, God, who alone can comfort will comfort. It is the prayer of the Universal Church that he may rest in peace," concluded Bishop Lyons, his warm, heartfelt, sincere tribute of love and esteem to the memory of a brother clergyman.

Sermon

Bishop Lyons found theme for his sermon in the 42nd. verse of the II. Chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, "And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and in prayer."

Lent was just starting, it was a time specially set aside for the consideration of spiritual things, for prayer and meditation and reflection, a time for the building up and strengthening of strong Christian character. Christ said: "I will build my church, I will be with you." "Become conscious of the presence of Christ in your church work," urged the Bishop, "have a realisation of that presence as we carry on the work of the church." Jesus Christ himself was the chief cornerstone of the church and the church stands on the doctrines of the Apostles. In reviewing the ancient church of the first century, its struggles and victories, it had been a church of accomplishments and an inspiration to us of today. "Catch the vision of Christ and build on what He taught."

Bishop Lyons developed next, his thoughts on the text chosen under four headings, steadfastness, fellowship, the breaking of bread and prayer.

Steadfastness, he urged, to the apostles' doctrine, have such knowledge of it that you will be able to give reason for your faith. Study it and meditate on it so that an unfolding strength will be yours from day to day and accumulating accrue a confidence, steadfast in doctrine as in the early church.

Fellowship is the bond and cooperation of church members in carrying on its work. That bond strengthened by fellowship between ourselves and Christ, the church's head. The "breaking of bread" was referred to at length.

Prayer is a union with God thru' Christ—a union of fellowship with His will. Prayer is a giving unto God as much as receiving from Him. There is too much, a wrong impression of prayer, too much a leaving of God out and thinking too much of self. Prayer is giving as well as receiving. Honor God and honor God's truth. The true approach in prayer requires thought and meditation before making a prayer. It is not a bending of the Father's will to our will but making ourselves subservient to God's will — attuning ourselves to Him. Prayer is a privilege, a duty we owe to God, ourselves, and our fellowmen. If we have faith in God we will pray. Realize, urged Bishop Lyons, the potency of prayer and eradicate in our hearts ill feeling against others. With forgiveness and charity practice the presence of God and meditate, get the true atmosphere of prayer. Listen and hear God speak to you."

Directly then to those about to receive "the laying on of hands" he reviewed briefly his sermon, emphasizing the four headings as applicable to them especially. The rite of confirmation was then carried out by His Lordship according to due form for administering that portion of the ritual of the Church of England.

ESTIMATE 1,500 IS DEATH TOLL

Many Claim The Death List Will be Much Greater

Vienna, Feb. 19.—The shelling of Vienna's workers' apartment houses in the Austrian civil war had found an aftermath today in a Europe-wide conflict over casualty figures.

Officially, Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss declared Sunday that 241 were slain before the four-day Socialist rebellion was put down.

To these, however, can be added without argument five Socialists, a government communique said, who were slain by Heimwehr (Home Guard bayonets yesterday and seven Socialists hanged thus far for insurrectionary activities.

Counting those, the official toll may be set at 253, but here the real argument begins.

Socialist fugitives at Bratislava, Czechoslovakia, told the Associated Press that at least 2,500 were killed. Czechoslovakian newspaper hit upon the same estimate and Chancellor Adalf Hitler of Germany said in an interview the dead would reach 1,600.

The Associated Press estimated February 15 after conversations with government officials and army officers, that the final count would range between 1,000 and 1,500.

John Philp, 60, of Sparta Believed Possessed of Obsession

SECURES GUN

Farmer Chases Wife And Son From House, When They Return

St. Thomas, Ont., Feb. 19—(CP)—Three middle-aged persons, two brothers and their sister, lay dead today at their Sparta homestead, victims apparently of an obsession that grew in the mind of the oldest.

A suspicion, that some one was trying to take his farm from him, aggravated by an unexplained series of fires in his farm, apparently prompted 60-year-old Joseph Philp to carry out a frequently-made threat, that he would shoot his brother Herbert, 55, and his sister, Florence, 58. He waited for his wife and son with a shotgun but they fled and escaped. Philp shot himself, when officers sought to apprehend him.

Police, summoned to the scene late Saturday, found Philp in the house, the muzzle of his gun sticking through a window. He did not fire as they rushed the door, but before they could get inside they heard the gun discharge. They found Philp slumped on the floor, dead, beside his sister.

For fear Philp someday might shoot them as he had threatened, his brother and sister had locked all firearms on the premises in a garage. Still, they were said not to have taken his threat very seriously.

Secures Gun From Garage

From the garage Philp broke the lock, Police said he took the gun and entered the house, confronting his sister and killing her in her room as she cringed over the bed seeking to disuade him.

Then, they said, he waited an hour for his brother, firing at him as he entered the house through a summer kitchen. Both victims were shot through the head. Philp then appeared to have continued his afternoon's work until the arrival of his wife and son. Mrs. Philp and the boy entered the house and found the body of Herbert on the floor. They screamed and Philp advanced toward them with the gun.

They opened a window and jumped out running to the home of a neighbor. Philp did not pursue them. They then raised an alarm that brought provincial police to the scene.

First Newspaper in Canada in 1752

The first newspaper in Canada was the Halifax Gazette, first published in 1752, which preceded the first printing press by one year, installed also in Halifax. Quebec City has the distinction of having the second oldest newspaper The Quebec Gazette, started 12 years later. The province of Nova Scotia has the honor of having many "first" things in Canada, some of which were the first in North America, states the Tourist Department of the Canadian National Railways. The first stationary steam engine in Canada was installed at the Albion mines in Stellarton, N. S. in 1827. The first highway in North America was that at Port Royal, now Annapolis Royal, N. S. in 1605. The first wireless station in America was at Glace Bay, N. S. in 1902.

PITCH LAKE WONDER FOUND IN 1595

Surface Resembles Great Wrinkled Tarpaulin

One of the "eight wonders of the world" is Trinidad's pitch Lake, discovered in 1595 by Sir Walter Raleigh. Its surface is like a great, wrinkled tarpaulin, 100 acres in extent. An automobile left standing on the pitch surface sinks gradually.

A pipe 160 feet long was forced into the lake in an unsuccessful attempt to find bottom. It vanished overnight and re-appeared years later, 800 feet away, gnarled and twisted. Trinidad is the southermost island touched by Canadian National liners and freighters in the West Indies service. The pitch is used extensively for highway surfacing, roofing and cementing.

HOUSE FACES BUSY SESSION

Budget For Province Likely to be Tabled This Week

Toronto, Feb. 19—(CP)—Facing their busiest week of the session, Ontario's Legislators trooped back to their desks today. Committees are scheduled for practically every day this week, and it is expected the debate on the throne speech reply will be continued late tomorrow night after the first night sitting since the provincial parliament opened.

Thursday, all being well, Premier Henry, acting as provincial treasurer, is expected to table the budget and thus pave the way for what is expected to be a heavy debate. It is understood Mr. Henry will announce the province has a surplus of $1,000 000 instead of the expected deficit, but opposition attacks will centre on unemployment expenditures which they claim have been wrongly entered in the province's books.

The fish and game committee will meet in two sections, one discussing the question of dogs being again permitted in deer hunting. Debate on this issue is expected to be as fiery as usual. On Feb. 23, the colonization committee will get down to business. The committee has invited any persons interested in the subject to appear before the members to discuss the back-to-the-land question.

STOP THAT COLD TODAY!

Tomorrow May Make It Twice as Difficult to Relieve!

THE time to stop a cold is before it gets a hold!

Remember, a cold is an internal infection and, as such, calls for internal treatment. Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine is what a cold requires. It is expressly a cold remedy. It is internal and direct. It does the four things necessary. First, it opens the bowels. Second, it combats the cold germs in the system and reduces the fever. Third, it relieves the headache and grippy feeling. Fourth, it tones the entire system and fortifies against further attack. Anything less than that is taking chances.

Her interest turned to Doug and she found herself more curious than she would have admitted to see what he was putting upon the canvas—wondering if he really had talent. Suppose he were really a great artist—would be famous some day? She'd often heard that models were nothing to artists but just models. Human forms to be put on canvas. Doug certainly seemed to be paying no attention to the woman, personally. He seemed completely absorbed in the canvas.

Soon Charity found herself sitting down on a window box and watching the artist and his model with an entirely different feeling. All antagonism had left her. In all fairness, if art was to be Doug's profession, it was none of her business. His father had opposed it. But after all, a man had to choose his own job if he were to take life seriously and try to make good.

[illegible]ly Charity made up her mind to [illegible] nothing at all to Doug about bringing his models to pose under her very windows. He hadn't sneaked about it, and that was something. And if he were deliberately trying to shock her into leaving his rooftree in high dudgeon, she wouldn't give him the satisfaction of laughing behind her back.

She wondered what Doug would say to her when they met again. Would he apologize for Yanner's rudeness of the evening before—or would he ignore it? Perhaps he thought it quite all right for his girl friend to make his wife the butt of her biting jealous humor. That was another thing she decided to ignore. She'd act as though nothing had happened. As though Yanner Vandergriff were too far beneath her contempt to be discussed. It might have been a scheme both of them had cooked up to get her goat! To force her into a divorce.

Then Charity thought of Thornton Batchelor and her hands went to her cheeks, which suddenly flamed. Down in her heart she knew she should be furiously angry—as she had been when he kissed her. It worried her a little that she had decided she didn't hate him for it—after all. What was happening to her? Could it be possible that finding herself suddenly rich was going to change her? To break down the ideals she'd held so important all through their life. Batch had said that it didn't matter what one did—if one had enough money to get away with it.

[illegible] was an entirely new sensation to Charity— feeling that she had that something that attracted men. Surely she must have. Else why should a man as handsome and popular as Dr. Batchelor invite her to his apartment and try to force his kisses on her?

Then suddenly a thought flashed through Charity's mind—and all her air castles came tumbling down with a terrific crash. Perhaps men would pursue her now because she was one of the richest women in New York. Had that been Batch's reason for kissing her? It sent a little pain of disappointment stabbing through her heart. Perhaps she'd never again know who her real friends were.

Suddenly she found herself hating Thornton Batchelor with a white fury. He was just a grasping fortune hunter. That was the greatest blow her pride had ever had.

Charity almost forgot Doug and his lady friend in his fury at Batch. When she remembered and looked out again they had gone. She glanced wearily at her clock and discovered it was almost dinner time. She had decided to slip into a negligee and have dinner served in her suite when a knock came on the door.

She was surprised into blushing when she called, "Come in" and saw that it was Doug. He was dressed for dinner, and she though she had never seen him look so handsome. He actually gave her a friendly [illegible] as he walked in and threw himself on a divan.

CHAPTER TEN.

"Nice place you have here, madame." Doug grinned and looked around. "Quite a seductive layout."

Charity sat down feeling awkward and ill at ease. "Isn't it?"

"I've been working this afternoon — on your balcony." Doug offered sociably. "Painting Chickie Belle, the dancer—against that big palm out there."

Charity swallowed and was silent. She couldn't think of anything to say. Doug looked at her closely and saw the red slowly stain her white cheeks. Suddenly he laughed. "What time did you come in?"

"I—don't know exactly," she evaded miserably.

He grinned. "You—were here all the time I was painting, weren't you?"

With a desperate effort Charity tried to sound indifferent "I —don't think so. I noticed you were at work. What of it?"

Doug could not resist a desire to tease her. He raised his eyebrows mockingly. "Mrs. Temple! You meant to say you sat here calmly while naked women cavorted over the place—and thought nothing of it."

It made Charity angry that he expected her to be narrow-minded. She glared at him. "I'm sure if painting is what you choose for your life's work it's none of my business. I don't care if there are so many models around the place I stumble over them. At least—you are doing something."

"You're a— damn good sport," Doug said slowly, and an entirely new Doug showed himself. She stared at him, too astonished to answer. He leaned toward her boyishly.

"I say, Charity, there's no use in our being at each others throats like a couple of wild cats all the time. Just because Dad got us into this—business. I'm sorry I've been so rotten to you. And you've got to believe I'm mortified to death over wha happened last night. I hadn't any idea that bunch was coming."

"I believe you, Doug." Charity said quietly, her face reddening again. It was the first time she had called her husband by his first name. "I—I think we should try to be—friends, too. If for no other reason than that your father wished it."

"You're right," he nodded gravely.

They sat silent for a minute. Suddenly Doug jumped up. "I'll get out and give you a chance to get dressed for dinner."

"I'll see you in the library," Charity smiled. It was the first natural half-happy smile she had ever given him.

"Say," Doug looked surprised "your teeth look like dry goods—they're so even. Like pearls. Smile again sometime, won't you?"

Charity tried to. But it was a self-conscious grin. Doug turned at the door. "By the way—I've invited a bunch of the show crowd out to Templehaven for the week-end. If this hot spell keeps up the beach should be great."

Doug hoped desperately Charity would say she didn't care to go. She hesitated a moment before she answered, "That'll be nice. I'll have to pick up some bathing things."

Doug left the room with a sinking sensation. It would be awful—mixing Charity with that gang. They'd make mincemeat of her. He must have been crazy to have suggested such a thing.

Charity too was worried. She dreaded the idea of playing hostess to a crowd of sophisticated Broadwayites more than anything she'd ever dreaded since her marriage. But she told herself it was her duty. Doug's father had given her half his fortune to help protect Doug from just such women—and she meant to do her duty.

The week was an uneventful one for Charity. Doug obviously tried to be decent when they met at lunch or dinner. But evenings he dashed away and there was little doubt that he was with Yanner.

Time dragged heavily on Charitys hands. There were times when she wished desperately that she could go back to work at her old desk.

She bought bathing things and a new evening gown in anticipation of the week-end. Friday evening she asked Rafferty to drive her down to Templehaven and left word for Doug that she would see him there. It was like late June, and as Templehaven came in sight she could not see the beach and Long Island Sound for the foliage. Spring flowers were blooming riotiously everywhere, enchantingly lovely.

Charity jumped out of the car happily, and Mrs. Muggins come out of the house, smiling over her glasses in greeting.

"Oh, it's beautiful," Charity said, surprising the old housekeeper with a quick, happy hug. Then she threw herself into the porch swing. Mrs. Muggns sat down nearby on a chair.

"I imagine you've been pretty busy getting ready for the party." Charity said.

Mrs. Muggins nodded. "Yes, but I like life around the place. We'll have it, too. Mr. Temple said to prepare for about twenty guests."

"You're not going to do all that work yourself?" Charity asked sympathetically.

"No indeed. Mr. Temple is sending the butler out from town, and two maids."

Charity squirmed. It was embarrassing, not knowing what plans had been made—having Doug take everything off her hands as though she were incapable of planning for his friends. Mrs. Muggins noticed Charity's embarrassment and got up briskly. "My, I'd forgotten all about your supper! You're probably hungry."

"Well, I ate before I left," Charity admitted, "but this air does give me a bit of an appetite."

"I'l have a bite for you in no time."

"Have you eaten "

"Not yet."

"Then," Charity said generously, "Let's eat together."

Mrs. Muggins' blue eyes twinkled. "Indeed we will child. You're invited to have supper with me in my cottage. But—don't tell a soul."

"I'll tell the world." Charity smiled gailey, "I'm honored."

They walked around the house to the housekeeper's cottage. It was a little white house with green shutters, almost entirely hidden by trees. Charity's eyes filled when they walked inside.

"It—it's like home," she choked with homesickness. "You—you've even got bluebirds on your wallpaper. I—I love w-wallpaper."

Mrs. Muggins busied herself getting supper and pretended not to notice that Charity wanted very much to cry. Her sympathetic old heart ached that one so young and so rich could be so unhappy.

Charity sat down in a low rocker and closed her eyes, listening to the singing of the kettle. She was almost asleep when Mrs. Muggins said gently, "Come dear. There is not much. But I guess we can get along."

There were Boston baked beans from an old earthenware pot, brown bread, apple pie with rich yellow cheese, milk in tall green glasses. Charity sighed luxuriously. "I wouldn't have missed this for the world."

Mrs. Muggins did not try to make conversation. Charity seemed to be reveling in the peace and quietness and hominess of the place. When they finished the last crumb was gone.

"I hate to go back to that big house alone after this," Charity said wistfully.

"You don't need to, child," Mrs. Muggins smiled. "I've a nice big feather bed that hasn't had a visitor in—I don't know when."

Charity made no attempt to hide the tears that came to her eyes then.

"You—you're so good to me," she choked childishly. "I—I don't know how to thank you."

Charity slept as peacefully that night as though she had never had a care in the world. She awakened in the morning feeling entirely refreshed, then remembered that in a few hours Templehaven would be overrun with Doug's friends and felt the old unhappy discontent. However, Charity was determined not to mope or feel sorry for herself.

She spent the day wandering about the place and lying on the beach. It was late in the afternoon when she saw a car coming down the road and recognized Rafferty with the staff of servants from the penthouse.

Charity went up to her room to change clothes. It was early for an evening gown, but she didn't care enough for clothes to want to spend much time dressing. So she got into the inevitable blue gown, combed her hair back in the inevitable bun at the back of her neck, dusted rice powder over her face and neck, and went down to the library to read and wait.

She had just sat down when a car honked out front and she got up and crossed the library to pull back the curtain. She started when she saw Doug. For beside him, resplendent in a green sports suit with orange beret against her red, red hair was Chickie Belle. Evidently Doug had driven his model out.

Before Charity decided quite what to do two more cars came racing down the drive. In a panic Charity's first impulse was to run and hide when, suddenly the whole place seemed to be overrun with lovely ladies and their male escorts. The girls all seemed to rush for Doug at once, throwing their arms around his neck and kissing him.

With a mighty effort Charity walked stiffly through the hall and appeared at the door. For a moment Doug did not see her. When he did, he turned to her with the most natural smile he could muster.

Charity was paralyzed going through the introductions. In a daze she recognized names of some of Broadway's best known lights. One girl seemed more lovely than the next. Suddenly she realized that she was a dub among them. That her blue evening gown was miserably unattractive. Doug must see it too, she was certain.

Charity could feel the surprise of Doug's friends. It seemed impossible to them that he could have married a girl like Charity Jones. If the earth had opened up and swallowed her up she would have been grateful. Then suddenly the porch seemed to be vacant; the servants were taking up the baggage and assigning the guests to their rooms.

Charity's face burned hotly. She sat down on a divan more confused than she had ever been in her life. She was certain she'd have to escape. She simply could not go through with it.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

Suddenly another car came whizzing down the drive. Charity sat up with a start. She saw when the machine came to a stop with grinding brakes that it was a girl. She stood up uncertainly as the girl jumped out of the car, and seemed to leap to the porch.

"How do you do," Charity said, trying to smile a welcome.

"Hi there, yourself," the girl grinned and Charity saw that she was tall, beautiful and red-headed. "And who might you be?"

"I—I'm Mrs. Temple," Charity said, woodenly.

Suddenly the girl threw herself at her and gave her a hug, which almost cracked her ribs:

"Hello, darlin'! So, you're the bride. I'm Billie Miller."

TARZAN AT THE EARTH'S CORE

(Metropolitan Newspaper Service) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

© 1934, by Edgar Rice Burroughs, Inc. All rights reserved.
1-1

Through the midnight jungle in an unknown corner of darkest Africa, a savage, tawny lion moved silently. The great beast slunk cautiously among the shadows, avoiding the moonlit open spaces. With every muscle ready for action, head lowered and flattened, tail switching noiselessly from side to side, Numa's yellow-green eyes stared straight ahead, intently watching the strange thing it was stalking.

A hundred paces ahead, unaware of the danger lurking behind it, the lion's intended prey paused an instant to listen. Then it resumed its way through the dense jungle. Had you been watching from the trees you would have seen that it walked erect upon two feet; you would have admired its splendid muscular body and its handsome, masculine features. At first glance you would have believed the figure to be a man's. But WAS this thing a man?

Could you have swung, like Tarzan, undiscovered through the trees, nearer to this creature, you would scarcely have believed your eyes! Its powerful arms tapered to slender hands having thumbs almost as long as fingers. Its big toe protruded at right angles from each foot. But strangest of all, from beneath the black piece of fur covering its waist, there hung a long, hairless, white tail.

This sleek, fair skinned creature carried a stout club. A short, shethed knife was suspended from a shoulder belt. Another belt, supporting a pouch hanging at its right hip and the loin cloth, glittered in the moonlight as though encrusted with virgin gold. A huge buckle that clasped the belt sparkled with many precious stones. Closer and closer crept Numa, the lion, to his intended victim.

Impressive Last Rites Paid Late Dr. Seymour, Church and City Mourn

Solemn Obsequies at St Andrew's Presbyterian Church

SERVICE SIMPLE

Moderator, Rev. S. M. Scott of Picton Conducts Funeral Service

In the solemn service which was held at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church on Saturday afternoon at the last rites for the late Rev. J. A. Seymour, M.A., S.T.D., pastor of the church who had been so suddenly and tragically called, the congregation, the Presbytery, and the community as well as citizens found expression for the sorrow and sense of shock which the loss of the minister had stirred. All branches of the church's activities, the Presbytery, the General Assembly, the ministerial organization of the city and district, Christian organizations, the Ontario Prohibition Union and that large number of citizens of all ranks and creeds who had known Dr. Seymour in life and in his work, paid their last farewell tribute.

All Saturday morning and in the afternoon until a short time before the service began, friends passed before the casket and gazed for the last time upon the face of their beloved pastor. The body lay in state before the choir loft, some distance from the black-and-purple-draped pulpit and before a profusion of flowers contributed by organizations and friends.

The service was simple in keeping with the wishes of the family, no hymns were sung, and there was no choir but the solemn and deeply touching music of the organ, the crowded church and the sadness of the congregation provided the impressive setting.

All Creeds Join in Sympathy

All creeds joined in the farewell. From St. Michael's Catholic Academy floated at half staff a flag to mark a neighboring congregation's sorrow and regret. From the church platform were read those testimonies which told of the universal sympathy sent by pastors of Protestant and Catholic congregations in evidence of the sorrow of their congregations to the bereaved people of St. Andrew's.

And then at the close of the service when the final rites had taken place in St. Andrew's as the cortege began its long way to the cemetery, the bell in the tower of Bridge Street United Church solemnly marked the passing of the late minister from the earthly scene as it slowly tolled the moments away while the cortege moved on.

Those to whom the late pastor had ministered were deeply affected in the funeral service.

Before the service began, the organist, Mr. W. E. Wheatley, played softly the Adagio from the "Sonata Pathetique" by Beethoven, and Sibelius' "Finlandia." Seated in the choir loft were members of the ministry and in front pews the pall bearers, honorary pall bearers, the members of the Belleville Ministerial Association, the Sunday School members, students and staff of the Ontario School for the Deaf, and the mourners.

Rev. S. M. Scott, of Picton, Moderator of the Presbytery of Kingston, presided over the funeral service which opened with the words "The Lord is Our Refuge" followed by prayer. Rev. Dr. J. W. Steven, of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church Kingston, read the Scripture lesson, the 23rd. Psalm and the passage from the Gospel of St. John "Let Not Your Heart be Troubled." Prayer was offered by the Rev. W. G. Cameron of Deseronto, and Rev. W. E. Kelley of Trenton.

"Thou Shalt be Missed"

The moderator spoke at some length on the story of David and Jonathan, "Tomorrow thou shalt be missed, because thy seat shall be empty." Jonathan, said the minister was willing to be separated from David for David's own good. Two days later they met in affection and after that never again. "There is a peculiar significance and appropriateness today in these words," the Moderator noted. "Suddenly indeed was the summons from on high to our beloved brother to leave us. It shows that none of us have a lease upon life. How truly it can be said as it was said of David, "Tomorrow thou shalt be missed, because thy seat shall be empty."

Dr. Seymour will be missed by the home, the church and the community. Yet man can say if his faith means anything "Our separation is but one of time and sense. We believe in the communion of saints. We have Christ's own assurance that where He is there His servants be. Our brother shall be missed among his own people in this congregation."

The moderator had spoken at the induction of Dr. Seymour just four years and eleven months ago on that happy occasion of making of friendships and now spoke at the funeral, marking the severance of the happy relations of minister and people. The moderator continued:

"Dr. Seymour occupied a very large place in the affection of his people (and it was by no means confined to the limitation of a congregation no matter how large it might be) and of the community at large. Indeed he will be missed by the congregation from the pulpit, in the kirk session, in your homes, where he was privileged to reflect into your hearts something of the life and grace of God. True God removes His servant but still we feel the sudden shock. Dr. Seymour will be sadly missed by all those who knew him as a channel of Christian usefulness in their lives.

Presbytery's Loss

"He will be missed in the Presbytery. He came among us a master of wide scholarship and devotion in Australia where he had been the moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, the highest position in the church's gift. Very quickly he had become a valuable member of that court—not only because of his sympathy but because of his wisdom. So one feels the urge to raise the question—Why should one such as he in the full powers of his promise be taken, if we would dare utter our thoughts?"

The moderator said there were two ways man might answer this—either in rebellion and despair in heart or on the other hand by a more glorious faith. Today in the latter answer we find peace. Go thy way we say, despite our breaking hearts for the Lord, we believe, hath sent thee away.

"Finite creatures we are and tho' much work is to be done, yet if as we believe He has willed it we are sure of this—his work on earth is done. We find this answer because God, the Father of His children, needs him for a greater or higher service.

Bend Not Broken by Death

"An intense love cannot be holden of earthly things can never be broken by death. His work among men is not at an end because God has placed His hand upon him and because a man's personality goes on and on in influence.

"The bereaved we commend to the infinite love of Him who hath now seen fit to taken back the life into Himself. "If he could speak he would say 'Be ye also ready'."

The moderator closed with the lines of the hymn

"Sleep on, beloved, sleep and take thy rest;
Lay down thy head upon thy Saviour's breast:
We loved thee well, but Jesus loves thee best,
Good night."

Condolences

Messages of condolence had been received by the congregation from the congregations of Bridge Street United Church, Victoria Avenue Baptist Church, the Ministerial Association, the Salvation Army, the Rev. Dr. R. G. Stewart, of Toronto, former pastor of St. Andrew's and from Monsignor J. F. Nicholson, V.G., pastor of St. Michael's congregation, Belleville. These will be answered by the Session, said the moderator.

In announcing that the church would be closed for the week after the Sunday morning service, in memory of the late minister, the Moderator exhorted the people that while they had not the privileges of the church they should commend themselves to private devotion and that out of their hearts might go thanks to God for the work which had been carried on and prayers that the work might continue.

The sermon was delivered by the Rev. Dr. J. W. MacNamara, clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada. "The tragic passing of Dr. Seymour" he declared, "is a loss to St. Andrew's and to the Presbytery of Kingston, and the city of Belleville, but to the whole Presbyterian Church in Canada and beyond that to the great worldwide cause of Jesus Christ.

"Dr. Seymour's work was not confined to St. Andrew's nor to the Presbyterian Church in Canada, but he was attracted to every good cause; everything in the upbuilding of men and the extension of the Kingdom of God in the world.

His Work in Australia

"Dr. Seymour had fine qualities of mind, and experience in the service of the church. Those who knew him were looking forward to a great service in the church. I first met Dr. Seymour in 1926 when he was a delegate from Australia and when he supplied in Guelph for three months. In 1928 when he decided to take up work in Canada, the Presbytery of Adelaide, Australia, passed a remarkable resolution in honor of Dr. Seymour. In 1918 he had been made moderator of General Assembly of the church in Australia. He was engaged there for several years on the work of church extension, and was instrumental in opening up missions and performing foundation work. He was deeply interested in education, and founded two colleges in Australia and was a lecturer on church history in one of them.

"So when he came back to Canada we were looking forward to bringing him into service. He was not one who put himself forward. Last June he was at Peterborough made a member of the Board of Administration and later placed on the Budget Committee. We had hope that in time the church would reap the full harvest of his wisdom and devotion.

"Dr. Seymour was a Christian gentleman in every sense of the term—no higher encomium could be paid him. His work here is done, but the work must go on. So we appeal to the people and friends to carry on. There must be volunteers to come forward and hear the call of Christ. So we remember our brother—we deeply deplore his passing and we earnestly pray that his work and memory may not be forgotten."

At the Cemetery

At the close of the service while the body was being removed from the church the organist played "Going Home" by Dvorak and the Dead March.

Many joined the cortege which proceeded to the Belleville Cemetery where Rev. W. M. Rochester, D.D., of Toronto, representing the General Assembly said the committal prayers.

The bearers were Messrs. W. J Campbell, I. L. Moore and James Cokers, representing the Session; C. Delisle, Arthur McGie and George A. Reid, representing the Board of Managers. The honorary pall bearers were Rev. J. W. MacNamara, D.D., and Rev. W. M. Rochester, D.D., representing the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada; Rev. Harold B. Neal and Rev. Robert Hall, the Ministerial Association; Rev. C. E. Kidd of Gananoque, and W. Y. Fairbairn, the Presbytery.

Rev. Dr. A. J. Irwin, secretary of the Ontario Prohibition Union, was in attendance at the funeral.

The Y.M.C.A. was represented by G. B. Smith, P. C. MacLaurin and B. F. Jennings, J. B. Findlay, recording secretary, and J. E. Shortt, general secretary.

Brussels Becomes Mecca for Mourning as Body of King Albert Lies in State

Thousands Pour Into Chapel For One Last Fond Look

SOME DISSENTERS

Crown Prince Walks 3 Miles Behind Casket of Father

(By Albert W. Wilson, Associated Press Foreign Staff)

Brussels, Feb. 20 (AP)—Brussels became a mecca for the mourning today.

By the thousands, sorrowing subjects of Albert I, King of the Belgians, poured into the black-draped capital and to the palace, where lay the body of the monarch, who fell to his death, while mountain climbing Saturday.

At the bier to which the body was borne in the funeral light of torches last night, all knelt in humble homage. Persons of all ages and social circumstance they were —forming a silent, sober line outside the palace to be marshalled in by police for a last glimpse of one they knew as the "Knightly King."

The palace will be open for the same purpose Wednesday. On Thursday, the body is to be removed to the old cathedral of Saint Cudule for the funeral services. Burial will be in the Royal Crypt at Laeken.

Queen Elisabeth, broken by grief, visited alone the body of her beloved husband, shortly before it was removed from the Royal Chateau at Laeken in the gathering dusk.

Son Walked Behind

The 32-year-old Crown Prince Leopold, who Friday will become King Leopold III, walked behind the gun carriage, which bore the body of his father along the three-mile route to the palace in Brussels.

After the procession had left the Chateau between massed, silent thousands, automobiles carried the widowed Queen and her entourage ahead to await the body at the palace.

Before viewing the body, the bereaved Queen had been able to exert sufficient self control to receive personally some of the visitors, who came to offer condolences. Among these were the Grand Duchess of Luxemburg and her consort, and Premier Gaston Doumergue of France.

Afterward she retired to kneel in prayer beside the dead King, persons close to the Royal family revealed today. "It is the last time I can see him for this evening; I must surrender his body to the nation he loved," the Queen was said to have sobbed to her ladies-in-waiting as she left the room.

Shortly before the mile-and-a-half-long procession left Laeken, parliament in Brussels met for touching demonstrations of devotion.

The meeting in the Chamber of Deputies was marred, however, by the action of a half-dozen Communists and Flemish Separatists. Just before the Prime Minister, Count De Charles Brocqueville, rose to deliver a speech formally notifying the members of the tragedy, the dissenters walked out of the Chamber.

The Communists recently called upon workers to refuse to recognize the future King Leopold III, but other political factions failed to respond.

Good Wishes For Heir

Count De Brocqueville, who concluded by voicing the good-wishes of both houses for the heir to the Throne said that "by the grandeur of the events and difficulties he (King Albert) encountered, he will live in history as the soldier King, who faithfully to the end served his oath to maintain the National independence and territorial integrity of his country."

An estimated 100,000 persons — pressed along the streets behind Veterans' organizations — bowed heads in final tribute as the black-draped caisson carried the body to the palace.

Before the coffin slowly rode a cavalry detachment carrying flaming torches. The veiling of the street lamps added to the sombre scene. Behind the gun carriage slowly walked the Crown Prince. He was accompanied by his younger brother, Prince Charles, Count of Flanders.

Then came the dignitaries of the court and the women of the Royal entourage. A squadron of police brought up the rear.

Today, while the public turned toward the bier in the palace, the list of Royalty and representatives of foreign governments grew steadily.

The Prince of Wales is expected to fly to Brussels Wednesday to represent King George V. King Boris and Prince Cyril of Bulgaria and King Carol of Rumania will attend the funeral.

Pet Doe Tags After Master in Motorcar

Kincardine, Feb. 20—John A. Campbell boasts a novel pet that tags along behind his car at 30 miles an hour as lightly as its shadow. His pet is a full grown doe.

The history of the deer's attachment to the farmer dates back to the blackberry season, 1932. Mr. Campbell found her near his house, apparently abandoned. She willingly went home with him.

Now that she is full grown she waits for him outside his door like a sentinel. When he comes out she follows him about. And when he goes for a drive in his car she lopes along beside him.

HIGHEST PRAISE

Nobility of Charecter of Late Belgian King Extolled

(By George Hambleton)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LONDON, Feb. 20.—(CP Cable) —The House of Commons with deep sincerity today adopted an address of sympathy with the Royal family, the government and the people of Belgium, in the death of King Albert of the Belgians. All parties joined in the tribute.

In King Albert, said Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, the virtues of the man became the honors of the King. "He was a fine man, a great king, and a noble citizen."

On behalf of the Labor Party Major Clement Attlee described Albert as a man who in the adversity of war displayed high courage, and constancy, and in the difficult times of peace showed wisdom and understanding.

Sir Herbert Samuel, Liberal leader, added that Albert had those qualities which were of chief value to one born to the throne—honor, courage, goodwill, judgment and untiring devotion to duty.

Britain's war-time Prime Minister, David Lloyd George, sat in the front Opposition bench. In his hand he held a sheet of notepaper as though intending to speak. But he failed to catch the Speaker's eye and the speech, if one was intended, went undelivered.

As Prime Minister's motion was declared adopted, Mr. Lloyd George returned the notepaper to his pocket.

Armed with stinging snow, fierce winds howled over the Atlantic seaboard today, menacing ships, crippling transportation and causing a disastrous fire that claimed 10 lives. The area of cold extended down into Florida where freezing temperatures were reported.

The North Atlantic Coast was pounded by gales. Coast guardsmen worked frantically to save the crew of the steamer Northern Sword, pounding to pieces on the rocks near Winthrop, Mass. off Cuttyhunk, Mass., two patrol boats took the fishing schooner Hope Leslie in tow and raced toward harbor. Ten aged women, inmates of a home for the indigent, were burned to death in Brookville, Pa. Firemen stood by helpless as the flames raged through the frame building.

(By The Canadian Press)

Under clear blue skies and bright sun all Ontario and Western Quebec today shivered under piercing northerly winds that carried temperatures down to bone-chilling levels.

Setting a record for current winter the mercury dropped to 60 below zero in Doucet in Northern Quebec, the lowest it has been in any civilized point in the Dominion since winter set in. White River in Ontario, Canada's traditional "cold spot" fell far short of the record hitting only 40 below during the night. Today the temperature there had risen above zero.

The latest Arctic wave confined itself to Ontario and the Western section of neighboring Quebec. Starting east of Kenora it sent the mercury skidding to 32 below in Cochrane and Moosonee, 34 below in Haileybury, 28 in Sault Ste. Marie and 24 in Parry Sound and Southampton.

Working down across the Central and Southern part of Ontario the frigid surge brought a chill 10 below to Toronto and Buffalo across the Border to the south. In London, Ont., 14 below was recorded and in Kingston and Ottawa, 12 below.

MANY FROZEN WATER SERVICES IN CITY

Main on South John Street Frozen First Time in 20 Years

"Hundreds" succinctly remarked Manager E. T. Austin this morning when queried regarding the probable number of frozen water services in the city.

"Hundreds and hundreds," he added in the tone of voice of a man whose ears rang and sang with the constant hammerings and buzzings of hundreds of telephone calls, and the high-pitched, excited arguments of as many citizens seeking relief and water from the useless, frozen pipes.

"Today we've got the emergency crew working on a water main, even. It froze this morning down at the end of South John Street. Five homes are without water this morning. And they will be until we can get the pipe thawed out later in the day. It's the first time that the main has frozen since it was laid down, over twenty years ago. Even at that it's five feet below the ground. And while we're trying to thaw that out with our only machine, the telephone's buzzing constantly from other residents who want service."

"Brrrr—rrrr—irg!" Shrilled the telephone.

"Yes, madam, we'll try to thaw your pipes out just as soon as we can get around to it..Name, please ......"

Chief Wm. Lynch of the local fire department is in receipt of a letter of thanks from Mr. Carl Crosby, 345 Coleman Street, this city, for the prompt and efficient manner in which the department extinguished a fire at that address a day or so ago. Information is Requested on Course

Alert officials and representatives of this city who have taken the initiative in many matters that have been commented upon and adopted by other municipalities have scored another success.

Intrigued with the possibilities of the five weeks' business course that has been arranged by the local Chamber of Commerce in collaboration with Queen's University, Kingston and inspired by the success that has followed the local effort in this matter, Swift Current, Saskatchewan Rotary Club may follow Belleville's move.

A letter was received at the local Chamber today from Mr. G. C. Thomson, president of the Swift Current Rotary Club, asking for more information regarding the course that is being offered local residents.

"How many are taking advantage of this course? Are they successful?" asks the writer.

A decided reply in the affirmative to the latter query, together with further information has been sent by the local secretary.

14 TRUCKS USED TO REMOVE SNOW

Fourteen trucks were added to the nominal list of 50 workers engaged by the department of public works today in an effort to clear the city streets of the snow banks and drifts which covered the city following the heavy snow fall on Monday. CATCHES RATS THEN DESTROYS THEM

How long does it take a rat to freeze.

Mr. Dan Boland, Dundas street, knows the answer to that one.

"Rats", he says "are the least resistant of animals. They simply can't take it in the cold weather.

Since winter started Mr. Boland with the air of an old-fashioned wire trap, has been catching the destructive rodents by the dozen each night in his hen house. When the trap is recovered in the morning, full of the squealing, tooth-gnashing animals, it is placed outside in the zero air. In twenty minutes every last one of them are lying on their backs with their feet in the air, frozen stiff.

The operation of freezing them is said by him to be the least painful method of disposing of the unwanted creatures.

THINKS REFORM NEEDED IN MATTER

"I noticed a little item in a Toronto paper regarding the demand made in some cities for restoration of the property qualification for persons elected to municipal office," stated a prominent resident of this city to a reporter this morning.

"Under the Municipal Act as at present, any person, whose name appears upon the municipal voters' list is eligible to hold office in municipal council, providing the taxes on the residence in which he resides have been paid. Under this system it would be possible for twelve men, who owned no property in the city or municipality to gain control of the administration."

"It looks senseless, and I think a reform is needed in this matter," stated the citizen.

LOBLAW TRANSPORT DITCHED NEAR CITY

No session of police court was held in Belleville on Tuesday morning and no arrests have been registered at the police station during the past 24 hours. A bicycle was found by one of the constables while making his rounds early this morning behind the old Crystal Hotel barns. The wheel is awaiting an owner at the station. No serious motor accidents were reported in this district of late, altho' a large transport owned by Loblaw's, slid in the ditch about 6 miles west of Belleville early yesterday. With the exception of a damaged cabin no great damage was reported.

ICE 36 IN. THICK IN MUSCOTE BAY

Muscote Bay, famed fishing grounds of the hungry pike and the maskinonge, favorite spot of anglers all through this section has little appeal for fishermen of the district just now. Never before has such a depth of ice been measured in that section.

Word was received here today by the local management of the store that Mr. Harold Moxam, former well known resident of Belleville will return to the city where he will take over the management of the Atlantic and Pacific grocery store on Front street. Mr. Moxam has been managing the Trenton A and P Store for some time.

Milder Tonight and Wednesday

Bitter wintry weather again held the district in its chilly grip last evening and today as a zero laden wind swept in from the north, plummeting the mercury again to a point registered at the city pump house at 19 below. Warmer weather, however, is expected to follow the present brief offering of the weather king.

Once more scenes of steaming radiators on cars and super-activity of garage towing cars was noted on the city streets. Pedestrians, bundled and muffled against the chilly blasts scanned Front Street thermometers in anxious fashion and stamped away muttering under the frosty breaths. Frozen water pipes in the city struck a new low, and fuel dealers worked until late in the evening filling the phoned in orders.

Tuesday marked the city's ninth day of below zero weather. Not since February 12 when the mercury soared to a spring-like mark of 33 above had shivering residents received a break in the weather. But it will "moderate" Wednesday according to the weatherman.

Honoring their lady guests at the annual ladies' night, the local Y's Men's Club entertained their wives and sweethearts, and the members of their successful play "Skinner's Dress Suit, last evening during their weekly luncheon. The evening saw an unique order of activities when all present appeared in "hard times" apparel, the ladies wearing house dresses and the men old clothes of the most amusing description. No special speaker was engaged for the evening but on the contrary an interesting programme, followed by a social hour of entertainment, was presented to the enjoyment of all present.

His Lordship was assisted in the ceremony by the other clergy. After handing the incumbent the Bible and a Book of Common Prayer, the Bishop bestowed on Rev. McConnell his blessing asking that God might aid the newly inducted minister in the performance of his duties. At the chancel steps, letters of Institution and License were read in obedience to the mandate of the Bishop of the diocese by the church wardens, Dr. H. H. Alger on behalf of St. John's Parish, Stirling and Mr. Edward Ketcheson on behalf of Trinity Church congregation, Frankford and then handed to Rev. McConnell. The concluding rite in the induction was the bestowing of the keys of the two churches on the rector by the minister's wardens, Mr. J. B. Belshaw of St. John's and Mr. Albert Caskey of Trinity Church.

His Lordship, in his sermon delivered to the joint congregation, did not base his discourse on a text but at the outset, explained to his people the full significance of the induction service. Continuing he outlined the conscientious duties of a congregation to their pastor and simultaneously, the duties of the pastor to the people. An interesting and striking example of perfect concord between pastor and people of which mention was made, was that of Rev. B. F. Byers of Belleville, Rev. McConnell's predecessor in the parishes of Stirling and Frankford, who remained with his combined charge for twenty-eight years laboring harmoniously in his Lord's vingard until ill health claimed him from his life's work. His Lordship struck another note, that of prayer emphasizing it as a duty and pointing out when and how we should recommend ourselves to God. Fervent prayer, he stated, constitutes a real and perfect communion of the spirit of supplicant with the Divine Spirit.

Addressing His words of wisdom to the confirmation class, the Bishop stressed the tremendous value of prayer in their lives and suggested this constant recourse to it would give the young Christians with the proper armour to enable them to consummate the fulfillment of their duties as members of the Church of God. Metaphorically speaking, his Lordship termed them fresh recruits in the army of God. Those on whom the sacred rite or the laying on of hands was bestowed were; Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Dainard; Tom Bedford; Roy Danford; Morley Tanner; George Dainard; Stanley Dainard; Fred Dainard; Jennie Dainard; Helen Morrow, Annabelle Lawrence; Frank Hendrey and Bob Coke.

The hymns were, the Processional hymn, Who is on the Lord's Side; When Wounded Sore the Stricken Heart, following the induction, What Various Hindrances we Meet; before the confirmation, Come Holy Ghost, Our Souls Inspire, which was sung kneeling and the Recessional, Unto the Hills Around Do I Lift up My Longing Eyes. Miss B. Orom of Frankford was soloist and sang feelingly "My Soul is a Thirst For God."

In the account of the recent Girl Guide activities of Friday last appearing in Monday's paper, an error occurs. The writer, who was incorrectly informed, stated that Miss McMahon was the dinner guest of Mrs. J. McC. Potts. The dinner on the contrary was given at the home of Mrs. Potts but under the supervision of Mrs. Ernest Munroe who was responsible for all the arrangements. All the ladies interested in Guide work in Stirling donated food in some form and to them goes the credit for providing the dinner for the guest.

F. J. B. Belshaw, President of the Stirling Horticultural Society and delegate to the annual convention of the Horticultural Organization of Ontario held in the King Edward Hotel, Toronto on Thursday and Friday has returned home. The convention which was held, making the twenty-eighth anniversary of the organization of the Association was attended by four hundred delegates from every section of the province. Mr. Belshaw the local delegate had the signal honor of being re-appointed Director of District No. Three of the Provincial Horticultural Association. The entire province is divided into fourteen districts and Mr. Belshaw's District No. 3 embraces the counties of Hastings, Lennox and Addington, Frontenac, Prince Edward and Leeds. Last year's President, Mr. F. Collins was presented with a ring in recognition of his splendid services. Reports submitted at the convention showed that there were 284 existing societies in Ontario, that the government grant to the Horticultural Association has been increased to $12,000 per annum, and that the financial standing of the organization was a firm one. Mr. Belshaw was on the programme and gave a splendid report of the work carried on in his district. Along with the other 12 directors Mr. Belshaw was on the reception committee and also acted as usher at the convention.

At the conclusion of the convention, a banquet was held in the Crystal Ballroom of the King Edward Hotel at which the Honorable William H. Finlayson, Minister of Lands and Forests of Ontario was guest speaker and in accordance with his portfolio based his remarks on "Reforestation."

Honourable Duncan Marshall, a man well known to many Stirling people also addressed the gathering relating, in his usual splendid style, his western experiences in reference in particular to the absence twenty years ago of trees and shrubbery and the introduction in later years of these beauties of nature to our Canadian West.

Mr. Thompson of the Ontario Department of Highways, Marmora, was a week end guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. Clinton McGee.

Miss Marion Bedford of Peterborough Normal School spent the week end at her home here.

Mr. Ivan Martin and a party of friends all of Queen's University, Kingston, were week end guests of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Martin.

Mr. John McMullen of Belleville and formerly of Sidney is visiting friends in Stirling, prior to his intended departure for the Canadian West.

OBITUARY

GILBERT T. JOHNSON

Consecon, Feb. 20 (Special) —An aged and respected resident of this village passed away Sunday last at his late residence here following an illness of sometime's duration, in the person of Gilbert T. Johnson. Born in this community 75 years ago, the son of the late Elisha and Rachael Johnson, he had lived at Consecon all his life, save for 2 years spent in the Canadian west. Mr. Johnson was a member of the Anglican church, and a man most favorably known throughout the district. He is survived by his widow, a daughter, Mrs. Roy Taylor of this village, and a son Harry, C.P.R. agent at Austin, Man. On news of the serious condition of his father, Mr. Johnson left for the home here, and is expected to arrive this ((Tuesday) noon.

Under direction of G. H. Colbey of Trenton, the funeral is to take place Wednesday afternoon. Service is to be conducted at 2 o'clock in the home by the Rev. Mr. Struthers, and remains placed in the Wellington cemetery vault.

LATE WILLIAM McCARTNEY

PICTON, Feb. 20—The death occurred at his residence Paul Street on Friday February 16th., of William McCartney in his seventy-eighth year. The late Mr. McCartney was born in Tyendinaga Township, a son of Carlton McCartney, but had lived for many years in Prince Edward County. He was for many years a successful farmer at East Lake. Since retiring thirteen years ago, he has made his home in Picton. He is survived by his wife, who before her marriage was Miss Emma Ackerman and one daughter, Mrs. Reddick of Yerexville.

The funeral took place at the family residence, Paul Street, on Monday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock with Rev. David Wren conducting the service and interment was made at Cherry Valley.

HAROLD GREEN

The funeral of the late Harold Green, who passed away in Taft, Calif., on the 11th inst., is to be held from his brother Charles' residence, 62 Octavia street, Wednesday afternoon. The late Mr. Green was conveyed to Belleville and arrived in this city at an early hour Tuesday morning.

The Meanest Thief

A nomination has been made for the city's meanest thief.

On Monday afternoon, while Mrs. Charles Belshaw, Foster Ave., made a brief excursion into a downtown store for a small purchase, her 7-months' old baby, protected by its heavy coverings in the baby buggy, slept soundly outside the store door.

During the brief interval Mrs. Belshaw was absent, an unknown thief calmly stripped the baby buggy of one of the new blankets purchased less than a week ago, and disappeared.

The blanket was one of the first purchases made by Mrs. Belshaw following payment for one of the first odd jobs her husband had secured in weeks.

LOCAL TAXI IS PERFUMED

Belleville Driver Just One Jump Ahead of Detroiters

Belleville taxi drivers are one jump ahead of Detroit's jehus, and in one matter at least they could give a few pointers. Perfuming the cabs, such as was reported from Detroit and carried under front page box heading in Monday's issue of this paper, is nothing new. At least one local cabbie has been doing it for more than a year.

The local taxi driver in an effort to stimulate trade, and leave a lingering impression in the minds of his fares, has hanging in his cab a special deodorant which spreads a pleasing aroma through the air of the cab. It is a semi-permanent fixture, readily changeable when its fragrancy has evaporated. Another Belleville cab driver airs and perfumes his machine with a perfume atomizer at least once a week.

There's nothing new under the sun.

I. STEPHENSON IS ELECTED

Defeats Miss Fleming in Bleecker Ward For School Trustee by 74

With a majority of 74 votes out of a total of 120 ballots cast in the three subdivisions of Bleecker Ward, Mr. Isaac Stephenson was elected school trustee of that ward over Miss Fleming in the election held on Monday. Miss Fleming received a total of 23 votes.

Votes by sub-divisions were:
Bleecker 12:
Mr. Stephenson 34; Miss Fleming 16.
Bleecker 13:
Mr. Stephenson 3[illegible]; Miss Fleming 4.
Bleecker 14:
Mr. Stephenson 25; Miss Fleming 3.

In spite of the fact that weather conditions threatened to cut down the number of voters at the poll, the total of ballots cast was far above the expectations of those connected with the election. It had been expected at the city hall that no more than fifteen or twenty votes would be cast at the three booths. The result was surprising, and reflected the interest attendant on the election of trustee. Cost of the election was set by Mr. Holmes, city clerk, at about $80.

INTEREST NOT LAGGING IN HASTINGS BEAUTY

Enquiries Received Each Day from United States on Subject

Canada, and particularly this immediate section of the country, may be covered under a four foot depth of snow, but interest on the other side of the border in the natural advantages of Hastings County has not lagged, judging by the numerous queries which are received at the local Chamber of Commerce from United States residents, even now when the mercury is doing tail spins and trying its best to hide from sight in the bottom of the thermometers.

All the way from Illinois, Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio and other States, even further south, the queries are being received in every mail, asking for information regarding camping sites, fishing spots and other relative information.

And in spite of the fact that the ink in the secretary's fountain pen threatens to freeze during the morning hours of the past month or so, glowing descriptions of summer time delights at Belleville and points north in the county are despatched from the office of the Chamber to those who enquire.

Letters to The Editor

Editor, Ontario Intelligencer,

In spite of the cold weather, I have been over several times to the Special Services held in the Standard Church on Coleman street, and it is wonderful to see how the interest is kept up, even though the meetings have been going now for five weeks. Last night found me there again, and a little surprised to see how the seats were being filled up. While Rev. F. C. Harris, the coloured evangelist, delivered an interesting and arousing sermon the congregation listened in wrapt attention. It was interesting too, to hear the testimonies of those who have just recently found Jesus. But this wasn't all. When the pastor, Rev. J. W. Johnston, was making the announcements he asked for a showing of hands from all who wanted the meetings to go on for one more week anyway. The response was almost unanimous. So he had to announce for another week of special effort. You should go and see for yourself.

An Attendant.

FIRE SWEEPS INFIRMARY, 10 WOMEN BURN

Widows And Daughters Of Civil War Veterans

FIREMEN HAMPERED

Below Zero Weather Freezes Nozzles, Fire Hose and Plugs

BROOKVILLE, Pa., Feb. 20.—(AP)—Ten women, widows and daughters of Civil War Veterans were burned to death in a fire that destroyed the infirmary of the Pennsylvania Memorial Home early today.

There were 15 women in the one-storey frame building, one of a group at the Institution, when the blaze started and five of them were rescued as firemen battled the flames in bitter, 18-below-zero weather.

Nine of the bodies of the ten victims were recovered from the burning embers.

Origin Undetermined

Mrs. Mary B. Hutchinson, superintendent of the Home and firemen said they were unable to find the cause of the blaze, although they asserted they thought it began some where near the centre of the building.

Mrs. Hutchinson listed these as dead: Mrs. Lena Beiley, Jenny Sowers, Mida Cronton, Martha Moore, Mary Perry, Margaret Marvin, Elizabeth Loveland, Christine Bobst, Florence Roberts, Mary Gannon.

Their ages were not immediately available, but some of them were aged, Mrs. Hutchinson said.

The home is operated by the women's relief corps of Pennsylvania, a charitable organization.

The far-below-zero temperature froze fire hose, nozzles and fire plugs and greatly hampered the work of the fire-fighters.

The firemen said the blaze had gained great headway by the time of their arrival and they found difficulty in getting close to the blazing building.

The honor places her along with Orville Wright, her husband, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd, Dr. Hugo Eckner, Harold Gatty, Wiley Post and Amelia Earhart.

ENERGETIC CLUB HOLDS MEETING

The bi-weekly meeting of the Energetic Club of Holloway Street United Church, was held on Tuesday evening, February 13th, in the church parlors.

All preparations and plans for the evening were made by club members of Group I, consisting of Littles, Oliphant, Johns and Darling. The room was tastily decorated in keeping with St. Valentine's Day.

With Mr. Little as chairman and Mrs. Oliphant as recording secretary, the meeting was opened with Hymn 286, followed by the Lord's Prayer. The devotional part of the program was an illustrated talk on Judea, very ably given by Mr. Grafton. Suitable passages of Scripture, were read by group members, on presentation of the various pictures.

A list of officers for the coming year was submitted and read by Rev. Mr. Neal. This report was unanimously accepted by all present.

This was followed by a piano duet by Misses Groves; reading by Miss Worrell; violin solo, Mr. Gordon Brown; Valentine reading, Mr. H. E. Darling; piano solo, Miss Groves. Hymn No. 345 was sung after which Mr. Neal lead in prayer.

A contest under the direction of Mr. Oliphant was enjoyed by all. The lunch hour was foretold by the matching of hearts, on each of which was revealed your fortune. Each one in turn read aloud his fortune which created much laughter. A dainty lunch was served after which "Confessions by Proxy" was heartily entered into and enjoyed by all. The meeting closed with the singing of Auld Lang Syne.

Rotary Founded 29 Years Ago Local Club Marks Occasion

Commemoration Ceremonies Led by R. Graham and O. H. Scott

Commemorating the twenty-ninth anniversary of the founding of Rotary the local club at the regular weekly gathering Monday in Hotel Quinte dived into Rotary history and sought and secured information as to Rotary activities and achievements in all parts of the world. Past President R. Earle Graham presided and Past President O. H. Scott took charge of the commemoration proceedings which took the form of a question barrage which necessitated calling in the assistance of several Past Presidents to make the answers keep pace with the questions.

Among the more important questions asked and answered were those relating to Rotary's efforts to promote international peace through good fellowship. Rotary had been active in various countries trying to prevent international disputes from ending in war, and in each instance received the most respectful attention, helped to prevent hostilities in some instances and deferred hostilities in other.

In the recent Cuban troubles Rotary acted as intermediary and had the confidence of both government and revolutionary leaders. In South America Rotary influence was actively extended to prevent or defer war and when war did break out Rotary was entrusted with the duty of looking after the prisoners of war. Rotary also intervened between China and Japan in the Shanghai disturbances, winning the confidence of both sides and being able to accomplish considerable good.

Past President Scott proved himself a mine of information on all things pertaining to International Rotary activities, and the meeting was voted one in the most interesting and beneficial ever held.

RETURNS NOT TO BE TABLED

Liquor Board Holds The Information Not in Public Interest

Toronto, Feb. 20 (CP)—Facing its longest sitting so far this session, the Ontario Legislature swung into action today and will not adjourn until around midnight, according to present plans. The Private Bills Committee is scheduled to meet this morning, with the debate on the address in reply to the Throne Speech scheduled for the afternoon and evening. Hon. W. G. Martin, Minister of Public Welfare, is "leadoff" man in the debate, and will be followed by a group of Progressive, Liberal and Conservative members. It is expected Earl Hutchinson, Lab., Kenora, will also speak before adjournment.

There seems little possibility now of the budget being presented this week. On the next debate day, Thursday, it is expected Harry C. Nixon, Progressive Leader; Dr. George A. McQuibban, House Liberal Leader, and Premier George S. Henry will wind up the debate, although there is some question regarding the possibility of holding a night session because the Premier has promised to speak at a Good Roads Association meeting that night.

Tables Motion

The session yesterday was featured by the tabling of a motion by Mr. Nixon calling for disciplinary action against Commissioners Stewart McClanaghan and J. M. McNamara of the Liquor Control Board, whom the Progressive leader claims is holding the House in contempt by refusing to table a return showing the cost of liquor stores in Brantford, Woodstock and Paris. The House has ordered the return, but was told the information was "not in the public interest."

Mr. Nixon's motion declares the Commissioners should "forthwith be dismissed from office for holding in contempt the authority of this House and in refusing to comply with the orders of this Assembly, unless the Board immediately abandons its present attitude and complies with the orders of this Assembly."

KNEES WOULD LET HER DOWN
Rheumatism for 12 Years
Here is a letter that goes to prove that even rheumatism of long standing can be relieved by the right treatment:—
"I have been a sufferer from rheumatism for some 12 to 14 years now and have foolishly taken no steps to relieve it. My particular form of rheumatism seemed to take the use out of my hands and knees. The latter would suddenly give way and let me down unless a chair or table were handy. All at once, I determined to give Kruschen Salts a trial—a bona fide trial—and now I feel a re-created being. I can scarcely believe that so short a time ago I was hobbling along with a stick."—(Mrs.) M.L.P.
Kruschen is effective against rheumatism because its six salts stimulate the liver and kidneys to regular action. When these organs are working efficiently, they rid the body of excess uric acid. And when uric acid goes, those aches and pains go, too.

MILD WEATHER ON WEST COAST

Vancouver Enjoys Mildest Winter in Past 28 Years

Although you may be worried over the fuel bills that have accumulated in your private desk this winter, and your teeth may have developed a permanent chatter with each recurrent cold wave of the present abnormal winter in this district, try and find some cold comfort in the fact that just now roses are budding in Port Neville, British Columbia and Vancouver is enjoying the mildest winter in twenty-eight years.

"Since my return to Vancouver I've been reading about some of your low temperatures around the Bay of Quinte," writes a former Belleville resident who has returned to Vancouver after a short visit spent in this city. "But up here," he continues, "we're having it all to the good. It's been the mildest winter in 28 years."

Mr. Backus forwarded a clipping taken from a recent issue of a Vancouver daily:

"Despite a drop in temperature to 32 degrees overnight, Vancouver this season has enjoyed the mildest winter in twenty-eight years, according to Mr. E. B. Shearmen of the Dominion Meteorological Bureau.

"Since the beginning of November Vancouver has experienced 130 hours of sunshine. The nearest approach to this record in that period was in 1925-26 when niety-seven hours and forty-eight minutes of sunshine were enjoyed.

"In the three month period there were only thirteen occasions when the thermometer dropped to 32 degrees or lower. The average temperature for the 1925-26 winter was 42.2 degrees, while for this year it was 42.6 degrees."

"Who says Canada hasn't variety?"

Mr. Backus is a brother of Mrs. E. T. Austin of this city.

CANADA FLAG AGAIN ISSUE IN THE HOUSE

Parliament Splits And on Motion, Matter Moved to Bottom of List

RECIPROCITY

Premier Forecasts Renewal of Negotiations to This End

Ottawa, Feb. 20 (CP)— Members of Parliament are prepared to talk about reciprocity with the United States but they are not ready to discuss a National flag for Canada. Such was the inference drawn from the disposition of two private members' resolutions last night.

Both raised old questions in the House of Commons. The reciprocity resolution was from William Duff (Lib. Antigonish-Guysboro) and declared negotiations for a reciprocal trade treaty between Canada and the United States should be pushed.

Prime Minister R. B. Bennett was the only speaker apart from Mr. Duff and he proposed to alter the resolution by making it an expression of approval of the negotiations already carried on and now being continued.

Adjournment hour cut the debate short and Mr. Bennett will continue his speech when the resolution comes up again.

The flag resolution came from C. H. Dickie (Cons. Nanaimo) and after a few speakers for and against had had their say Col. James Arthurs (Cons. Parry Sound) moved the debate adjourn but a full-dress vote was necessary to do so as opposition members wanted to continue the wrangle.

Only Nation Without Flag

In former years it was C. R. MacIntosh (Lib. North Battleford) who was the champion of a Canadian flag and yesterday he accused Mr. Dickie of "stealing his thunder." All speakers would make use of the Union Jack on any Canadian flag adopted. Mr. Dickie threw a tentative suggestion that the flag bear the Union Jack in the corner on a blue background with the Maple Leaf in the lower righthand corner.

Canada, Mr. Dickie said, was the only Dominion in the British Empire, which had not adopted a National flag. To distinguish this country from other units of the Empire a marine flag had been adopted and this was flown on Canadian legation buildings in foreign capitals.

He took a backseat to no one in his loyalty to the Empire, he said, but he thought Canada should have a flag of its own for use on all occasions.

Several Conservatives joined with Mr. Dickie and all the Liberals and Progressives in opposing the adjournment which sends the motion to the foot of the list with little prospect of its being reached again this session.

Mr. Duff's reciprocity resolution was similar to the one he introduced last session and he spoke of the natural trend of trade being north and south on this continent were it not hampered by tariff walls. He admitted the time was inopportune for a discussion last session but felt this was a better time. Mr. Bennett said the government had carried on negotiations with the United States since his visit to President Roosevelt last April. Canada was ready to enter into a bargain with the United States but it had to be a fair one, based on a full appreciation by each country of conditions in the other. There was some hope of progress if Congress granted the President power to enter into tariff bargaining arrangements with other countries.

Resolution Withdrawn

Another resolution up yesterday was one calling for an inquiry into the spread between the prices of raw materials and manufactured goods from Robert Mackenzie (Lib. Assiniboia). It was withdrawn after Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Trade and Commerce, assured the member the committee now studying massed buying, price spreads and unfair business tactics would go fully into the question.

Tribute to the late King Albert of Belgium was paid by the Prime Minister, Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Liberal Leader, and Robert Gardiner U.F.A. leader in brief speeches at the opening of yesterday's session.

Today the Senate resumes its sittings after a long adjournment and the House of Commons has the estimates before it. An endeavor will be made to have the committee of supply of the House make a start on the estimates of all the departments in order to facilitate handling them later on. Last week some $6,000,000 was voted for the Department of Public Works.

Half Starved Owl Dies Eating Stuffed Crow

Stratford, Ont., Feb. 20 (CP) — Poisoned by arsenic, used in stuffing a crow which it tried to eat, a half starved, half frozen owl died over the week end in the plant of a local bottling works where it had been given refuge from the cold.

The owl was found by one of the employees of the plant and was suffering so badly from the cold that it could not move. The man took the bird into the place and, after thawing out, the owl became quite a pet and allowed its benefactor to carry it around. But the pangs of hunger or else an inherited instinct to destroy something proved the downfall of this majestic bird of the winter land.

Manifesto of Belgian Communists Falls Cold

Brussels, Feb. 19—(AP)—A Communist Declaration, calling on workers to refuse to recognize the future King Leopold III and inviting them to rise against the government, left other political factions, even opposition groups, cold today.

The leaders of these political groups considered the manifesto an ill-timed and improper move coming as it did when all factions are united in the common grief.

More Witnesses Than Room

Sudbury, Ont., Feb. 20—(CP)—Court officials here are worried over how to accommodate all those summoned for the Spring Assizes, which will open this afternoon before Mr. Justice McFarland. Eighty jurymen and 143 witnesses have been called for today, while the courtroom, with extra seats installed, can be made to seat only 194.

Autoists Get Ducking

Tilbury, Ont., Feb. 20—(CP)—Five border men were recovering from a cold ducking today after their auto went through the thin ice of Lake St. Clair about a mile and a half from shore yesterday.

RUMORS OF WARS

Financing a war may have been a problem to nations in the war of twenty to sixteen years ago, but from the freedom with which war is talked about today it would seem as if some persons believe that the financial would be the least thing to think about. But a war in the Far East would cost somebody something—labor, and men—that is certain on both sides—and also money, unless the belligerents are self-sustaining and the soldiers so much a part of the state machine that they are made to fight without pay or for nominal pay, while workers on munitions and food production would be paid the same nominal amount. If a nation can do what has been done since the war—issue paper money by the truckloads and so destroy all values, or is self-sustaining and able to hold back the enemy and feed the armies and keep the soldiers happy at the front, that nation might hold out indefinitely. But nations are not self-sustaining and so would have to buy or, it may be, have already bought arms and munitions. It is indeed doubtful if any nation would lend them money, unless to gain an advantage over a dangerous foe it did not wish openly to attack.

Every shot fired means that much less wealth, every building and every field ruined, every life lost means that much less of riches in a country.

So it might seem unlikely that nations will go to war unless in desperation to save their face from before their own peoples.

Munition manufacturers who are credited with a desire to stir up strife to help their trade will not sell explosives without some compensation. Would the government of the country in which the munition manufacturers live, take such action as would prevent the importation of goods in payment for war supplies?

With debts overloading them, nations may be hesitant about loaning money to those countries which want to fight. But they might take products in return as long as the people of their own country were willing to work for a mere pittance to keep up the war.

Speaking of this question, the Woodstock Sentinel Review remarks: "The lending nations will have to make a decision as to whether they are going to facilitate the destructive practice of war beyond their own boundaries or refuse to encourage that folly by withholding financial accommodation. It is going to be an interesting situation when a foreign nation, contemplating war or already at war, will try to borrow money in Great Britain or the United States. Governments in these countries are going to be faced with a momentous decision. It would seem that the rank and file of the population has made up its mind to be against such financial transactions, but whether that sentiment is forceful enough to assume successful opposition is another question. The factor of profits from goods sold to a belligerent is a powerful temptation to those who have such materials for sale. Will their dislike for war overcome their appetite for riches?"

BIG CITIES AND AIR RAIDS

So much has been said about the awfulness of the next war, such as, for instance, the bombing of cities of people to death. But specialists who write about modern warfare do not quite adopt this attitude regarding what a new war would bring forth. Chemists do not know of any chemicals which could wipe out all life in a large city. It was recently stated in the New York Times by Captain Liddell Hart, a British authority, that "the tonnage of high explosive bombs required to destroy any large city far exceeds the capacity of any country's bombers."

It has been admitted that squadrons of airplanes might bomb cities with mustard gas but civilians could protect themselves with gas masks and buildings could be made gas-tight.

A Swiss military engineer admits that no large city could be wiped out by a massed attack. He says that in Zurich, a city of 250,000 people scattered over an area of seventeen square miles, of which six square miles is densely populated, great havoc could be caused in the six square mile area by a massed attack if citizens had no masks and there were no anti-aircraft defences. But such defenceless conditions would not exist in a threatened area, he says. Then the weather counts against an air raid, then distance from the base of the attacking fleet. He figures that five hundred airplanes would be required to do as much damage to a great city as heavy artillery, and that no nation has so many planes available.

FOR SPRING'S RETURN

I am waiting now for the springtime
Which I know will come again,
And I thus can forget the lusty wind
And the drumming of winter rain.
There's no promise today of jonquils
Or the green sword-sheaths of the grass;
But I know when the south winds come once more
This chill from the earth will pass.

I am waiting through ice-locked hours
The stir of a life that sleeps,
I am waiting the budding and blossom time
That is hid in my spirit's deeps;
And I know that the time is certain
When the petalled joys will unfold,
When the notes of peace will sing in my heart
And the spring will return as of old.

EDDIE CANTOR came up from "The Sidewalks of New York," made famous by "The Happy Warrior," ex-Governor Al. Smith, and never forgets the lower East Side where poverty is always present. Cantor's pet philanthropy is the summer camp for East Side boys at Cold Spring N.Y., for which Eddie gives an annual benefit performance. The benefit was held the other evening, every seat in the theatre was occupied and $7,000 was realized for the Eddie Cantor Boys' Summer Camp at Cold Spring on the Hudson. Headliners from the stage and screen assisted Eddie in providing full value in entertainment for the price of the tickets. Harpo Marx was one of the headliners, while Bill Robinson, Joe Penner, Jack Pearl, Jeanne Aubert, Cardini and Pat Rooney and others made an all-star bill.

THOUGHT FOR THE DAY

Let us consider The Weather in the light of Mark Twain's remark that everybody is complaining about it but nobody seems to do anything about it. However, in any event it can't be long now with February more than half over, and whether March comes in lamblike or lionlike Old Sol is on the job, working longer hours every day, giving brightness and warmth and glorious promise of a grand reawakening of all nature in a few weeks with the earth resplendent in a new carpet of green, trees full of life and sap, and all Nature singing a glad hymn of resurrection and rejoicing that there is no death.

WHY DOES A BLACK HEN lay a white egg? Somebody is always asking why? Why this and why that. Some folks are as full of curiosity as some dogs are full of fleas, and it keeps them just as busy, they can ask more questions in a minute than a battery of college professors can answer in a week. Why does a black hen lay a white egg? A radio philosopher answers the question this way: "Why worry about it? Just get the egg."

SINCE THE U.S. SENATE has sent a man to jail for contempt of its august body by refusing to comply with a summons to appear before the bar of the Senate, Will Rogers thinks that body is entitled to more respect. He admitted he had made his living, more or less, through criticising the Senate and all its devious, lazy ways, but now all he dare say is "For they are jolly good fellows," with the shadow of the jail house looming over all Senate critics from now on.

CHANCELLOR ENGELBERT DOLLFUSS, of Austria, storm centre of the revolution in Vienna which has been making the Front Page for days, spoke over the radio Sunday and was heard very distinctly by listeners-in in Belleville. He spoke first in German then gave an English translation. Chancellor Dollfuss in his radio address did not go very deeply into the cause and results of the disturbances in Vienna, but he did say that reports sent out were very much exaggerated, the casuality list being very much smaller than estimated and reported in the outside press. He also said that it was not the workers of Vienna who were concerned in the fighting but "a small band of fanatics."

The building was the property of a Liverpool concern and with the machinery was valued at from $30,000, to $40,000. It was only completed last summer. About 6,000 barrels of apples were stored in the building and were destroyed. The total loss will be close to $50,000. The cause of the fire is not as yet known.

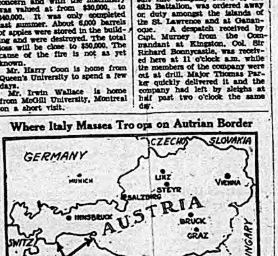
A despatch received by Capt. Murney from the Commandant at Kingston, Col. Sir Richard Bonnycastle, was received here at 11 o'clock a.m. while the members of the company were out at drill. Major Thomas Parker quickly delivered it and the company had left by sleighs at half past two o'clock the same day.

Where Italy Masses Troops on Autrian Border



This map shows the points on the Austrian border where Italian troops have been concentrated. Although the official explanation says the transfer of soldiery from Bolzano and Udine to the Austro-Italian frontier is a routine matter, planned month ago, observers believe the move is calculated to balk possible attempt of German Nazis to take advantage of Socialist revolt and carry out a coup to ocupy the country.

In Legislative Halls

An attack on mass buying by department stores and radio factories was made in the Legislature by F. J. McArthur, Conservative member for Northumberland in speaking on the Speech from the Throne debate, and in which it was charged this condition of affairs brought about the Stratford strike, necessitating calling out troops. Mass buying, he asserted, had reduced employees in Stratford factories to the position of "Egyptian slaves," and while not quarrelling with capitalism, efforts of the big buyers were forcing workingmen into the dust.

Mr. McArthur expressed the opinion that the Stevens commission at Ottawa is one of the greatest forward steps to remove the present situation existing over mass-buying. This responsibility rests on the Conservative party, and he felt the party's shoulders are broad enough, their courage high enough, to stand up under the load and to see to it that all classes get a fair and square deal.

Fair Price for Growers

He also asked a fair price for the tomato growers, urging that the canners go into conference with the growers in order to arrive at some equitable arrangement. Unless this is done he said he intended asking for an investigation into the canning industry.

"Farmers are not complaining of their interest rates," declared Mr. McArthur, "as some would have us believe. Farmers are not asking for preferences or charity. All they want is a fair price for their commodities. If they get a fair price they will be able to pay taxes and interest rates. Governments have gone to a great deal of trouble to find markets but of what use are markets if they bring profits to the middleman and not to the producer? I want to see the farmers get the benefit of these markets."

The Agricultural Committee of the Legislature met a large deputation representing the Vegetable Growers' Council who discussed various phases of their proposal for compulsory registration of all fruit and vegetables growers and also a licensing fee. The fee suggested was $1 to $3 depending on the amount of land being used, the funds to go to the council to directly aid marketing. A sub-committee was appointed which will later meet the Growers' Council to determine what policy shall be followed and a report will be made back to the main committee.

A measure seeking to have divorce actions heard at the residence of the litigants, sponsored by W. E. N. Sinclair, Liberal, South Ontario, was left on the order paper, pending a report on this and other issues such as collusion, perjury, etc., arising in divorce actions, is received by Attorney-General W. H. Price from judges of the Supreme Court. Under present conditions, many actions are taken into other municipalities rather than having them heard at the place of residence of the litigants.

Sinclair's Attitude

While speaking on the debate on the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Sinclair reiterated his stand taken in 1933 when he offered assistance and co-operation to those who are trying to help the people. Mr. Sinclair said he had been charged by his Liberal colleagues with political heresy in view of this attitude, but he insisted that no public man could refrain from helping in aiding recovery to normal conditions.

"If I was misjudged, my conscience is clear," he said. "If I erred it was because of my judgment. When the ship is in danger the tradition of the sailor calls for the safety of the passengers first."

Mr. Sinclair strongly supported the inter-provincial conference recently held under direction of Premier Bennett of Ottawa, and including Premier Henry, declaring that results from this parley would mean the solvency of Canada being guaranteed by ensuring the solvency of the provinces. He urged the various provincial governments of different political beliefs each assist the other in fighting a way out from financial difficulties and present conditions.

The report of the Liquor Control Board for the year that closed Oct. 31 last was tabled by Attorney-General W. H. Price, which showed a decrease in both sales and profits, the figures being a new low in the history of the board. Sales totalled $30,143,247 including those from the liquor stores and brewery warehouses, while the profit to the board amounted to $5,423,821.

McCaughrin Charges

The legal bills committee of the Legislature, presided over by Hon. Charles McCrea, Minister of Mines, head the charge made by Magistrate McCaughrin of Orillia as to alleged "trafficking in offices," in connection with the government move to provide a compassionate $2,000 allowance to the magistrate. Hon. Leopold Macaulay, Minister of Highways, acting as government counsel, examined several witnesses, including I. A. Humphries, K.C., acting deputy Attorney General, who disclosed that there are many precedent cases that arose as far back as 1896 during Liberal governments where civil servants occupying such positions as sheriff, crown attorney, clerk of the peace, etc., had been given such allowances by his successor to office. A sub-committee comprising Hon. Mr. McCrea, Hon. Mr. Macaulay, Dr. G. A. McQuibban, Liberal-Opposition Leader, and H. C. Nixon, Progressive leader, was appointed to draw a report on the evidence, which will be dealt with by the Legal Bills Committee and a report made to the House.

Radium Institute

Hon. Dr. J. M. Robb, Minister of Health, in speaking to his bill providing for establishment of a radium institute in the city of London, gave many enlightening facts as to the work being done in the clinics in Toronto, and Kingston in the government's assistance in fighting cancer. Toronto, he said, at the General Hospital, has an institute unsurpassed in the world as to equipment, but he stressed the importance of early diagnosis and treatment in all cases. Recently the government has arranged for four grammes of radium, known as a "bomb" to be used at the Toronto General Hospital.

"The whole secret of cancer treatment is early diagnosis and treatment," said Dr. Robb. "We have found that from the time a person notices the first symptoms, usually six months elapse before he or she sees a doctor, and usually another six months elapse before the first treatment is given. The public is being aroused as to the vital necessity of early treatment. Our records show that people are coming earlier for treatment than was previously the case."

Says Nixon Hydro Foe

George Shield, Conservative, Woodbine, Toronto, in speaking on the debate of the Speech from the Throne, charged H. C. Nixon, Progressive leader, with having been singled out by the late Sir Adam Beck at one time in the House as "the worst enemy of Hydro." Mr. Shields indicated that records could be produced to prove the allegation. Mr. Shields also charged the opposition with continuously dragging Hydro through mud in an effort to get something on the government.

Attorney-General W. H. Price, in speaking to second reading to his amendment to the Juvenile Court bill, which covers family courts instead of just juvenile courts, declared these courts are of tremendous benefit to the family, the child and municipality. Raising of the juvenile age from 16 to 18 years has been urged, Col. Price stated, which he said is something for future consideration. F. G. McBrien, (Cons., Brocton) in supporting the measure, expressed the hope that the custody of infant children would also be brought under the jurisdiction of the court.

A reply was made to the question tabled last session in connection with agents and their commissions of distilleries who sell to the Liquor Control Board. The Board's reply was to the effect that they do not deal with agents, nor has it any knowledge of commissions. Purchase orders for Scotch whiskey are sent direct to the actual producer and payment is made likewise.

Hon. Dr. J. M. Robb, Minister of Health, gave notice that he will introduce an amendment to the Factory, Shop and Office Building Act which will reduce the working hours per week of employees in the banking industry from 60 to 56. If they work beyond this maximum they will receive overtime pay.

"Shiner" Sinfield Stars When Belleville Juniors Win 5-0 Over Queens in Playoff Game

Second Game to be Played in Kingston on Wednesday

TOO MUCH SPEED

Locals Outweighed Per Man But Had Much The Better of Play

Inspired to great heigths by the stellar goal-tending of "Shiner" Sinfield, their sorrel-topped net custodian, the Belleville juniors applied the whitewash brush to the hefty Queen's kids at Belleville Arena last evening and downed them by the score of 5 to 0 in the first inter-sectional game for Junior O.H.A. Group No. 1 honors. Eddie Thomas' kids now enjoyed a five goal lead to take to Kingston Wednesday night. Over 800 fans witnessed the [illegible]

Carrying too much speed and tricky combination play the "Cubs" outclassed Queen's, who outweighed them considerably, but could in no way match their speed. The way in which the "Red and White" team back-checked when Queen's put on their power plays was responsible for their success.

The manager introduced two new faces to the fans in Don Ridley and Jimmie Semark, members of the Grills' Garage team, in the Central loop. These kids seemed to fit perfectly into the style of play and with Bill Hammett made up the second front line. Sinfield was undoubtedly the star of the game as he blocked, booted and stopped the proverbial million shots. The manner in which he dove at the incoming Queen's forwards all but broke their hearts; he was afforded an excellent defence in Greer and McElrath, both going great as rear guardsmen and McElrath leading the locals offensively. The first line of Barriage, McGuire and Harvey, saw the left winger, Freddie McGuire at his best; he and Barriage continually combining to outplay their rivals. Don Lee was the other alternate.

Packed too Much Speed

For Queen's Avery at centre looked the best on the offensive while Davis and Lewis proved the most proficient wing players; although their defence was big in comparison to the local midgets they could not [illegible] the protection required by Goalie Marshall.

The Play

Although Belleville opened on the offensive and applied the pressure play hovered between the two blue lines for the first five minutes with Lewis getting the only open shot on the net in that time. The new front line of the locals hopped over the boards and assumed the offensive and were rewarded for their play when Ridley carrying the puck past the Queen's goal passed out to Semark who was camped at the side of the net and flipped it into the net. Two minutes later Bill Hammett rifled a bullet-like drive from the blue line that whizzed under Marshall's arm. Barriage and McGuire carried the play repeatedly after this and McGuire scored on a pass-out from the corner when the rubber bounced off Gibson's skate into the net. The first period ended 3 to 0 for Belleville.

Beginning the second period Queen's went on the offensive and Davis was beaten from close in by Sinfield. Repeatedly the Queen's forwards were in on Sinfield but he rose to the occasion each time. Avery hit the goal post and the red light flashed but Referee Burtt refused to allow the counter. Play went up and down the ice with both goalies making brilliant saves. Near the end of the frame McElrath rushed and shot and was beaten; Barriage took a shot and hit the post, and McGuire rushed in to push the puck past the prostrate goalie for the fourth goal as the period terminated.

Both clubs put on the pressure in the final frame with Queen's using four forwards. Sinfield and his defence were repeatedly called upon to make saves. The visitors threw caution to the winds and tried to pull down the lead but thanks to the brilliant playing of the locals and Sinfield's work in the nets, "they did not pass." The only scoring in this period proved the nicest combination play of the night and came when Barriage suddenly broke away with one man to beat. Skating like mad the local centre shifted, drew McGinnis to one side and gave Fred McGuire, who was trailing a perfect pass and a clear path to the goal. He made sure of the count, and the score was 5-0. Semark and Ridley were through to pile up on Marshall just before the game ended.

The line-up:

Belleville—Goal, Sinfield; defence, Greer and McElrath; centre, Barriage; wings, McGuire and Harvey; subs, Lee, Ridley, Semark and Hammett.

Queen's—Goal, Marshall; defence, Gibson and Smith; centre, Avery; wings, Murley and Davis; subs, Christie, Lewis, Brackenbury, McGinnis; sub goaler, Chandler.

PRE-GAME PREDICTIONS

(By The Canadian Press)

Teams to which tonight's National Hockey League games don't mean a thing can, and probably will throw numerous monkey wrenches into the machinery rolling others to playoff positions.

Toronto, for instance, don't need the two points at stake in their clash at Montreal with Canadiens but the latter could use them nicely, particularly as New York Americans play Chicago and are just good enough at upsets to win.

If they do and Canadiens lose, the Frenchmen would drop out of the third playoff spot in the Canadien section. And Leafs probably will try their hardest, bring all the power of a team at full strength into play.

Canadiens have beaten them three times this season, whitewashed them twice. With two wins to their credit the best Leafs can do is tie the Montrealers on the season by taking a victory tonight.

And, incidentally, the Toronton-fans can make sure of a play-off berth by whipping the Montrealers. No one is worrying, of course, about their doing so but there is still a mathematical chance they could be beaten out. A win tonight would make it positive they will be in the extra-series.

Ottawa and Boston are other teams, who are just finishing out the season because they are in the league and who may upset others tonight. The Senators are at home to Montreal Maroons, in second place with three points over Canadiens but still needing every point they can grab.

Maroons have beaten Senators in three straight games since they lost one tussle early in the season to the Boucher-coached team and figure they are good enough to take another.

Detroit, on top in the United States section with a two-point lead over Chicago play in Boston while the Hawks are battling Americans in New York. The Bruins have not had much success since they earned an early-season 6-0 win over the Red Wings. The best they have been able to do since was tie one game in four.

If Bruins score an upset over Wings, Chicago can go into a tie for first place by beating Americans.

CURLING

Toronto, Feb. 20 (CP)—Ontario curlers opened the second day's play in the seventh annual Toronto Bonspiel today with rinks competing in three competitions. The three events are the Royal York trophy, primary event, the Birks-Ellis-Ryrie trophy, open to winners in the Royal York, and the North American Life event, consolation event of the primary competition.

In the Royal York competition yesterday three extra end games appeared. A. Lerchen's Detroit rink carried the Oshawa rink, skipped by F. R. Michael, to 13 ends before the Ontario aggregation won out 12-11. L. McArthur's Toronto curlers caught up with the Strathcona rink, led by T. F. Robson, on the 12th end and then won out in the extra end, 12-11.

D. E. Beyon's Toronto rink and the Orillia curlers, skipped by Dr. J. N. Harvie, played the third extra and game, the former coming out on top 10-9.

There were 106 rinks from Ontario points and from Detroit entered when the Royal York trophy preliminary round started. Three draws will be held today with the curlers attending the annual banquet in the evening.

ESKIMOS IN SECOND PLACE

BOXING CARD IS ARRANGED

R.C.A.F. Will Give Fans 10 Classy Bouts on Thursday

Due to the continued approval of the fans towards their boxing draws—and with the permission of Wing Commander L. S. Breadner, D.S.C. another card has been arranged for the "Lenten Period", held on Feb. 22nd. Despite the fact that Loughran meets Carnera in Florida the same date—Bill Adams the hard working trainer feels that the boys have a prior right to that date, and while there is to be only one main bout in the Miami card whereas each and every bout on the local card will be of a main bout calibre. While we can't blame the fans for making the "Florida-Fiasco" an excuse to grab an early tan. It is well to remember all about our own February tan.

The Maynooth Savage — Lorne Childerhose—makes his first appearance in the ring against C. Wheeler. The log roller promises to provide plenty of emitement if he can be brought in from the outdoors.

Bob Schroder meets C. Kelly of Madoc—both boys have had plenty of experience and are well matched and should provide a good bout.

Len Maracle of Point Anne an old favourite of the fans meets Earl Potts of Trenton—while Potts lacks the ring experience of Maracle, he makes up for it in aggressiveness.

Harold Wheeler the "Little Giant" meets Gordon Gorman from Ottawa. It's not only hockey players, that are grown in the Capital City. Wheeler has yet to lose a fight, but there's always the first time.

R. Crawford meets G. Woods of Orland, in the fifth bout, both are evenly matched and should be plenty fast for three rounds. Ten bouts in all are scheduled.

Johnny De Cote and Joe Semain, both Belleville lads, meet in the battle of Midgets, 90 pounds apiece, they will keep everyone on edge of their seats in order to follow them.

Geo. Fisher of Belleville meets Bill Waugh of Kingston. Fisher due to this brilliant performance in the camp before is a general favourite with the boys and will have plenty of support on meeting the hard hitting boy from the Limestone City.

Howard Cole meets Joe Wright of Kingston. Cole is seldom seen in action lasting over one round but in Wright he meets a fighter of his own type.

Geo. Smith the boy from Campbellford has a return match with Joe Vidor of Kingston. Smith got the decision in the last fray after an evenly fought bout.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

Eddie Thomas' Cubs more than surprised over seven hundred local fans at the arena last evening when they blanked the sturdy Queen's juniors 5 to 0. The locals well deserved their win and might have enjoyed a much greater margin lead had they shot on the visiting goalie in the last two frames as they did in the opening stanza. Five goals are a tremendous obstacle to overcome and the local juniors should be group number one champions after Wednesday night. Of course the locals must realize they are up against a fighting team and therefore must battle back to the last-ditch in Kingston.

• • •

Skipper Thomas introduced two new faces to the fans last night in the persons of Jimmie Semark and Don Ridley. Both won their spurs and gave creditable accounts of their endeavors. In passing out the night's bouquets, however, they undoubtedly went to "Shiner" Sinfield, the local net custodian. Sinfield stopped the proverbial million and tended goal only as it should be, in big league style. He was given excellent support by his two defencemen, which after all goes to prove the old adage—"a goalkeeper is just as good as the defence in front of him." Incidentally it was Sinfield's first shut-out of the season and came at the most opportune time. Of the forwards Freddie McGuire stood out followed closely by Cy Barriage.

There was not quite as much combination displayed by the locals as was in evidence in the Hastings series but occasionally the kids blossomed forth in this style of play and were rewarded for their efforts. Combination play will eventually reap its reward and it's our guess that the continuation of the superb combination by the locals will alone prove their success. Another feature established by the Cubs last night was the prolific manner in which they checked back all evening. As was stated by Coach Elmer of the Queen's kids after the game—"those kids check-back like fiends". As in years past Coach Elmer has garnered together a team of young giants, but they could not match the speed of the local kids. It must be granted, however, Wally Elmer has a couple of likely looking prospects and the local kids need not look for any push-over in Kingston on the return game.

Football (rugby to those who take exception to the use of the term football) took its proper place in local sports and stamped itself a major sport in Belleville following the marked success of the local B.C.I.V.S. grid team last fall. The majority of the players to perform under the colors of the local collegiate last fall will be over the age limit to play interscholastic football next season. By amalgamating the best of last year's interscholastic team with other local players just over the collegiate age limit, a strong junior O.R.F.U. team could be placed on the gridiron next fall. Then again an intermediate O.R.F.U. team would take in such players as Mac Charney, now residing in Trenton and possibly Jack Taylor who spends considerable of his time in Belleville these days. There are a number of other ex-grid celebrities about town who would fit well into the picture and assure Belleville of a splendid intermediate O.R.F.U. team. The greatest drawback towards the organizing of a football team in the small centres is the equipping of the club with uniforms and other playing paraphernalia. To an organization fostering a local football team would go considerable prestige these days of commercialized sport.

Ralph Morden, physical instructor at the local Y.M.C.A., is at present laying plans for the opening of the annual spring "Y" house basketball league. Mr. Morden, after experimenting last fall on the matter, has plans afoot to diminish the roster of the clubs to four men a side, instead of the usual five. This is done owing to the smallness of the local floor. It will also have a tendency to allow more teams in the loop, as there will be one or two cut off the roster of each team in the fall league. At present the loop is composed of Trenton "Grads", R.C.A.F., Deacon A. C. and two teams from the Y.M.C.A. The innovation of four-men basketball teams should speed up the game and add to the scoring punch of each club concerned. The results of the experiment will be watched with interest by ex-basketball players in and about the city.

Over at the Trenton Airport the boxing promoters swing into prominence on Thursday night with an all-star ten-bout card. Boxers from all centres in Eastern Ontario have been procured by the officers in command. Incidentally the local boxing moguls, the South End A. C., stage their season's initial boxing show next week.

Bill McKechnie, manager of the Boston Braves, looks for a closer pennant race than that of last year in the National League. "I realize that there were four clubs in the thick of the closing weeks of the season last fall (Giants, Pirates, Cubs, Braves and Cards)," said McKechnie, "but I expect to see even more clubs in the battle this year. One thing I feel certain of is that there will be no 25 or 30 games separating any of the eight clubs, which was true between the Giants and Cincinnati in 1933."

SELECT CIRCLE ENTERED BY RANGER'S RIGHT WINGER

Only Six Others With Bill Cook Has Shot 200 Goals in N.H.L.

By ELMER DULMAGE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Toronto, Feb. 20—(CP)—When Bill Cook shot his 200th National Hockey League goal the other night, he thereupon strode into very select company indeed. The "200 club" is so rigidly exclusive it has only six other members besides the New York Ranger veteran.

But, because the record books say Bill Cook has been most prolific scorer in the last decade of major league hockey, there was very little splash about the 200th tally itself. It has been pretty inevitable these many months, that the Saskatchewan wheat farmer would one night shoot that goal and cross the tracks to where only three other active players stand.

In the days before the National League stretched itself and became a major sport and major business in United States, Joe Malone and Newsy Lalonde and Babe Dye formed the "200 club". The American hockey public never saw Malone or Lalonde in their heyday on the eastern front, and they only saw Dye, when the Toronto sniper was preparing to put down his weapons.

Malone First To Click

The greatest marksman of his day, Malone was the first big-leaguer to amass 200 goals. He played for Quebec and his average over a 10-year stretch was 26 7-10th goals a season. No one can show a decade of shooting in the N.H.L. to touch it except Cook, and Bill would have to put in two more seasons after this one to warrant a scrutiny on the same basis.

Until some young fellow who is steaming along at a record-breaking clip, like Charlie Conacher, reaches maturity in the N.H.L. with all his youthful fire, the Malone mark will stand. Howie Morenz Aurel Joliat, Dye and Nels Stewart have all had their fling, and all have missed. Bill Cook has gone pretty close.

Morenz and Joliat and Stewart made the "200 club", however. In points of goals the great Morenz ranks second only to Malone with 244 in 10 years in Joe's 267. Lalonde scored 231 in nine years, Stewart 303 in eight years and Dye 202 in nine years. Joliat got his double century just before last Christmas—during his 12th campaign.

There is every possibility, that Morenz will go on to set an all-time high-scoring record. He is already over 250 and apparently speeding up as the play-offs draw near. But it will have taken the Canadien ace at least two years longer than it did Malone. Howie's 10-year average is 24 2-5 goals a season and it will be a little lower after this campaign.

Stewart's Average High

Stewart, who did most of his big firing for Montreal Maroons before being shifted to Boston, has compiled an eight year average of 25 3-8. Lalonde, now coach of Canadiens, put up a mark of 25 2-3 for nine years; Dye 22 4-9 for nine years.

Conacher and Harvey Jackson of Toronto Maple Leafs are young players shooting well over the 20-goal average. Conacher scored 99 goals in his first four seasons for 24 3-4 mark and Jackson 85 for an average of 21 1-4. And the big right winger will improve his average this season. He has already scored 27 times.

Cooney Weiland who started five years ago with Boston Bruins, spent last year at Ottawa and now is with Detroit Red Wings, scored 109 goals in his first five seasons for a 21 4-5 average.

This "200 club" leaves out dozens of great players, playmakers who specialized in opening the way to goals. It's a group of mighty shooters—the National League's best.

PREDICTS SENATORS. GIANTS TO MEET AGAIN

Waldo Ark. Feb. 20 (CP)— New York Giants and Washington Senators will meet again in the 1934 World Series. That's the prediction of Carl Hubbell, Giant pitching ace.

"But the most trouble for us appears to be in out-averaging the Chicago Cubs to win the National League pennant," Hubbell said in an interview here.

Enroute to the Giants' training camp at Miami Beach, Fla., Hubbell stopped to pick up Travis Jackson, Giant infielder.

The New York pitcher prophesied that he would win at least 20 games this season. He said he does not believe the livelier ball will affect the "won and lost" percentage of pitchers.

"However, I do believe the earned run averages of the pitchers will show a difference," the hurler added.

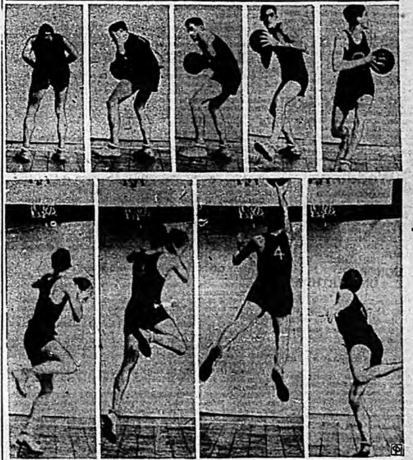
Here's How Cager With Ball May Free Self of Player Jam Right Under Basket



Written For Central Press Canadian and the Ontario Intelligencer

By JACK LIPPERT

Here is a demonstration of a deceptive shot, which is difficult to guard against, and which is used by a player to free himself from a jam under the basket.

Imagine this player in possession of the ball in a scrimmage jam under the basket. He is closely protecting the ball (picture, extreme left) has lost no time in starting his pivot to get free of the jam-up. He must get free from the jam-up fast, because if he does not, or cannot, the referee will blow the whistle for a held ball.

Rule 7, section 3, clearly gives the law on the calling of held balls:

"Held ball is declared when two players of opposing teams have one or both hands firmly on the ball, or held ball may be called when one closely guarded player is withholding the ball from play and is making no apparent effort to put the ball into play."

The player in this complete turn shooting manoeuvre, if he is closely guarded, must not delay in starting his pivot, which is interpreted as an "apparent effort to put the ball into play."

Pivoting on his right foot, he strikes far out as a comfortable stride will take him, striking the floor with his right foot. The manoeuvre starts out as though the player is going to dribble away from the basket.

The player might even make a deliberate movement of the hands to fake a dribble. Or he might fake a back pass to a teammate. Instead of doing either, he flashes into a quick complete pivot, and leaps off his left foot for a lay-up shot from the front.

Note how well the elbows are kept close to the body; how masterful the hand-control over the ball; and grace and balance of the whole body as it leaves the floor, reaches the height of the leap, and returns again to the floor, the right knee bending to relieve the jar. The hand should be well behind the ball and the push action used to place the ball up, just over the rim. The eyes must be kept fixed on the rim of the basket. Do not use the bankboard on this shot from directly in front of the basket.

The footwork is of course, perfectly legal in this manoeuvre. In fact, a different item in the footwork rule applies to a player who is standing still when he starts his footwork. The "one count and two count" technically does not apply to a player who is "progressing" when he receives the ball.

The rule that applies to a player standing still is:

"A player who receives the ball while standing still may jump from the floor in disposing of the ball or he may pivot. If he jumps from the floor the ball must leave his hands before either foot again touches the floor. If he pivots.

A—The ball must leave his hands before the pivot foot leaves the floor if he is to start a dribble.

B—If he is to pass or throw for goal he may lift the pivot foot or jump, but the ball must leave his hands before one or both feet again touch the floor."

It is the B clause in this rule which applies to the manoeuvre here described and illustrated.

IS HONORED ON BIRTHDAY

An interesting event took place recently at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Patrick, Glen Miller, when sixty friends and neighbors gathered to honor Mr. Patrick's father, Mr. Allen Patrick, at a surprise party on the occasion of his 64th birthday.

A very enjoyable evening was spent in cards and dancing and delicious refreshments were served. The centre of attraction was a huge three-layer birthday cake adorned with sixty-four candles which Mr. Patrick was called upon to blow out.

During the evening Mr. Patrick was presented with a razor and strop by his friends. The following address was read:

To Mr. Allen Patrick,

SPECIAL VEGETABLE NOTES

ASPARAGUS—Cut off tough ends, scrape stalks, tie in bundles, then stand in a cooker narrow enough to hold stalks upright; add boiling water to cover stems only—the tips will usually cook in the steam. When tender, serve with melted butter, drawn butter or cream sauce, Hollandaise or Bechamel sauce. Or cool, chill and serve as salad. Save asparagus water.

ARTICHOKES—(Green) like asparagus. (Tuber) like parsnips.

BEETS—Scrub, leave a little steam and the tail to prevent bleeding; boil in salted water or steam until tender. Serve with butter or sauce. Or bake as directed in general rules.

Left-over cooked beets may be sliced and fried in butter or dipped in batter and fried in deep hot fat.

CABBAGE—Remove tough leaves, cut in sections, cut away core, and soak in salted water an hour (to draw out possible insects). Cook in large pot of boiling salted water until tender but not pulpy; green vegetables should never be over-cooked. Serve with butter, cream sauce or cheese sauce. Or scallop cabbage with white or cheese sauce. And do not neglect the possibilities of very finely shredded raw cabbage as a salad, with a good dressing.

Throw out cabbage water.

To prevent odor while cooking, season and tie tightly in wet cooking parchment, then drop into boiling water.

CARROTS—As a useful and delicious vegetable, we allow rather special space to carrots.

Scrub well with stiff brush and boil until tender in small amount of salted water; serve whole or cut up, with butter or sauce. (Carrots cooked in stock instead of water have good flavour.)

Carrots may be cut in paper-thin slices before boiling or steaming. (This departs from our general precaution for boiling vegetables, but makes them very attractive.) Cooked, sliced carrots may be covered with thin cream sauce and butter crumbs, then baked. Equal parts of cooked carrots and peas make a delicious vegetable.

Cooked mashed carrots, seasoned, mixed with slightly beaten egg (1 egg to each cup) are delicious browned by spoonfuls in deep hot fat (380° F.)

GLAZED CARROTS—See Glazing instructions.

CAULIFLOWER—Soak and cook like cabbage—whole or divided into flowerettes—serve buttered, creamed, or with cheese sauce or one of the richer sauces.

Cold cooked cauliflower is excellent in salad, with other vegetables.

Boiled or steamed cauliflower, like cabbage, is excellent finished in baking dish with cream or cheese sauce and buttered crumbs on top; 25 to 30 minutes in a moderate oven will heat the mixture through and brown the crumbs.

CELERY—Save hearts for eating raw. Scrape stalks, cut in lengths, cook in boiling salted water. Serve with butter or suitable sauce. Celery (cooked) is excellent when baked with cheese sauce and crumbs. (See above under cauliflower.)

Delicious fritters may be made by dipping short pieces of cooked celery in batter, and frying in hot deep fat, 380° F. or cook in hot butter in frying pan.

CORN—Cook in rapidly boiling water WITHOUT SALT (salt toughens kernels). Don't overcook. Very young freshly picked corn needs only 7 or 8 minutes allow more time when older or longer picked.

Try cooked or canned corn added to pancake batter—fry as usual, serve with butter. Or add corn to fritter batter, highly seasoned, and cook in deep hot fat, 365° F.; drain on absorbent paper and sprinkle with powdered sugar.

Stewed corn (or canned) is more interesting when butter, a little sugar, grated onion, chopped green pepper and pimento are added.

Succotash is a mixture of equal quantities cooked corn and small lima beans; season with salt, pepper and butter.

CUCUMBERS—Better known for salads, pared, soaked in salt and water, then seasoned, and covered with vinegar or marinated with French dressing. A delicate vegetable when cooked. Cut in thick slices, dice or balls, and boil or steam. Serve with sauce or melted butter.

Or cut in fingers, soak in vinegar for an hour, dip in slightly beaten diluted egg and coat with sifted and seasoned crumbs; fry in deep hot fat, 380° F.

EGGPLANT—Cut in half; sprinkle surface with buttered crumbs and bake in moderate oven until tender. Or steam halves (unpeeled) until tender, scoop out centre and fill with bread stuffing, highly seasoned; top with buttered crumbs and bake until brown.

Fried eggplant is very popular. Peel, slice, pile up slices with salt between, put weight on top, let stand an hour, then drain off liquid; dip in diluted beaten egg and coat with sifted seasoned crumbs and pan fry or drop into hot deep fat until browned and tender.

MUSHROOMS—Clean thoroughly; peel unless young, with skins that are white and tender. Cut off tougher ends of stalks and simmer to make stock if wanted. Caps may be sliced when large, and left whole when small. Stew in seasoned water or fry in butter or bacon fat until tender.

ONIONS—Boil in large quantity salted water. For strong onions (the reddish ones—mild onions are white or yellow), change water once or twice. Or tie onions in wet cooking parchment (adding plenty of butter, pepper and salt) and drop into boiling water—when preventing odors is important. Cream or other suitable sauces are good on onions.

Cooked onions can be covered with cream, a thin cream sauce or cheese sauce, and cooked in moderate oven. Very nice if glazed first.

Onions should be sliced very thin for frying and heat kept low enough to prevent browning—they should be yellow and tender when done.

For stuffing, use the mild-flavored large Spanish or Bermuda onion; halve, boil, scoop out and fill with savory stuffing—with cheese, meat or nut meats for added food value and deliciousness.

PARSNIPS—Scrub well and peel after boiling in salted water. Slice or cut in dice or strips. Serve with butter or suitable sauce. Cooked parsnips can be baked in white or cheese sauce in moderate oven, about 20 minutes.

Glazed Parsnips—See Glazing instructions.

Boiled Parsnips, halved or quartered, can be dipped in batter and deep fried; or cut in slices lengthwise and pan-fried in bacon fat; or placed in fat around roast in oven until well browned.

PEAS—After boiling peas until tender, drain, add butter or cream, salt, pepper, a little sugar and a few leaves of crushed mint.

Pea Souffle is a favorite. Follow Souffle instructions.

Pea Timbales good for vegetable or for main course. To each cup cooked mashed peas, seasoned with salt, pepper and scraped onion, add 1 cup milk with 1 beaten egg and ¼ cup fine crumbs. Turn into small buttered moulds, set in pan containing boiling water and cook in moderate oven until firm in centre. Turn out to serve. A cream or cheese sauce may accompany them.

PEPPERS—When fried green pepper is used to give flavor to any dish, chop it and fry in butter over mild flame.

Stuffed Baked Peppers—cut off top remove seeds, pack with filling. See "Baked Vegetable" instructins. (Peppers may be parboiled first.)

POTATOES—Well-scrubbed potatoes boiled in their skins or baked, contain most minerals. If standing after they are peeled, keep covered with cold water. Cook in boiling salted water.

Franconia Potatoes—commonly called "Browned," are parboiled first, then finished around a roast, browning in the pan fat; baste and turn, so they will have a savory brown crusty surface. Season.

French Fried Potatoes—cut in sections like an orange, soak an hour in cold water, dry thoroughly and drop a few pieces at a time into deep hot fat, 375° F. Drain well, sprinkle with salt and keep very hot in oven.

Lyonnaise Potatoes—For each cupful of diced cooked potato, melt one tablespoon butter in frying pan, cook one tablespoon chopped onion until tender, then add potatoes and cook until brown.

Riced Potatoes—Very lightand convenient. Press boiled or steamed potatoes through ricer and keep very hot in oven. Top may be browned; or grated cheese spread over top and browned.

Mashed Potatoes will never have lumps if riced first; add a little hot cream or milk and butter, season and whip light with a fork or wire spoon-beater.

Potato Cakes—Season mashed potatoes well, adding scraped onion, minced parsley, etc., moisten with well-beaten egg (one half egg to cupful), form in flat cakes and pan-fry.

Croquettes with potato base—just add any meat or fish (finely chopped or shredded) to potato cake mixture, chill well, shape in balls or cakes, coat with egg and crumbs, and pan-fry or cook in deep hot fat 390° F., to rich brown.

SALSIFY—Discolors quickly when peeled or cut, so must be dropped into acidulated water—1 teaspoon lemon juice or vinegar to one cup cold water. Cook and serve like parsnips.

SPINACH—Soak in laundry tub or big container of water, then lift out gently so grit will settle at bottom. Repeat in several waters. Finally wash leaves in hot water. Drain. Cook until tender with only moisture that clings to leaves—DON'T OVERCOOK. Chop and season with salt, pepper and butter, or season without chopping. Excellent to cook it tied up, with seasoning, in wet parchment, to cook in own juices when dropped into boiling water.

Spinach is good in Souffles or Timbales—Prepare same as peas. Can be creamed or served with cheese sauce or baked in sauce.

SQUASH—Can be steamed, boiled or baked—see General Instructions.

TOMATOES—To peel them, scald a few moments in boiling water, then flush with cold water, or rub all over with blunt side of knife before peeling, to loosen skin.

Good baked (unpeeled), whether plain or stuffed—See Baked Vegetables.

Firm sliced tomatoes may be broiled or pan fried—sprinkle first with seasoned flour.

TURNIPS—A strong flavoured vegetable. Peel, slice or dice and cook in large amount of boiling salted water; or season and tie up in cooking parchment, to prevent odors. Mash cooked turnips and season with salt, pepper and butter.

MADOC WOMEN OBSERVE WORLD DAY OF PRAYER

Assemble at St. Peter's Presbyterian Church

MADOC—The World Day of Prayer Service for women was held in St. Peter's Presbyterian Church on Friday, February 16th in the afternoon with a fine gathering from the United Church, the Standard Church and the Presbyterian Church. The theme of the service was "Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem" and was prepared by Mrs. Hoffmeyer of South Africa and was closely followed in the programme. The church organist, Mr. Geo. Maybee, gave a very interesting piano recital prior to the opening of the service. Mrs. John McCaffrey on behalf of St. Peter's Church opened with a few words of welcome. Mrs. Lester O'Hara read a very fine article on "Girdle of Prayer Around the World in 1933" which lasted for 20 hours beginning at New Zealand at sunrise and embracing every country. It also told of wonderful prayer services for women in Persia, China, India, Korea and many other lands and closed with an appeal to all women to unite in the Day of Prayer in 1934.

The first part of the programme "Peace in the Church of Christ" was to have been taken by the ladies of the Anglican church but they were unable to do so, so Mrs Rivers and Mrs. McCaffney took charge.

The second part of the programme was in charge of Mrs. Rutherford, President of the W.M.S. of Trinity United Church. The subject was "Peace In Heart and Home". Mrs. Rivers was called on and as a representative of the W.C.T.U. gave a prayer on home life. Just at this time Mrs. Rivers suggested that a note of sympathy be sent to Mrs. (Rev.) Seymour of Belleville, whose home had been so suddenly desolated by death of her husband in Toronto. Dr. Seymour was the moderator of St. Peter's church during the calling of the new minister, Rev. W. A. Hunter and was greatly beloved by the congregation. Mrs. (Rev.) Smith of the Standard Church seconded the suggestion.

The next section "Peace in the Nation" was also in charge of Mrs. Rutherford assisted by Mrs. Wickham and Mrs. Hamm. The offering was taken up and Mrs. Smith of the Standard Church gave the dedicatory prayer. The Presbyterians took charge of the last part of the programme. "Peace through the extension of Christ's Kingdom through Missionaries" Mrs. (Rev.) Hunter, Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Jenkins each took part in prayer. The service was closed by the Mispah Benediction.

CENTRE—VICTORIA W.M.S.

The February meeting of Centre-Victoria W.M.S. was held at the home of Mrs. Herb. Pulver on February 6th and took the form of a quilting bee. There were nineteen members and three visitors present. Group Two served dinner at which they realized $6.00.

During the afternoon Mrs. F. Townsend president called the meeting to order. After singing "There is work to do for Jesus" and prayer by Mrs. Adam, there was a business discussion. Mrs. H. Pulver and Mrs. W. Simpson were appointed delegates to Napanee Presbyterial. It was decided that a mission band would be organized at Centre under the supervision of Miss Duggan and Mrs. Dehaney. Offering and flower collection amounted to $3.00.

BABE FIGHTS GRIM BATTLE

Eighteen Months Old Youngster Shows Sign of Recovery

The eyes of a city are turned today upon the gallant fight being made in the Belleville General Hospital by a former chubby, blue-eyed baby boy of eighteen months who yesterday lay perilously close to death on an operating table, while solemn, white-coated doctors, and soft-spoken nurses gathered around the now wasted little form, prepared to take one desperate chance on saving the little life.

Eighteen days ago—a day for every month—little baby Robert Flindall, son of Mrs. William Flindall, 48 Gordon Street, was stricken. A nurse of the local Victorian Order of Nurses who called, realised the seriousness of the attack and at once called Dr. G. S. Cronk. Diagnosed by Dr. Cronk as [illegible] lobar pneumonia, and [illegible] there were grave headshakings and a serious expression.

Steadily baby Flindall grew worse, in spite of the care that was being given him by a sleepless mother and a nurse of the local Order. Only the rugged constitution of the tot was responsible for the fact that the serious ailment had not immediately ended a short life.

Just a few days ago, unwilling to stand by and see the condition grow worse, the little fellow was taken to the hospital by Dr. Cronk where the first operation was performed. Owing to the fact that his condition was very low, no anesthetic could be given. The operation over, the child rallied again but a relapse occurred on Monday and another operation was performed.

Today Baby Flindall was reported much better. Doctors and nurses, amazed at the vitality of the tot are watching with anxious eyes; are tiptoeing cautiously in and out of the room at odd intervals to see for themselves the rapid change in the condition of the tossing little figure on the cot. An anxious mother who has not slept for days is nearby waiting for the first concrete sign that certain recovery is on the way. A city is watching from the sidelines and offering a silent prayer to a stricken mother.

"He's much better today," reported Miss Webster of the Victorian Order of Nurses, when questioned. "He'll probably recover."

"Doing nicely," reported Dr. Cronk.

And a sigh of relief is audible from those who have followed the progress of the brave battle of a game little guy.

CHEESE SHIPMENT BOUGHT IN BLOCK

The Evening Post of Swansea, Wales, recently carried a photograph of the display of Canadian produce sent across last month from Belleville and also a story in connection with the interest which the shipment and the Bay of Quinte products have aroused in Wales. Mr. W. Gordon Haines, produce broker of Swansea, who has the marketing of the direct shipments of Canadian produce for Messrs T. T. Pascoe, Ltd., expressed great satisfaction at the interest shown by wholesalers in the exhibition of the goods. Representatives of several of the largest Swansea, Llanelly, Cardiff, and Bristol houses attended. Mr. Hatton Evans said that he believed the scheme was bound to prove a great advantage not only to buyers themselves but in helping to find more work for the collieries and tinplate work in the district. The Post says:

"Messrs. William Evans and Co. per E. D. Rees, the local manager, purchased the whole of the first shipment of cheese and tinned tomatoes for their Swansea branch, and Mr. Haines stated that he felt sure that from the enquiries he had already received that the local wholesalers intend to do their share to improve matters for the South Wales workers."

FINANCIAL MARKETS
NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

WALL STREET FINANCIAL

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—(AP)—The stock market was literally "snowbound" today and prices tended to freeze in a narrow groove as traders straggled in through one of the worst storms of the year.

With most suburban trains delayed by an unusually heavy overnight snowfall and a subsequent cold wave, the exchange governors postponed the opening of the market from 10 a.m. to 11 in order that many beleaguered members, living out of the Metropolitan district, could reach the city.

There was only a scattering of specialists on the floor when trading did start. Bonds were listless.

Shares of United and Douglas Aircrafts were up fractionally to more than a point and similar gains were shown by Sante Fe, Delaware and Hudson, N.Y. Central and Pennsylvania. U. S. Industrial and American Commercial Alcohols picked up a point each.

Canadian stocks were subjected to some scattered light offerings. International Nickel was steady but Canadian Pacific and Dome were a bit easier. On the Curb Lake Shore conceded a small fraction. Dominion Government 4s were steady. The Canadian dollar was 3-16 of a cent lower at 99.29 cents.

TORONTO MINES

TORONTO, Feb. 20.—(CP)—Today's mining stock market was a dull affair, and was rendered more so by the late opening of the New York Market, due to storms and wire trouble. Senior Gold and Base Metal stocks had a very thin market from the opening with prices shaded slightly.

Base Metal issues did very little in the first two hours, Base Metals Corporation, Coast Copper, Falconbridge and Hudson Bay being out of the picture. Noranda traded a few shares at $35.

Dome, Lake Shore and McIntyre lost about 25 cents each and Wright Hargreaves 5 cents to $7.05. Hollinger gained 5 to $13.65 and Bralorne at $11.25 was unchanged.

Silver Shares moved ahead under a fair buying volume in the first hour but a slightly weaker tone for the silver group on the New York Board around noon, shaded local prices a little. Mining Corporation, Nipissing and Premier however held to the up side.

The big gold issues were quiet and slightly off in the Morning Session, but improvement was noted in the afternoon. Lake Shore and Dome had gains of about 75 cents each this afternoon. Base Metal shares were off narrowly except Noranda which was firm around $35.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 20—(CP)— Stocks were inclined to sag moderately in a slow trading session today, recessions at noon showing a market preponderance over gains. Losses however were mainly in small fractions. All the interlisted shares were down narrowly at the end of the first hour.

Walkers Preferred was sold rather actively at 16 5-8 for a loss of a quarter point and the common sold down to 44 1-4 but was holding at 44 7-8 at noon off only 1-8 net. Industrial Alcohol at 16 1-4 was up 1-8 and Distillers Seagram at 20 3-8 was down 1-8. Brewers and Distillers was strong at 2.70 up 5 cents.

In the Brewery group the Brewing Corporation issues alone appeared on the up side with gains of 1-4 each. Bud and Cosgrave dropped 7-8 each and Malting and Walkerville were unchanged.

Trading dragged from the opening, the hour delay in opening the New York Market operating as a check on business here because of the lack of interlisted leadership. Interlisted shares had a mild downward slant, Brazilian, C.P.R. and Ford A easing small fractions and Nickel just holding.

The Walker stocks ran into a little selling and the Common dropped to 44 1-4 and the preferred to 16 5-8. Slightly higher prices ruled this afternoon.

LEADERS PLAY A TIE GAME

Centre Loop Fixture at Stirling Brings Out Record Crowd

Stirling, Feb. 20 (Special)—A record crowd of hockey enthusiasts was at the local rink-side on Friday evening to witness the tilt between West Huntingdon and Zion Hill, first and second place holders in the Central League loop and were rewarded with a fast game which ended in a 2-all count. The second game of the double bill, that of Minto vs. Evergreen was less exciting and although Evergreen took the affair by a 5-1 count, the game is negligible as far as the league standing is concerned as Huntingdon, Zion and Cannifton are firmly entrenched in first, second and third positions respectively.

The West Huntingdon-Zion Hill fixture opened with a bang when Townshend took the first of a number of dangerous shots on the Huntingdon goal. McGowan, Mott and Wright of the Huntingdon squad looked in a likely scoring position at different points but it was not until just before the bell sounded that Mott opened the scoring by beating Seeley in the Zion nets on a nice clean shot after stickhandling his way through the Zion phalanx. Penalties were meted out to Parks of Zion and McGowan of the opposition.

Zion Hill came back in the second canto to press the play and even the count when Ken Denyes of the defense batted home the puck to beat Sarles for the first Zion counter while playing a man short, Townshend cooling off at the time in the penalty box. This lad incidentally turned out to be the "bad man" of the team and in addition to paying frequent visits to the cooler had to be separated from McGowan of Huntingdon team to avoid an argument in which fists might be involved. No further scoring was recorded although several goals were ruined by trips. Penalties went to J. McGowan 2, and Townshend 2.

Zion missed a grand opportunity to score in the opening minutes of the final frame when Parks missed an open net. Mott menaced Seeley continually but failed to beat that boy again. Caverly put Zion in the lead when he poked in the gypsum from directly in front of the goal on a Townshend assist. Play continued fast and no further tally was recorded until just before the gong sounded when Kerby of Huntingdon slipped in the second counter for his team to tie the score at 2-all. Penalties went to Townshend 2, McGowan 2, and Wright.

Outstanding for Huntingdon were Wright, Mott, Kerby and J. McGowan, while Townshend, Parks and Caverly were most effective for Zion. Both goalies were good and deserve no end of praise. The series has tightened up considerably with only one more double fixture to be played before the leaders are plunged into the playdowns.

The line-up:

Zion Hill—Ab. Seeley, goal; Ken Denyes and R. Sills, defense; R. Caverly, centre; H. Townshend and O. Parks, wings; subs, Pat Hayes and H. Ketcheson.

West Huntingdon—T. Sarles, goal; J. McGowan and P. Murray, defense; H. Mott, centre; C. Wright and S. Kerby, wings; subs, G. McGowan, E. Murray, D. Cooke.

Referee—Earl Wallace.

In the Evergreen-Minto game, Evergreen took a two goal lead in the first frame when M. McGie and Perc. Gibson each netted a goal. In the second period Minto attempted to stage a comeback when Scott tallied but no further Minto score was registered. Gibson of Evergreen added three more goals to wind up the game with a 5-1 count. Penalties went to C. McGee and B. Heath. Mumby was in the Minto twine in the first period by was replaced by Tanner in the second stanza.

The line up:

Minto—Mumby, Tanner, goal; Henderson, Tomlinson, defense; N. Potts, centre; K. Cooke and L. Hagerman, wings; subs, Bailiss, L. Tanner, Scott.

Evergreen—W. Rodgers, goal; C. McGee, O. Casement, defence; P. Gibson, centre; M. McGee and K. Stapley, wings; sub. Bill Heath.

Referee—Earl Wallace.

KING LEOPOLD III. AND QUEEN OF BELGIUM

Friday they were the Duke and Duchess of Brabant, Crown Prince Leopold and Crown Princess Astrid of Belgium, enjoying a holiday in the Alps. Saturday they were King and Queen of the Belgians. Sudden and tragic death removed their beloved King Albert, and Belgians this week will watch with mingled feelings of joy and sorrow, the coronation of a new king, Leopold III. The above photo was taken on their most recent visit to London.

World Mourns The Passing of King Albert

The world mourns the sudden and tragic death of King Albert, third king of Belgium. Indulging in his favorite recreation of mountain-climbing, the king fell 36 feet to his death when a rock became dislodged. He will be succeeded by his son, Crown Prince Leopold, who will ascend to the throne as Leopold III. Above is shown a recent picture of King Albert and Queen Elizabeth.

AN INTIMATE STUDY OF THE LATE KING

Ironic that the chief hobby of King Albert of Belgium should have resulted in his death. Here is an intimate study of the king of the Belgians made a short while before his tragic slide to death when a rock loosened from a cliff he was climbing. Mountain climbing was his favorite recreation.

GRILLS GARAGE BEATEN BY 7-2

Meraw For Tweed With Three Goals Outstanding Player

Tweed, Feb. 20 (Special)—By virtue of a well-deserved win over Grills' Garage on Friday night, Tweed intermediates remained in the running for a play-off position. After submitting to defeat by one-sided scores in three previous engagements, the locals came out of their slump with a vengeance and defeated their opponents by a score of 7 to 2. The game, however, was not as one-sided as the score indicates, as the visitors had their share of chances. Time after time they outguessed the defense only to see their shots miss the net by inches when the Tweed net guardian was apparently at their mercy. On other occasions Thompson, who played a stellar game in goal, smothered, batted out and kicked out shots from all angles, and was the brilliant star of the game. Meraw, with three goals to his credit, was the leading goal getter and missed several others. His play was brilliant at all times. Maguire, Rupert, A. Geraldi and Shanque were the other marksmen for Tweed. A pleasing feature of the locals' play was their combination work which had been noticeably lacking in previous home games. Every goal was scored after two or three man attacks.

Belleville's goals were scored from scrambles, H. Canning and Day being the successful marksmen. Davies, in goal, for Belleville, played his usual good game and had no chance on any of the shots that got by him. He stopped plenty of others that were equally hard and made the attacking players get close in if they hoped to score. Blaker and Connors were absent from the visitors' line-up and were missed. The two Cannings and Day played as good hockey as usual and were very unlucky not to score several goals. The game was very clean, only one penalty being inflicted, Belleville drawing it. S. R. Curry and G. Cordy were the referees. The score by periods was 4-1, 5-2, and 7-2.

Grills' Garage—Goal, Davies; defense, Henn and Seamark; centre, H. Canning; wings, J. Canning, Day; subs, Ridley, Walsh.

Tweed—Goal, Thompson; defense, Quinn, La Fontaine; centre, Maguire; wings, Rupert and Meraw; subs, Orr, F. Geraldi, A. Geraldi and Shanque.

PREVENT SALE BELOW COST

New Plan Under NRA Will Eliminate Fixing of Prices

(Copyright, 1934)
(By The Associated Press)

Washington, Feb. 20—The NRA has created a new price formula, expected to lead to eventual abandonment of absolute price-fixing.

It is designed to prevent sales below "reasonable cost." Officials of the recovery agency feel that if the plan proves successful it will make more arbitrary price-fixing unnecessary.

The new scheme, as set forth in an official memorandum not yet released to the public, proposes a standard price provision for codes. It would permit an industry to determine "reasonable" costs in an "emergency" where destructive price cutting might endanger the maintenance of a code.

5 DAY WEEK PLAN FAVORED

Large Cities' Papers Under Code of President Roosevelt

Washington, Feb. 20—(AP)—In approving the newspaper publishers code President Roosevelt made a request that papers with more than 75,000 circulation in cities of 750,000 or more place their news staffs immediately on a five-day 40-hour week basis.

The President's executive order required that a study be made within 60 days to determine permanent policy on the employment of children as delivery boys and paper salesmen, and a further study to establish hour provisions for the editorial staffs of all newspapers.

In accepting the code, the President said he was "dissatisfied" with its child labor provisions, which provide that boys under 16 may sell papers out of school hours between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. in the winter time and 7 a.m. and 8 p.m. in summer.

Years Before Europe Challenges Canadian Hockey Supremacy

Czecks And Germans Show Most Superiority Says Ottawa Coach

Ottawa, Feb. 20 (CP) — Europe has the hockey bug but it will be years before Canada's supremacy will be challenged, in the opinion of T. G. Lowrey, coach of Ottawa Shamrocks who toured the continent this winter. At the same time he said Europe affords few opportunities for Canadian players and fewer for coaches.

Although Shamrocks lost only one game on the tour, being beaten by an American team once out of three games, Mr. Lowrey said he was impressed by the quality of the European game. This was noticeable particularly in Czechko-Slovakia where one of the Prague teams held the Shamrocks to a tie. With the Germans, the Czecks showed the Canadians the most natural ability and have taken the game seriously.

When Shamrocks were held to a tie in Prague, three Canadians played against them but next year the Czecks will allow only one Canadian to a team, in an effort to stimulate native ability. They also will endeavour to have other European nations follow this regulation, thus cutting down the openings for Canadian players.

The average Czeck or German is as fine a skater and as good a back-checker as a Canadian, Mr. Lowrey said, but seemed lost when he had a defence beaten. This inability to score goals might be overcome by competent Canadian coaches but the fierce nationalistic spirit of the people frowned on importing them.

The United Kingdom, France and other parts of Europe never will produce high-class hockey players because of climatic conditions, continued Mr. Lowery. Despite this, England has taken to the game, hundreds being turned away with top seat prices at £1 when Shamrocks played there. Several big rinks are being built, including one that will seat 8,000. Practically all the good players in England are Canadians, many of them university students with no records of past brilliance at home.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE BELLE "BITTER SWEET"

It has been said that Noel Coward the theatre's most versatile playwright, does not show off by his versatility; it is his versatility that shows him off.

Movie goers found him sophisticated, satirical and farcical in "Private Lives" and powerful, dramatic and epochal in "Cavalcade". Now in "Bitter Sweet", a United Artists picture showing today and Wednesday, matinee daily at the Belle Theatre, he is frankly and delightfully sentimental.

"Bitter Sweet" was originally an operetta. Florenz Ziegfeld presented it elaborately on the New York stage several seasons ago with Evalyn Laye in the leading role. Peggy Wood played it for two years in London. This picture, incidentally, is the first that ever bore Mr. Ziegfeld's name to appear before the public in any form since his death over a year ago. It's a great entertainment....this sweet, but not sticky, "Bitter Sweet".... and you will be storing away in your memory the name of Anna Neagle, who is not only luscious to look at, but has a manner, personality and voice that put her in line for the top ranks of stardom. She is fragile blonde, intensely feminine and very lovely, and does not make the extravagant things said about her beauty seem absurd. Fernand Graavey has all the attributes necessary to make the hero as lovable to the audience as he is to Sari (Anna Neagle).

"I'll See You Again", the haunting Noel Coward melody is again introduced in the film version of "Bitter Sweet". This song is sung by Anna Neagle and Fernand Graavey, who also sings "Dear Little Cafe" and "The Call of Life". Stuart Robertson, popular English baritone, sings the rousing drinking song "Tokay", and Ivy St. Helier sings two songs in her inimitable way. "Bitter Sweet" has been given a beautiful film production.

"Female" is Different

One of the most startling love themes ever presented on the screen will be unfolded with the showing of the companion feature offering on the same program "Female", with Ruth Chatterton in the stellar role. George Brent plays the leading role. The popular Belle Current News will be presented on the same program. The last complete sh nightly will commence at 8.30 p

She stood back and surveyed Charity with her head to one side. Charity gazed back silently at the clear blue eyes—the naturally wavy auburn hair—the strong clean face. In a moment they both laughed, Charity nervously. Then Billie's straight little nose wrinkled in a funny grin.

"Gosh, I'm glad you're human," she confessed then, and wiped mock perspiration from her brow. "I was scared to death you'd be hoity-toity and all that sort of thing."

Charity laughed. She felt relieved. As though she'd found an old friend after being lost a long time among strangers. "Meaning what?"

Billie lowered her voice. "Give any of these gals a crack at the Temple millions for a few days, and they'd be hanging with loot from the ears down. I thought you'd meet us with a lorgnette and your best London accent."

Charity gave a low, amused laugh, and confessed, "I'm scared stiff, too, Miss Miller. I think they're all going to highhat me."

"Billie to you." The red-head lowered her voice again. "Stick around me. I know how to handle these babies. It's the first chance several of them have had to get a square meal in weeks. Most of them are rehearsing or haven't had a job in months. I'm a dress model. So I eat off and on."

Charity laughed gaily, and took Billie's arm. "You're my bodyguard this week-end. Come, we'll find your room."

During the evening that followed—through dinner, dancing, moonlight walks along the beach—twosomes—Charity might as well have been a stick of furniture. None of the guests, except Billie seemed to know she existed.

It was all a vague nightmare to Charity, until she went to bed to sleep fitfully. She slept late the next morning, and awoke to find most of the crowd had breakfasted and were amusing themselves. Some on the tennis courts, others on the golf links. Several were at the stables ready to go horseback riding. A few had wandered down to the beach.

Doug, she saw, was playing tennis with Chickie Belle and another couple. He seemed to be sticking quite close to his model, Charity thought. And was a little glad that he could take an interest in some one besides Yanner Vandergriff.

[illegible] breathed easily after lunch [illegible] when neither Yanner nor Hatch had shown up. Since no one paid any attention to her anyway she decided to avoid the crowd and keep to her room. It was there that Billie burst in upon her late in the afternoon.

"Say, where were you all morning?" Billie demanded, throwing herself into a chair and picking up a magazine to fan her flushed face.

"Sleeping," Charity yawned lazily, "and wondering where you were."

"If I tell you how I've been spending the day," Billie laughed "you won't believe me. I've been out in the housekeeper's cottage helping her get the vegetables ready for dinner."

Charity loked her surprise. "Isn't Mrs. Muggins a darling? I had dinner with her last evening and spent the night in her cottage."

Billie looked wistful. "She reminds me so much of my mother I just had to get acquainted with her. Once a farmer's daughter—always a farmer's daughter."

"Were you brought up on a farm too " Charity asked eagerly.

"Kansas." Billie wrinkled her nose again. "But it's better for my business to say I come from Boston. Where were yod born?"

"In the sticks of Iowa." Charity grinned and held out her hand. "Shake!"

"That makes us brother Elks." Billie got up and gave Charity a resounding slap on the back. "[illegible] is why I came to tell you you're not going to go slinking around hiding from these mugs any longer. Everybody's on the beach. Get your bathing suit. I'll bet mine and come over here and dress."

Before Charity had a chance to hesitate Billie was out the door. There was nothing to do but go—although Charity turned weak at the thought. No one would believe it would be the first time a man had ever seen her on a bathing suit. It would be a terrific ordeal to walk on the beach.

Charity was changing into her bathing things in the bathroom when Billie came back to slip into her frill of a black suit. In a moment Charity walked out in blue. She stepped back wonderingly at the surprised exclamation that broke from Billie's lips. There must be something terribly the matter with her new suit. Billie walked toward her.

"Turn around," she said excitedly, "and walk over there."

Charity obeyed mechanically, her face burning. "Wh— what's the matter?" She asked timidly when Billie shook her head.

"Matter?" Billie sat down on the bed and shook her head again. "You've got the most beautiful body I ever laid my eyes on. Like ivory. Why do you wear things that hide it?"

Charity looked at her blankly. "Beautiful—me?" She laughed a little wildly. "No one has ever accused me of such a thing before."

"It's your own fault," Billie said rudely, but in a way that did not offend her hostess. "Why do you wear blue? It looks terrible on you." Billie walked over to her. "Here, peel that blue thing off your shoulders and let me see your back."

Charity was so amazed that she obeyed. Billie threw up her hands. "Charity Temple! You must hate yourself."

Charity's face was beet-red when she found her vice to answer. "I—I don't know what you mean."

"You've got a million-dollar back and you covered it up last night with a blue rag that looked as though it came out of the Ark. Your legs are as lovely as any that ever stepped on a stage and you dress them in service weight stockings and flat heels—and wear long skirts."

Charity sat down on the edge of her bed and stared unbelievingly as Billie went on.

"No wonder your husband is out chasing around with blondes and red heads. You're too modest— or crazy!"

Charity knew Billie was serious. Like an automaton, she moved over to the long mirror and looked at herself. Billie paused for breath and watched her in silence. When Charity turned her face was white.

"I—I can't believe you—really mean it," she stammered.

"But I do," Billie said earnestly. "I swear I am not kidding you honey. Please believe me. I—I like you. That's why I don't like to see you be such a fool."

Charity felt like crying. She stood helplessly, shaken with uncertainty. In a moment Billie jumped up. "Take off that blue suit."

"It—it's the only one I've got." Charity backed away hesitatingly.

"You're going to wear mine," Billie told her firmly.

"Oh—no," Charity looked wildly at the sun-back silky affair that would have gone into her handbag.

"You'l do as I say." Billie's little chin set firmly. "I'm going to wear yours—and you're going to wear mine. I'm going to make you give yourself one break—if you never get another."

There was so much authority in Billie's voice that Charity obeyed like a child. When Billie had jumped into Charity's suit she looked into the mirror to grin facetiously.

"Come out from behind that banket, Miss Miller," she ordered. "I knew you WHEN."

Then she stood back to survey Charity who stood before the mirror looking aghast at the broad expanse of uncovered back; at her legs, slender, white, and straight as a statue of marble.

"You've nothing to be ashamed of Venus," Billie grinned again. "It's me you'l have to apologize for—looking so all wool and a yard wider."

"I—I can't go out like this." Charity gasped again, and Billie laughed long and loudly.

"You'll live! And be the belle of Long Island Sound, sister."

Billie sat down on the bed and looked Charity over again. Charity stared back helplessly. "Wh—what are you going to take off me now?" she smiled feebly.

"About five feet of hair—if you'll let me." Billie shook her head in dismay. "That mop of yours just doesn't fit the picture. How old are you?"

"Twenty-four."

"You look thirty." Billie said cruelly, "and it's your awful hair that's doing it. Where are your scissors?"

Charity's hands went to her head in horror. "Oh, I couldn't let you cut my hair."

"Oh, yes, you could—" Billie grinned and walked over to a sewing basket on the table. "I worked in a beauty parlor three years before I became a model. I'm the best little hair cutter you ever saw."

Charity could never have told in a million years what possessed her to walk over and take the scissors from the basket and hand them to Billie. Then she sat down on a chair and the tears rained down her cheeks while Billie snipped.

CHAPTER TWELVE

Billie looked Charity over professionally. "With your oval, slender face, I know just what you need. A Joan of Arc hair cut. Straight around your head below your ears—and bangs, rather long. You won't know yourself."

Charity was speechless. She felt as though she were cutting herself away from everything she had ever held dear. Her long black shiny hair had been her one great pride.

Billie worked silently for awhile. Several times she stood back to look and smile sympathetically at Charity's tears. When she had finished she sighed happily. "That's a darn good job, Mrs. Temple—if I do say so myself. Where's your make-up?"

"I—I haven't anything but powder," Charity confessed apologetically.

Billie said threateningly. "If you look in the mirror before I'm through with you, I'll smack you down. I'm going to get my war paint."

Charity covered her face with her hands and waited miserably till Billie ran back with her make-up. Then she sat patiently while Billie worked away earnestly at her cheek and lips. In a little while she stood away, her head back to one side speculatively.

"I'm going to take off about a yard of those heavy eyebrows of yours. They spoil all my hard work."

Charity suffered while Billie took her tweezers and plucked. In a few minutes Billie took another look—then grinned broadly. "You may gaze upon yourself now, Cleopatra."

With shaking knees, Charity walked to the mirror. But the girl she saw there was so transformed that she stood rooted to the spot. It could not be she—Charity Jones Temple. It was all a dream.

For there before her was a vision of white, slender youth. Charity knew in one glance she looked ten years younger. Her black hair hung around her face in shiny curves; the bangs and the slender eyebrows enhanced her gray eyes until they glowed like stars. Or, perhaps it was the faint touch of color Billie had put in her cheeks. She opened her mouth to discover that her teeth gleamed like pearls against the rose of her rouged mouth.

Silently she turned and held her arms out to Billie. Billie hugged her happily. "You're pleased, aren't you?"

"It—just isn't me," Charity choked then. "bu—but I do like it."

Billie grabbed her arm. "We're going down to the beach while you are still sold on yourself—and knock 'em dead."

Charity had gone so far in letting Billie make her over that she followed with no protest, But her heart beat painfully. Billie knew there wasn't a girl in Doug Temple's party who looked any more attractive at the moment than his own wife. And it would please her no end to burn a few of the tabbies who had laughed behind their hostess' back.

They were within a few feet of the crowd when suddenly Charity stopped, to grab Billie's arm fearfully. "Look, there's a man in the water—calling her help. He's —— way out."

In a second Charity was streaking down the sand, her black hair flying.

No one recognised the tall figure that dashed down the beach and into the water.

Charity had taken the situation in at a glance when she heard the man's cry for help—and the screams of the girls. Only one man, she saw as she plunged into the icy Sound, was making an attempt to swim out.

"Go back!" she called as she passed the slow swimming would-be rescuer and realized it was Doug. She was sure he did not recognise her.

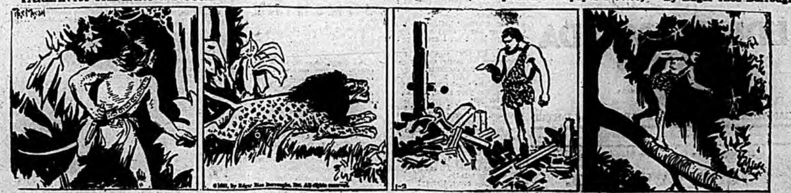
TARZAN AT THE EARTH'S CORE

(Metropolitan Newspaper Service) By Edgar Rice Burroughs



©1933, by Edgar Rice Burroughs, Inc. All rights reserved.
1-2

Across the thick carpet of broken twigs, branches and leaves on the jungle floor, Numa, the grim stalker, followed his prey. Your ears could not have caught the slightest sound of the lion's movement. Yet the keen sense of the lone man-thing told him that some danger lurked nearby. Often he turned his sharp, black eyes intently toward the dismal shadows. Now he unloosed his knife and quickened his speed through the dense vegetation.

Soon he came to an almost treeless area of considerable extent. Here he paused as if unwilling to leave the security of the great tree branches above him. But some need must have urged him onward for after a moment of hesitation, he moved off across the little plain and Numa, watching from the concealing cover of the jungle, now seeing his quarry apparently helpless, crept forth into the moonlight, raised his tail stiffly erect—and charged.

Into this same remote corner of the dark continent after two long, weary months of hardships, had come Tarzan of the Apes. Returning to his African estates, the ape-man found to his dismay that a bitter tribal war had waged during his absence. The jungle had almost reclaimed his once fertile fields. Most cruel blow of all, he could only guess what fate had overtaken the beautiful, gracious Lady Jane. Only a slight, single clew led him to hope that she still was alive.

Starting out alone in search of the one he loved, Tarzan succeeded in locating the village where for awhile she had been captive. Here, in the cannibals' country, bits of evidence convinced the ape-man that whoever held his beloved prisoner must have fled toward the Congo regions. Hunger, thirst and disappointment were his only reward for many weeks. But, grim-jawed with determination, Tarzan pressed forward until he had left far behind him all familiar scenes. Neither man nor beast had he met

John Ryan, Marmora Pioneer, Recalls Days of River Driving

Marmora, Feb. 20—Among the few local men who have spent years in the shanties and river driving without consuming the liquor of those days, John Ryan, 84 years old, resident of Marmora is to be numbered. Also strange to relate he has never fired a shot from a rifle. An inveterate smoker however, he testifies that he has used the pipe since he was five. In those days the clay variety was in vogue. This sturdy old pioneer was born on Oct. 19th, 1849, one of the sons of Patrick Ryan and Mary McAvoy. Patrick Ryan came to this country from Ireland when very young.

For years he lived in Huntingdon Township where his son John and other children were born. John attended school in the 3rd concession of Rawdon Township. When he was about 21 years of age he did his first work away from home. For about a year he was employed by the late Mrs. Sarah Lennon who with her two daughters Rachel and Mary lived on 100 acre farm on 5th concession of Marmora Township. The bridge crossing Beaver Creek at this spot being still known as Lennon's Bridge.

The life of the shanty could not be resisted so in Rathbun's and Gilmour's camp he found an outlet for his great strength. Few could excel him i nthe art of handling logs. He drove a team for a great part of that time and for a few years was a river driver.

The two smartest river drivers he ever knew were Tom Lavalle of Trenton and Dave McGarvey of Marmora. The former was the only man that could put the latter off a log. Lavalle later went to the States and amassed a little fortune through carrying off prizes in log rolling contests there.

The largest body of logs that Mr. Ryan remembers seeing extended from Beaver Creek to Crow Bay, the distance of approximately nine miles, being a mixed drive of the Rathbun's and Gilmour Company. Close upon fifty five years ago he settled on land in the 3rd concession of Marmora Township. He later married Mary Ann, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Michael Bedore of Marmora Township who shares with him and the children at home the creation of a cheery home atmosphere.

Two brothers and a sister of Mr. Ryan have also well exceeded the allotted span of life and share with him good health and spirits. Frank who is 90 years of age resides on the homestead in Rawdon Township. Thomas lives on his farm in Marmora Township. Mrs. John Keenan the sister resides in Campbellford. Mr. Ryan is a devout member of the Roman Catholic Church. As a boy he attended church at Madoc when the parish priest there was Rev. Father E. P. Lawlar. Father Lawlar held mass in Marmora seventy five years ago being succeeded by Father Davis. Mr. Ryan has many memories of these two clerics. Though his vision beginning to fail and infirmities incidental to old age overtaking him Mr. and Mrs. Ryan moved into the village about six years ago. Though he is of a quiet disposition and slow to speak, Mr. Ryan treasures visits from his friends particularly from those who shared with him the vigors of shanty life, over half a century ago, and he enjoys a good joke.

St. Andrew's Y.P.

The second meeting of the St. Andrew's Young People's Association was held in St. Andrew's hall on Wednesday with Geo. O'Neil, President, in charge. Rev. C. W. Hollingsworth conducted the opening exercises. A short business session was succeeded by a sing song. The Bible study was taken by the rector, who gave a talk upon "Lent and its Observance." Garth Sabine discoursed upon current events and Grace Prentice read a paper on St. Valentine's day, and its origin. A contest and a few games filled out a good evenings program.

Under the auspices of St. Andrew's Men's Association an enjoyable valentine social was held in St. Andrew's hall on Tuesday evening the event drawing a good attendance. The program opened with community singing led by Geo. Woodhouse, next Mr. and Mrs. H. Jones rendered a beautiful duet in Welsh.

Vocal solos were also given by H. Jones and G. Woodhouse and pianoforte solos were played by Marjorie Loveless and F. Sanderson. Two contests and some games provided a lot of amusement. A debate, resolved, "that a car is of more use to a man, than a wife" proved hard judging, so was deemed a draw. Lunch served in cafeteria style brought the evening's delights to a close.

Following this the minutes of previous meeting, reports, and correspondence were given by the Secretary. Another unusual item was taken up that of sending a letter of congratulations to Mrs. James Nobes, who is one of the institutes active members, on the arrival of twin daughters last week.

Miss Miriam Savage gave the month's Current Events very fully, after which Miss Flora Sanderson gave a piano solo. Two good papers, one on "Legislation" by Mrs. B. C. Hubbell and one on "Relief" by Mrs. C. Spry, were presented by these ladies. Lively community singing between the different numbers gave each one a chance to take part in the program. A "Cake Contest" was won by Mrs. P. N. Marett. The hostesses, Mrs. D. L. Curtis, Mrs. Pack and Mrs. Sabine served refreshments at the close of the program.

To help you, and others, and so that you may have positive proof of the truth, Mrs. Normandin voluntarily has stated before a Notary how Fruit-a-tives helped her get rid of indigestion. She says:—

Mrs. Adena Normandin, Montreal, Que.

"I Make Oath and say that I was sleepy and dizzy after meals. I suffered badly from indigestion. Everything I ate formed a lump in the stomach and gas which caused heartburn. I found that by taking Fruit-a-tives my indigestion disappeared. I am lively and energetic all day now."

A statement to the above effect was made under oath before a Notary Public at Montreal, November 3rd, 1932. Original on file.

BORE WALL STEAL SILK

$5,000 Worth of Cloth Trucked Away By Thieves

TORONTO, Feb. 20—(CP)—Boring a hole through a wall on the premises of the Canadian Celanese Company, burglars removed 150 bolts of silk valued at $5,000, it was revealed when the plant was opened today.

Using a false key to gain entrance to the building through the back door, the thieves were balked by a thin wall between them and the room where the valuable silk was stored. They had come prepared, police say, and had easily cut their way through into the store room where the material was kept.

The 150 bolts were probably hoisted onto a truck, backed against the rear door of the building, police believed.

URGE PROBE RE-OPENING

Windsor, Ont., Feb. 19.—Windsor city council today voted six to one to petition the Ontario government to reopen the Children's Shelter probe or else review the evidence already taken and the findings issued by "competent authorities". Mayor Croll alone voted against the proposal.

SEEKING TREASURE

SIR MALCOLM CAMPBELL

SIR ALAN COBHAM

Somewhere in the desert of Kalahari in South Africa there lies a gold reef—at least Sir Alan Cobham and Sir Malcolm Campbell think so. These two famous Britishers, Cobham, the great flier, and Campbell, the speed king, have organized an expedition into Africa's interior in search of the treasure.

Step out into the SUNSHINE

How many days of your life are lost in feeling under par? How many hours which might be bright are dull and dispirited?

Half-hearted days are frequently due to common constipation. It clouds your waking hours, takes the sunshine out of living. Yet it can be overcome so easily by eating a delicious cereal.

Laboratory tests show Kellogg's ALL-BRAN provides "bulk" and vitamin B to aid elimination. ALL-BRAN is also a fine source of iron.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is much like that in leafy vegetables. Isn't this "cereal way" pleasanter than risking patent medicines?

Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. With each meal, in chronic cases. If not relieved this way, see your doctor.

Serve ALL-BRAN as a cereal or use in muffins, breads, omelets, etc. In the red-and-green package. At all grocers. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

NEWS BRIEFS AND ODDITIES

Detroit, Feb. 21 (CP)—Seven-year-old Robert Smith said he battled for nearly an hour with his German shepherd dog as the 100-pound animal knocked him into a snow drift and kept him there until his hands and feet were frozen. The dog, authorities said, tore most of the boy's clothing from his body. After he made his escape, Robert was taken to a hospital where physicians said they might have to amputate his right hand. The boy's father, a policeman, shot the dog.

Midville, Ga., Feb. 21 (CP)—The worm has turned—rats are killing cats.

Thomas Drew, ice factory manager here, informed relief workers engaged in rat eradication that the army of rodents are putting their old enemy to rout.

Drew exhibited a large dead cat. He said rats did it and he knew of four other cats having met the same fate.

Boston, Feb. 21 (CP)—Charles Ponzi's outlook on life was slightly more encouraging today.

The "get-rich-quick wizard" to whom thousands ran with their savings back in 1919 has secured a job as a wholesale provision salesman. He will probably begin his duties immediately.

Ponzi, recently released from State Prison after serving the minimum of a seven to nine years sentence for his investment activities, is free in $1,000 bail pending a decision on a warrant calling for his deportation to Italy.

Grand Haven, Mich., Feb. 21 (CP)—Chief Edward Boomgaard of the fire department believes in obeying orders. Recently the city forbade the firemen to answer calls from outside the city limits. So when the chief was notified his summer cottage was on fire, he sped out, across the city limits alone. The cottage was destroyed.

Double Life Alleged, Business Man Accused as Brains of Hold-Ups

Warrants For Nevin And Three Others At Montreal

50,000 INVOLVED

Quartette Are Accused of Many Robberies in Montreal

Montreal, Feb. 21 (CP)—Warrants were issued today for Walker Gerald Nevin, well known insurance agent, formerly of Toronto, for the past few years, claimed by police to have been the brains of a series of bank hold-ups in Montreal in the past few years.

Police claim that Nevin led a double life, carrying on business and well respected among his business associates, while at the same time he was planning and executing the robberies.

Warrants have also been sworn out for Alfred Durocher, or Desrocher, Montreal, and another man and a woman whose identity was not revealed.

$50,000 Taken

The series of bank robberies and similiar crimes is claimed by authorities to have involved nearly fifty thousand dollars.

The four are charged with the following hold-ups: St. Zotique Branch of the Royal Bank of Canada, Jan. 30, 1934, $10,000; Cherrier Branch Banque Canadienne Nationale, Oct. 25, 1932, $16,000; Beaubien Branch Banque Canadienne Nationale, Feb. 8, 1933, $13,000; Laurier Branch Banque Provinciale, Sept. 30, 1933, $4,000. In the latter robbery $2,100 of American Express and Canadian Pacific Express travellers' cheques were taken, some of which were cashed in New York and Chicago.

Police said today Nevin's double life was exposed when it was discovered an automobile used in the Royal Bank hold-up three weeks ago was registered in his name. Nevin has not been seen in Montreal since then.

Previous to entering the insurance business, according to police officials, Nevin had been employed here and in Toronto as a paint salesman.

In California Prison

The authorities said they believe Nevin and Desrocher met in California when they were both serving sentences in prison. A telegram from the San Francisco police department indicated Nevin had been released from prison there in March 1926.

Detectives raided Nevin's apartment here and found pistol ammunition of five different calibres and a quantity of shotgun shells.

From documents found in the apartment police concluded Nevin had made a trip to the tropics after each robbery.

A statement from the police department was as follows:

"There is no doubt that, as a respectable insurance man, Nevin associated with a great many eminently respectable citizens and we trust that some of these may be able to supply us with information that will help us catch him."

PUBLISHER HIT ON HEAD

E. P. Adler Dodges Blows in Hotel Corridor

Chicago, Feb. 21 (AP)—E. P. Adler, publisher of the Davenport, Iowa, Times and head of the Lee Syndicate of Newspapers, was attacked by two men in a hotel corridor today in an apparent kidnapping attempt.

Slugged twice, Adler dodged the full effect of the blows and ran down the corridor from his room, eluding his assailants.

One of them was arrested.

In the room next to Adler's the detectives found a large trunk in which air holes had been poked. They said it was apparent the two men intended to lock Adler in the trunk and have him carried out.

The publisher was here to attend a meeting of the Inland Daily Press Association.

At 7.30 a. m. today Adler stepped from his room, locked the door and suddenly the two men jumped from the next door and slugged him with blackjacks. So severe were the blows that several stitches had to be taken. Nevertheless Adler broke away from the pair and summoned help.

CARS FACTOR STEEL TRADE

Operations in Steel at 44 1-2 Per Cent "Iron Age" Says

New York, Feb. 21 (AP)—The steel operating rate has pushed to 44 1-2 per cent. of capacity this week, up 3½ points over last week and 25½ points above the corresponding period of 1933, "Iron Age" reported today.

"Automotive demand," said the review "is still the chief single factor in the rise of steel activities. With evidence that this will be even augmented, with the public works' administrations millions now beginning to penetrate basic industries and with the railroad rehabilitation programme in definite action, the steel industry is expectant of well sustained demand and weekly increases in volume.

Economonstrator Demonstrates Rise and Fall of Nation Quickly

Washington, Feb. 21 (AP)—Comes now the economonstrator.

But the machine itself is the simplest part of a new theory —"econodynamics"—which it is intended to demonstrate.

Both the machine and the theory are announced by Dr. H. C. Dickinson, United States Bureau of Standards Engineer and Scientist.

Dr. Dickinson says that if the success of his theory is demonstrated he feels the practice and study of economics will be reduced to an exact science.

The economonstrator, a remarkable array of tubes and glass containers through which liquid is circulated by two tiny electric pumps, is said by Dr. Dickinson to be able to demonstrate in a few minutes the entire economics of the rise and fall of a nation.

Colleagues are enthusiastic about the new theory and say its importance will soon be recognized. The author will present it to the Washington section of The Society of Automotive Engineers tonight.

Prince of Sweden Disowned Because of Love of Commoner

Berlin, Feb. 21 (AP)—For love of a commoner—a most attractive commoner—a Prince of Sweden has been given the royal boot.

The titled suitor who smarted today under the displeasure of the King of Sweden, is Prince Sigvard, Duke of Uppland, second son of the Crown Prince of Sweden. The girl in the case is the fair-haired and beautiful Erika Patzek, an actress of the German films.

Prince Sigvard, an assistant director at a Berlin motion picture studio, has been disowned because of his refusal to break with the actress, who is the daughter of a well-to-do Berlin business man.

The Swedish News Agency disclosed the situation in a brief official statement last night saying that "Prince Sigvard arrived at London recently and there made preparations to marry a woman of German nationality. The Prince took this step against the expressed will of the King and the Crown Prince . . . ."

Must Surrender Title

According to the statement issued last night in Stockholm, the Prince, who is 27 years old, must surrender his royal title and his military rank, and become plain "Mr. Bernadotte." Henceforth, too, he will be greeted only as a "guest" by the Royal family.

The affair parallels that of Prince Lennart Bernadotte, son of Prince William (second son of King Gustav), who was married in 1932 to Karin Nissavandt, daughter of a Stockholm industrialist. He was disowned. Later both King Gustav and Prince William withdrew their objections to the marriage.

AWARD $5,000 TO COL. CRAIG

Mrs. Craig Also Injured in Car Crash Given Unstated Damages

Kingston, Ont., Feb. 21 (CP)—Award of $5,000 to Col. W. H. Craig and an unstated amount to Mrs. Craig, was given today by Mr. Justice Patrick Kerwin, in Supreme Court in the action of the Craigs against W. B. Dalton of this city and F. C. Elford, of Ottawa. The action followed an automobile accident a year ago near Prescott, when the Craigs were coming to Kingston in Dalton's car, which was struck by Elford's car.

Mr. Justice Kerwin said that he would announce later the amount of damages awarded to Mrs. Craig, who was seriously injured in the accident.

A counter-claim for damages was made by Elford against Dalton, and Mr. Justice Kerwin found that in the accident Elford was 60 per cent. negligent and Dalton 40 per cent. He allowed Dalton the sum of $600 and Elford the sum of $257.

T. FOSTER, ILL CARRIED FROM BURNING HOME

Residence Near Bloomfield Destroyed at Noon Today

Believed to have been caused by sparks from the chimney which lodged in the roof top and blazed fiercely out of control before neighbors or the family could organize to fight it, a fire which broke out shortly after 11.30 o'clock this morning almost completely destroyed a large frame house owned by Mr. Theodore Foster, a short distance northeast of Bloomfield, Prince Edward County. Loss to the home and part of the contents will be in the neighborhood of $3,500 it is believed. Insurance will cover part.

In the home at the time, Mr. Theodore Foster, ill and confined to his bed was carried out of danger by neighbors as soon as the family could summon assistance. Work of saving some of the contents of the house was then started, but little was saved owing to the rapid spread of the flames. Mr Foster and family are at present staying at the home of his father nearby while arrangements are being made to commence rebuilding.

EASTERN U. S. STAGGERED BY HEAVY STORM

Many Towns Isolated And Death Toll Reaches 25

60 MILE GALE

Execution of 3 Postponed Due to Non Arrival of Executioner

New York, Feb. 21 (CP)— Cold that knifed to the marrow staggered the eastern United States today as it strove to shake off paralysis caused by the "worst blizzard since '88." At least 25 persons lay dead, struck down by the storm.

Many towns were still practically isolated, transportation systems crawled at a snail's pace in numerous spots, and whistling winds imperilled shipping. The mercury plunged toward zero, and the cold glazed the land with ice, hardening snowdrifts that impeded traffic.

No immediate relief was in sight. The frigid wave extended as far south as Florida.

New England, hardest hit by the slashing 60-mile gale, was still buried in many places under snowdrifts 6 to 12 feet deep. There were at least 9 dead there, 10 in New York City, and 6 in Pennsylvania. New York City will spend $2,000,000 to dig out of the snow that marooned 500,000 workers in their homes and forced the stock exchange to open an hour late yesterday.

Highway traffic is still tied up in a knot in many places, but most trains are moving, although regular schedules were largely disregarded. Schools, courts and businesses were re-opening after suspending because of the storm.

Through the night 30 sailors stuck to the collier Northern Sword, which jammed ashore off Winthrop Head, near Boston. Coast Guardsmen with breeches buoy stood ready to take them off if smashing seas started to break up the vessel.

The storm gave three doomed slayers in Boston a few more hours of life. The executioner, Robert Elliott, was snowbound somewhere between New York and Boston, and so Herman Snyder, John A. Donnellon and Harry C. Bull could not be electrocuted at the appointed hour early today.

High Spots of Storm

A Boston train due in New York at 6.35 a.m. yesterday arrived at 5.45 p.m., the first to get through.

An expectant mother, Mrs. E. D. Mellier of Westbury, Long Island, started for the hospital in a doctor's car. It got stuck in a drift. A policeman got another car. It also became stuck. Then a tractor was hooked onto the car, and Mrs. Mellier reached the hospital in time to give birth to twins.

Fifteen trains carrying 3,000 or 4,000 persons were snowbound in Connecticut and Rhode Island yesterday.

A Boston-New York bus was caught in a drift in North Branford Conn., and 32 passengers, including two babies, took refuge in farm houses.

One Wall Street broker had his groom harness two horses to a sleigh to get to business. The Connecticut Light and Power Company sent repairmen out in bobsleds. One horse plunged out of sight in a snowdrift.

Trainman C. D. Drake of the New Haven Railroad, said "it's the worst storm in my 56 years of service.

Minor Train Wrecks

Two minor train wrecks in North Easton and Revere, Mass. injured four persons. The fishing vessel Hope Leslie was towed into Woods Hole, Mass., leaking after barely escaping seas that tore away her rudder.

Lips Betray Woman's Soul Temperament Not Her Eyes

Hollywood, Calif., Feb. 21 (AP) — Look at her lips, not into her eyes, says Henry Clive, noted artist, to know a woman's soul and temperament.

His beliefs, which contradict the theory that a woman's eyes are the "mirror of her soul," were expressed after he had completed a study of the lips of eight prominent motion picture actresses. They were Jean Harlow, Miriam Hopkins, Carole Lombard, Claudette Colbert, Ginger Rogers, Sally Rand, Esther Ralston and Lupe Velez.

"Miss Harlow's lips," he said, "are full and firm, indicating a temperament of great extremes, utter happiness or utter despair.

"Miss Hopkins' lips offer a great contrast. The upper lip is full, the lower one an almost horizontal line. To paint her on canvas an artist would have to understand the meaning of those lips. They tell one important thing. She is inwardly emotional, outwardly calm, giving to her countenance a sleek, sophisticated look.

"Sally Rand's lips by their fullness and suggestion of looseness reveal a woman of great determination.

"Miss Lombard's disclose a girl who could weather emotional storms without concern.

"Miss Colbert's disclose a nature that is strikingly ambitious.

"Miss Rogers' tell a story of contentment.

"Miss Ralston's lips denote great love for the domestic.

"Miss Velez," he concluded, "show strife, fighting and accomplishment."

MASKINONGE DISAPPEARING IS WARNING

Anglers Federation Aims to Conserve Fish by Use of Zones

THING OF PAST

Very Limited Range of Famous Game Fish is Mapped

Toronto, Feb. 21 (CP)—Canada's famous game fish, the maskinonge, is fast disappearing and unless immediate action is taken will be as scarce as "the carrier pigeon and the buffalo," Dr. Arthur James, President of the Ontario Anglers Federation told the Game and Fish Committee of the Legislature today.

Dr. James presented a brief from the federation suggesting the Province should be zoned to conserve game fish and in addition urged the appointment of a special biologist to devote his full time to the problem of maskinonge depletion.

On the maskinonge problem, he claimed the famous fish would "soon be a thing of the past like the carrier pigeon and the buffalo." There had been constant talk of protecting the maskinonge, but the question had been passed from one person to the other until danger now existed, the fish would soon be gone.

Slight Line of Travel

Maskinonge had a very limited range, he said, the line of their travel being so slight it could barely be outlined on the map. One of the chief difficulties, therefore, was distribution. Despite careful efforts of the States of Michigan, New York, Wisconsin, Minnesota, conservation departments there had found they had little success in propagation few of fish reaching fingerling size. Tremendous loss occurred because of the reluctance of the fish to leave their spawning jars to become "free swimmers."

The tourist business has now become so large there must be fish available and the department should be supplied with the necessary funds. It should be easy to get funds, take it out of the gasoline tax. The gas tax brought in $2,000,000 from the tourist trade and why shouldn't we have some of that, he asked.

R. E. Jones, Campbellford, asked the season for pickerel in the Trent system be put back to June 15 and expressed opposition to the $1 road licence fee now existing.

More Enforcement

E. R. Barrett, of Kingston presented a resolution from Frontenac Fish Association, urged more vigorous enforcement of laws in his area. The Game Warden had been removed from the district for a month last year and there should be protection provided in such cases.

Mr. Grimes said a Campbellford resort keeper had asked him to speak to the committee on the question of road fishing. People in that district were forbidden to fish from boats until July 1, but the law said nothing about fishing from the banks of the streams. He urged all fishing be prohibited until July 7.

Hon. George Challies, Minister of Game and Fisheries, said serious and sympathetic consideration would be given the anglers request.

Spawning Seasons

The Ontario Federation presented a brief urging a Government appropriation to carry out a thorough investigation of the various spawning seasons and closure of maskinonge waters if re-stocking is undertaken. It was also urged there be artificial propagation of maskinonge in the southern part of the province and appointment of a special biologist to study this problem.

George Corson, Toronto, declared Americans were not coming here solely to drink whiskey but wanted something else. He had lived in every state in the United States. The Muskoka area was a large game area rather than a farming section, he said, and there should be more attention paid to this fact.

City and District News

COLDER WEATHER AGAIN ON WAY

The snow imps sitting on polar ice caps indulged in another quiet chuckle this morning at the puzzled expressions of local residents. But their glee mounted mightily when they pictured the misery of official weathermen of the country who faced the onerous task, and attempted with the aid of assorted instruments to keep up with the forecasts of the weather king's latest offerings. But they, as well as humble John Citizen, with his buttoned up overcoat and heavy muffler, found themselves up an alley. What is coming next.

Well, here's the latest report from the weather front. It will be milder on Wednesday with occasional snow flurries. But the mild spell will be short lived. It will be colder on Thursday. It may be somewhat colder, very much colder, or the weather may fall into that apt category "decidedly colder."

Some time early this morning thermometers plunked again to a monotonously low level. It reached just 14 below for the lowest point. But the drop in temperature was accompanied by a clammy heavy vapor in the air that numbed with its rawness. Highest point reached was 16 above today.

FIREPLACE DAMAGED BY BRISK BLAZE

An overheated base in a fireplace at the home of Mrs. Edith K. Hyman, 208 East Bridge Street was blamed by firemen today for a threatening blaze which occurred between the floors of the home in the room at 10.30 o'clock last evening. Firemen responding to the alarm found it necessary to attack the fireplace with axes and other tools and tear away large sections of the brickwork before the blaze could be successfully combatted. Damage to the single room was fairly extensive.

ARRAIGNED ON THEFT CHARGE

Stirling Youth Remanded by Magistrate For 8 Days

Charged with the theft of approximately 1,200 pounds of butter from his employers, an employee of the Stirling Creamery was taken into custody by the Provincial Police on Tuesday afternoon. The young man was arraigned before Magistrate Mikel, his case being enlarged for eight days.

The arrest of the youth followed an investigation into the alleged loss of butter reported by Mr. West, the proprietor of the Stirling Creamery. The youth charged was employed as a driver and salesman for the company and is alleged by the police to have made false entries periodically. The butter has been reported missing for the past four months.

A further investigation is being carried on by the Provincial Police during the time of enlargement of the case.

TRANSPORT BREAKS HYDRO ELECTRIC POLE

Accident Happens Five Miles East of The City

Crashing into a large hydro electric pole, a Smith Transport of Toronto broke the pole off, close to the ground, and badly damaged the truck about 6 a.m. this morning some five miles east of Belleville on Highway No. 2. The transport was proceeding westward previous to the accident and left the snow-covered road at a point opposite the school house just east of the Point Anne railway crossing. The large transport crashed into the pole, snapping it off at the base. The broken pole hit the rear of the transport platform damaging it to some extent. A large transformer placed at the top of the pole was shaken from its moorings, crashing to the ground, just missing the driver's cab by inches. The Motorcycle Patrol of the Provincial Police investigated.

WHITE GLOVES GIVEN JUDGE

No Criminal Actions at Sitting of Supreme Court

Honorable Mr. Justice Armour was presented with the traditionary pair of white gloves at the opening of the Spring Assizes at the County Court House yesterday. The pure white gloves were symbolic to the non-appearance of criminal cases of the present docket before His Lordship.

Five cases, two jury and three non-jury, were entered for trial. Due to the absence of criminal cases the grand jury, that had been summoned, was cancelled by Sheriff Stokes. Forty-eight petty jurymen were present when court opened.

The first case on the docket, an action for damages of Lewis vs. Duralith, saw an application for a motion of enlargement applied for by the solicitors of the defendants, owing to the absence of a material witness, leaving the Yanover vs. Bender case the only jury case listed. The case is an action following alleged malicious prosecution of the plaintiff, Harry Yanover, in the Toronto courts, when the plaintiff was charged with the theft of $600.00 worth of furs.

ADVERTISING OF PRICES BY THE OPTOMETRISTS

Interesting Decision of Courts in Regard to Price Advertising

Mr. J. A. McFee, local member of the Provincial Board of Examiners in Optometry, recently returned from Toronto, where he attended a four-day session of the Board, the principal business being the consideration of the cases of a number of "price advertisers," who appeared before the Board as the result of a court judgment sustaining on appeal a previous judgment of another court, in which convictions were registered against a firm doing business in Toronto for "false and misleading advertising in regard to the sale of spectacles and prices thereoff". Mr. McFee interrogated on the matter, said that "those who appeared before the Board, were optometrists, licensed practitioners, some of them proprietors, others employees of a Chicago firm with many branches, who had their certificates of registration revoked by the Board last March on charges of fraud, misrepresentation by advertising prices of glasses, and illegal practises in connection with such advertising. These members, through able counsel, appealed to the Supreme Court of Ontario against the findings of the Board.

"Hon. Mr. Justice Kingstone, after long deliberation, just recently delivered his judgment confirming the Board's action, upholding its powers under the Optometry Act, and applied some scathing remarks as to the practises resorted to by the convicted men; at the same time recommending that in view of the circumstances, the Board might regrant some of the licenses after a short suspension," said Mr. McFee.

"This suggestion of the Judge of leniency was considered by the Board," said Mr. McFee, "and in reluctance to deprive men of the right to continue in practice, and in spirit of willingness to assist good intentions the Board made some regrants, and without suspension, upon receiving bonds of agreement to conduct themselves in fairness to the public and to their fellow practitioners."

Queried as to why the many others, not under charge, were not also summoned, Mr. McFee said:

"They also having indulged in "price advertising", some in ignorance during the period of considering the appeal, were called to be admonished by the Board's counsel, Mr. Gordon Waldron, K.C., as to the definite interpretation of the several phases of the Act, and the judgment recently rendered by Mr. Justice Kingstone."

Asked if it is illegal for an optometrist to advertise glasses at a price with no charge for professional services, Mr. McFee said:

"Yes, undoubtedly, such advertising deprives the public of fair treatment, and undermines a profession."

From the proceedings as outlined by Mr. McFee and duly reported in the press it was learned that there have always been and will continue to be stores where glasses of a kind may be merchandised at reasonable prices, which businesses are not in any way affected by the Optometry Act which seeks only to regulate the practise of professional Optometry.

Plaintiffs in Divorce Cases are Awarded Nisi Decrees at Local Spring Assizes

Robert Oliphant of Toronto Granted Nisi Decree By Justice Armour

EVIDENCE TAKEN

Mrs. Edith Greenis Wins Suit Against Husband, Henry Greenis

Nisi decrees were today granted Robert Oliphant, butcher, of Toronto, formerly of Belleville, in his divorce proceedings against his wife, Helen Oliphant, and also to Edith Greenis of Cobourg against her husband, Henry Greenis, in the spring assizes before Mr. Justice Armour here today. The decrees do not become absolute for six months.

The Oliphant suit was the first to be heard. The defendant did not appear and the co-respondent was not known by name. According to the testimony of a witness he is thought to have lived in Ottawa, the witness testifying that defendant had told him of the trouble.

After the testimony by Walter Whiteman, 53 Moira street west, that he had served notice at Brockville on Mrs. Oliphant of the divorce action on October 3 last, Mr. B. C. Donnan, K.C., who was counsel for the plaintiff, called Robert Oliphant, who swore that he was the husband of the defendant, Helen Oliphant, and that he was married at Belleville November 26, 1914 and that there was one child of the marriage, Clifford Robert Oliphant, born January 3, 1918, at the Belleville General Hospital. Certificates of marriage and the birth were produced.

The plaintiff said that the child was in Belleville in the care of the plaintiff's mother.

Asked how long he had control of the child, he said "for nine years".

Separated in 1924.

He went on to state that he had not seen his wife for nine years since last fall.

"Did you separate from her?" asked Mr. Donnan.

"Yes." He said in answer to another question that there had been a separation agreement signed in November, 1924.

"Have you seen your wife since?"

"Have never seen her."

The grounds on which he asked divorce were alleged to have taken place in July 1927. He had not seen his wife, witness said.

Asked why he had delayed so long in his application, Mr. Oliphant explained that he had given up business for the sake of his nerves on the advice of a doctor and had come here and that he did not know of the circumstances alleged until last autumn.

"Is there any collusion between your wife and you?" he was asked. The answer was negative as was also that to the question of connivance.

"Have you had any communication with her or through any other persons?"

"No."

Petition to Senate.

Mr. Oliphant explained that three years ago at Toronto he had instituted proceedings for divorce by petition to the senate, but as a main witness went away to the United States, (he understood) and did not return the proceedings were abandoned.

John A. Wilson who lives in Prince Edward County, near Rednersville and who lived at Belleville in 1927 was called by Mr. Donnan in support of the suit. Mr. Wilson testified that he and his wife had been neighbors of the Oliphants and knew them well for years. On July 8th, 1927, he was in Brockville on business and going into a restaurant he met Mrs. Oliphant. She told him she would like if he would drive her to Belleville as she wanted to come up and he agreed. On the way to Belleville she started to cry and said that she had had some trouble she hated to mention to him. He asked her to explain and she said that she thought she was in trouble, and said that was her reason in getting him to bring her up in the hope that Mrs. Wilson would allow her to have a doctor examine her at her home. The defendant said the trouble had taken place in Ottawa where she was learning the beauty parlor trade and she gave the name of a man there, but witness could not recall his name. She said she had been keeping company with him for some time. After their arrival at the Wilson's, Mrs. Wilson had Dr. Taft come to the house. That was the only time Dr. Taft had been called there, witness said.

On the following Monday the defendant returned to Brockville, the witness swore, he driving her back to that city. On the way down she told him, he said, she could not help what the doctor said, but she knew by her own feelings otherwise. She told Wilson, he said, that she was going to get in touch with the man at Ottawa and if he did not help she would get rid of him, said Wilson.

Evidence As to Words.

Some months later the witness happened to meet the woman again and she told him that what she thought had been right and that she had had treatment.

Mr. Oliphant recalled, stated that he did not know the alleged co-respondent.

Dr. Taft's testimony had been taken at Hamilton by an examiner, it being to the effect that from his examination of the woman he saw at the Wilson home, he was not positive as to her condition. Dr. Taft thought that it was in 1927 in the spring or summer as he had moved from the district about that time. As to her name he could not recall whether it was mentioned at the time he was called. He had never attended before this to examine any woman at this house, he said, in his testimony.

The decree will not become absolute for six months.

Greenis vs Greenis

In the Greenis divorce suit, Mrs. Edith Greenis, plaintiff, living at Cobourg, testified that she had married Henry Greenis in Toronto, where he was a lineman in the employ of a telephone company. She identified a photograph produced as that of her husband. It was five years since she had lived with him and a separation agreement was signed on February 2, 1931. She testified that she had not lived with him nor spoken to him since that time. She said there was no collusion in proceedings nor was there connivance.

The name of the co-respondent in this case was given as Ivy Earl. She did not appear nor did Greenis to defend the suit.

Miss Wood, adjutant of the Salvation Army and police matron at Peterborough, swore that she knew both Henry Greenis and Ivy Earl. An investigation was begun last October into a statement that Greenis was living with Ivy Earl. When questioned witness said that the woman admitted a condition, naming Greenis. Children in the house were taken and made wards of the Children's Aid Society. Miss Wood further said that the couple, it was found, had been living at various addresses.

Investigations

When Ivy Earl made application for a mother's allowance under the Mother's Allowance Commission, in July 1933, Miss Cecilia Folkards, investigator of the commission, was sent to look into the case. She learned that where the widow was reported to be living, were a couple of persons. Investigation in October was featured by a sudden entry into the house, where the Earl woman and Greenis were found.

Questioned by Miss Folkard, the co-respondent, according to Miss Folkard's evidence made a statement as to the illegitimacy of children. No allowance was recommended under these conditions.

J. P. B. Belford, sheriff told of service on Henry Greenis and the alleged co-respondent.

The nisi decree was signed on the usual grounds.

Mr. A. J. Skeans represented the plaintiff.

ASKS CO-OPERATION IN REFORESTATION

Hon. Wm. Finlayson is Speaker at Horticultural Convention

At the evening session of the Ontario Horticultural Association Convention, February 15th, a strong plea was made by Hon. Mr. Finlayson, Minister of Lands and Forests of the province of Ontario, who was the guest speaker of the evening, to urge before the rural communities to endeavour to do all the reforestation possible. Many tracts of land that are useless for any other purpose can in years to come be made a regular producer of wealth.

Mr. Finlayson emphasised the fact that no tract of land should have been entirely cleared, only the mature timber, which would have left these timbered areas in a permanent producing state. But we have to make the best of a serious error, and the Ontario Government are prepared to distribute up to 3,500 trees or more in one year, to any one farmer or owner of land.

Also that on every farm there are tracts of land, perhaps only a few acres in some cases, which can be planted, and which will be a producer of wealth for the next generation. Surely the present older generation are not so short-sighted or selfish that they will not take advantage of this opportunity and rectify a great mistake. In Sweden no man can cut from a bush on his own property until an expert has marked the mature timber for cutting, thus leaving a perpetual forest, for trees have to be planted where mature timber is cut.

There are young trees available for planting on every kind of land, and they are free for all reforestation work, communicate with the Reforestation Bureau, Parliament Buildings, Toronto.
